There is one final point that needs to be made. The last reason we should understand why it is morally acceptable for us to participate in the problems of this area and their solutions is that the strength of the United States is inextricably and inevitably involved with the defense of freedom in our time. When we protect our own national security, we are, in fact, engaging in a morally acceptable enterprise.

There is one more thing that I truly believe is the most important point of all, a point that everyone needs to understand again because we have lost the sense of it: The defense of a civilized conception of the American national interest is not only morally acceptable, it is, in our time, a moral imperative.

The challenge is whether we will be true to our heritage, our identity, ourselves. It is whether we, in our policies toward Central America, will be the party of freedom. And I think the answer to that question must be "yes."

Mr. SYMMS. Finally, Mr. President, I ran across a short article in the December issue of Commentary magazine which so well explained the political situation in El Salvador that I would like to make it more easily available to my colleagues. This article, by Max Singer of the Hudson Institute, goes into some detail about the two-counterrevolutionary situation I discussed earlier. I sincerely commend it to my colleagues, and to their constituents, as the beginning of wisdom if we are ever to make sense of El Salvador.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Commentary, December 1981]

CAN EL SALVADOR BE SAVED?

(By Max Singer)

In countries where the mass of people have been exploited and oppressed for generations, and have no possibility of peacefully securing their freedom or decent treatment, violent revolution often seems to be the only way to produce the necessary change. Many Americans believe that under such circumstances revolution is required, or justifiable, or at the least understandable—and in any case may be inevitable.

Yet anyone with a decent respect for the lessons of human experience must also recognize that revolutions can be violent and painful. Where the regime collapses easily, as in Cuba in 1959, the scars of battle may be only slight. But it is just as likely that the human costs will be immense, and their limits are impossible to predict. In Lebanon 80,000 people (out of a population of three million) died in a year and a half of civil war. In El Salvador, with a population of less than five million, already over 20,000 have died since January 1980. And the number of dead is only one measure of the human tragedy, which often echoes for generations.

The conclusion many people will draw from these considerations is that violent revolution can be justified only with the greatest reluctance, in dire circumstances, after peaceful efforts have been exhausted and no reasonable alternative is available. The argument then centers on how these criteria are to be applied in particular cases.

In September 1979, the case for violent revolution in El Salvador seemed strong. A small number of families had ruled the country for generations, amassed great wealth, and kept most of the people in abject poverty. The army suppressed dissent with bloody force. Less than fifty years ago, 10,000 peasants were slaughtered in a few days for trying to bring about change. Elections did not work; the winner of the 1972 election, Napoleón Duarte, had not been allowed to take power but had been tortured and forced into exile.

Then, suddenly, on October 15, 1979, the revolution came. It came from a surprising source, the middle levels of the officer corps of the army, led by Colonels Garcia, Gutierrez, Majano, and a few others. They deposed the ruling class. They threw out many officers, who had run the army to serve the former ruling class. And they formed a civilian government with a wide spectrum of political respresentatives including Guillermo Ungo, head of the 600-man Social Democratic party, and several Communists. Their platform was land reform, nationalization of the banks (so that the new small landowners could get the necessary credit), and political democracy. They committed themselves to a new constitution, to be written by a freely elected convention.

Although it had the form of a coup, this was a real revolution: it represented the coming to power of a new class with sharply different policies. But it was a moderate and almost bloodless revolution. The revolutionaries did not begin to set up a totalitarian apparatus or to organize and indoctrinate youth. They did not proclaim themselves part of a world revolutionary movement to fight oppressors or imperialists everywhere. They did not try to destroy or capture the social structure of the society, the church, the workers and peasants, or the unions. They did not conduct a bloody program of retribution for past crimes. But they did commit themselves to a distinct new policy of reform and they did completely exclude from power the great bulk of the former ruling class—the so-called "14 families."

What happened in the six months following this quick and successful moderate revolution, as the new government—the civilian part of which was led after January 1980 by Napoleón Duarte, head of the Christian Democratic party—enacted and began to implement the land reform and bank nationalization program?

The old ruling class lacked the ability to fight back on a large scale. Instead it went into exile, mostly in Miami, and from there organized death squads and assassination teams to kill Christian Democrats, union leaders, businessmen, and others supporting the government and implementing land reform. It also tried unsuccessfully to organize military coups against the revolutionary government; three such attempts failed.

At the same time, representatives of a number of groups met in Havana, and with Castro's help agreed on a unified military organization to fight the revolutionary government—from the Left. To implement their program they arranged for a flow of weapons and supplies into El Salvador from or through or with the help of Cuba, Nicaragua, the PLO, Algeria, Vietnam, Ethiopia, Libya, North Korea, and Mexico. They also arranged for thousands of young Salvadorans to be smuggled out of the country for military training and indoctrination in Nicaragua, Cuba, and other countries; when these young people returned home, they engaged in sabotage and murder. Finally, they started broad political and propaganda activities to gain international support. Cuba was able to secure Mexico's help in many ways. For example, Mexico promised Cuba that it would carry out large-scale military maneuvers near Guatemala in January 1981, so that the Guatemalan army would be unable to intervene to help save the new El Salvador government from the guerrillas' "final offensive" (which, however, failed for several reasons, including lack of popular support).

Thus for the last two years El Salvador has been torn apart by two counterrevolutions, or phony revolutions, trying to gain power and reverse the actions of the revolutionary group that has ruled since October 1979: one counterrevolution from the extreme Right, made up of the former ruling class, and one from the extreme Left, controlled and led by violent fanatics with the support of most of the enemies of the U.S. from all over the world. Both counterrevolutions receive some support from less extreme and even centrist individuals and groups.

The extreme Left has organized a political front, the FDR, which includes such democratic forces as the Social Democratic party led by Guillermo Ungo (who broke with the Duarte government), a small splinter group of the Christian Democrats, and a number of others; the FDR reports to a single military command known as the FMLN/DRU. The Left has also been able to get political and financial help from some democratic and church groups around the world (including help in smuggling guns).

As for the extreme Right, it has sympathizers within the revolutionary government's armed forces, especially the Treasury Police and the National Guard. It also has foreign support, in Guatemala and even in the U.S., and perhaps elsewhere, from individuals and groups opposed to land reform and other aspects of the economic program. Because the extreme Right believes it necessary to use more bloody repression against those suspected of helping or sympathizing with the Left insurrection, it gains most whenever it seems that the revolutionary government and its external allies are not succeeding in defeating that insurrection.

The extreme Right bases its case against the government on two arguments. One concerns economic policy—land reform, nationalization, and other economic reforms, which the Right considers to be destroying the country's economy. Many Americans might well share some of this disagreement with the government's economics. But are these disagreements great enough to justify murderous attacks on the government, without first trying peaceful means to change the policies? Obviously not.

The second argument of the extreme Right is that only it, with the bloody measures it advocates, can successfully defeat the effort of the extreme Left to impose totalitarian oppression on the people of El Salvador. Here again one can agree that a victory of the extreme Left would indeed bring horrible results but still have ample grounds to believe that the present revolutionary government, which is preferred over the insurrectionary groups by the Church, the peasants' and workers' unions, the business community, and other centrists, is better able to defeat the FMLN/DRU than the extreme Right would be.

What is the justification of the extreme Left for a violent counterrevolution? It argues that throwing out right-wing officers and the old ruling class has not brought about a real change in El Salvador because the army is still in power. It claims that the civilian government is a sham because it cannot control elements of the security forces committing atrocities against the people. It says that the economic reforms do not go far enough; most of the peasants ostensibly given ownership of the land have not yet received their formal title documents, and are subject to pressure by the former landowners who may be helped by local police or militia. It charges that the elections scheduled for next year will not be fair, or that the army will not allow the winners to take power in any case. It asserts that it represents the real will of the people; the fact that the people have failed to respond to repeated calls for general strikes and for other shows of support for the Left only means they have been coerced and are afraid to express their opinions.

It is difficult for an outsider to judge these claims completely. Some of them, if true, would possibly be substantial enough to justify violent action. But they fail absolutely and utterly because the violent counterrevolution of the Left began before the revolution was three months old. No one can justify starting a brutal and destructive war, resulting in thousands and thousands of deaths, and increasing the possibility of an eventual victory by the extreme Right, on the suspicion of what the revolutionary junta might do despite its promises. A minimum respect for human life would have given the new revolutionary government at least six months to see whether it could deliver on its promises of reform and democracy.

The extreme Left is correct that supporters of the government have committed atrocities, although probably fewer than the government's two enemies on the extreme Left and the extreme Right. But the government's supporters would not be committing atrocities if there were no violent insurrection against the government. If the extreme Left counterrevolution cannot be justified by substantial grievances, or by a failure to gain redress through peaceful means and/or popular support, then it too bears responsibility for the reaction to its violent attack on the government—even that part of the reaction that is illegal and unjustified. (This principle is illustrated in the common-law rule that even an unarmed burglar is guilty of murder if the owner of the house he is stealing from accidentally and illegally kills an innocent bystander in responding to the burglary.) The Left's moral responsibility for the government's atrocities is made even stronger by the fact that a major part of the counterrevolutionary strategy is to tempt to force the government to commit atrocities.

The counterrevolution from the extreme Left also bears a good deal of the responsibility for the atrocities committed by its counterparts on the far Right. If there were no violent insurrection by the FMLN/DRU, the revolutionary government would have less trouble suppressing the violent Right. The main reason the government is not able to deal more effectively with the latter is that it is also under attack by the FMLN/DRU; this reduces its resources and renders it less free to take action against people and groups whose help it may need in the fight against the FMLN/DRU.

Determining what "the people" think or want in a foreign country torn by violence is very difficult, conceptually as well as factually. Undoubtedly most of the people want, most of all, peace. Undoubtedly, too, many are deeply skeptical of promises of reform, free elections, a new and different army. But it does seem clear that a major shift of opinion in favor of the revolutionary government took place when it gave 160,000 peasant families ownership of the land they had been tilling, and took all the 250 large estates away from their former owners. It is likely that the families and friends of victims of atrocities by government supporters have in many cases been turned against the government. Still, many in El Salvador understand that the real responsibility lies with the group that—without reasonable cause—has plunged the country into counterrevolutionary war, and that the best hope for peace is to turn a united face against it.

On September 15, 1981, Archbishop Rivera y Damas said explicitly that only a small percent of the people of El Salvador support the FMLN/DRU. Virtually all of the local Church hierarchy and parish priests reject the counterrevolution. (The enthusiasm of some parish priests and even of some bishops for "liberation theology" would not seem to extend to the "liberators" of the FMLN/DRU.) Even most of the radical priests want to give the current revolutionary government a chance to complete its programs and deliver on its promises. The other mass organization, the peasants' union, rejects the insurrection of the extreme Left, as do most of the free labor unions and almost all of the political, social, and business organizations of the country.

Three times the FMLN/DRU called for a general strike without a substantial response, although there is reason to believe that the people of El Salvador can make their opinions known when they truly oppose a government. Before the colonel's revolution, for instance, crowds of over 100,000 Salvadorans marched to protest against their government. But after the land reform of March-April all attempts by the extreme Left to organize a demonstration failed. This fall 100,000 Salvadorans filled the stadium to support the government.

Thus we can say with some firmness—although perhaps preserving a bit of uncertainty about the real division of opinion within the mass of the people[1]—that in El Salvador a relatively popular, moderate revolution is under violent attack by two small groups, one on the Left and one on the Right, neither of which has any substantial claim to sympathy or support. Both, in effect, are ideological gangster groups, destroying the peace of the country by virtue of their ability to kill people and wreck property, without just cause or popular support. El Salvador is not deeply divided; it is under assault by small, violent, and vicious extremist fringes.

II

Why is there so much international support for the FMLN/DRU if it is really just a group of ideological gangsters? First, there are those nations—Cuba, Nicaragua, North Korea, Vietnam, Libya, and Ethiopia—that will support any enemy of the U.S. Every one of these countries is "Not Free," according to the long-term system of ratings contained in Freedom House's Survey of Freedom. Every one of them endorsed the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. On the other hand, every free country in Latin America (Costa Rica, Jamaica, Colombia, Venezuela, Peru, and Ecuador) supports the revolutionary government to some degree.

The more difficult case is Mexico (rated as "Partly Free" in the Freedom House Survey). Mexico has recently strengthened its relationship with Cuba. It supported the non-democratic part of the coalition that defeated Somoza in Nicaragua, as well as the FMLN/DRU in El Salvador. It seems, in effect, to be following a policy of joining with its potential enemies in order to head off the possibility of being a target itself. The situation in Mexico, both politically and ideologically, is of course much more complicated than this, but there are reasons to doubt the objectivity and independence of Mexico's position.[2]

Then there is France, now headed by a Socialist president whose official adviser on Latin America is Régis Debray, the former associate of Ché Guevara. Officially France sees the Duarte government not as a revolutionary but as a fascist regime. Why? In deciding how much weight to give to the French interpretation, the first thing to bear in mind is that the French have always been profoundly uninterested in, not to say contemptuous of, the tiny "banana republics" of Central America. No serious French politician has taken the time to investigate the facts or to address the merits of any issue concerning these small and uninfluential countries. Questions about them have always been dealt with politically, that is, with the French position being determined by considerations having everything to do with French interests and internal debates and little if anything to do with the local facts. In French discussion, especially among the Socialists, Central American issues have also offered a safe arena for attacking the U.S. and demonstrating one's radical credentials. Many French Socialists have a well developed—but not recently examined—perspective on Central America according to which it is an economically stagnant region, with authoritarian governments installed and controlled by the U.S., all of whose problems are caused by Yankee exploitation and domination.

Support for the FMLN/DRU also comes from the Socialist International and its major European members. Until about ten years ago the members of the Socialist International refused to support non-democratic Socialist parties or regimes. But that principle is no longer accepted. They now work with Castro; they met recently in Grenada after that tiny country endorsed the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, and admitted to membership Grenada's ruling party—despite its repressive behavior.

Many European Socialist leaders share the French attitude to Central America. Within their staffs and party organizations there commonly runs a division between an older moderate leadership and a growing group of younger radicals committed to some form of Marxist-Leninist or "Third World" ideology. The leaders deal with their internal problems by giving the radicals the "less important" jobs, including preparing all papers and policy guidance on Central America. The European radicals have been helped in selling their view by the position of Mexico, which, as the largest "socialist" force in the region, is paid deference on Central American issues (even though the Mexican PRI is not a member of the Socialist International).

Finally, there is the effective support for the FMLN/DRU and its false version of the facts that comes from the Western media and from some intellectuals. Not much need be said about this, by now predictable response. In part, it rests on a simple failure to recognize what is happening in El Salvador. Delusions of this kind by now have a long history. After all, Mao was once widely reported to be an "agrarian reformer" and not a "real Communist"; Castro's totalitarian intentions were rarely acknowledged while he was coming to power and consolidating his regime; and the fact that North Vietnam controlled the forces attacking the government of South Vietnam was not generally accepted until after 600 North Vietnamese tanks and 15 divisions marched into South Vietnam in 1975 and replaced the government there. As these examples suggest—and to them may be added the failure of many in the 1930's to acknowledge the real nature of Hitler's designs in Austria and Czechoslovakia—there seems to be a special blindness in democracies to the way in which totalitarian aggressors work through front organizations within victim countries. The fact that local people do not always fully understand their situation also makes it easier for foreign observers to miss this point.

III

The fact that the two counterrevolutionary groups attacking the government have no moral standing does not answer the question of how the United States should respond to them.

Before turning to questions of basic stragety there are two practical issues we need to face. One has been at the center of discussion, the other has been largely ignored. They are: how to prevent atrocities against the Salvadoran people, and how to improve the effectiveness of the Salvadoran military and police. There is a relation between the two questions.

---

[1] In assessing the state of political opinion within El Salvador, two special circumstances should be kept in mind. First, it is still relatively dangerous to speak out because both the extreme Left and the extreme Right routinely inflict violent retribution on people who speak in ways they do not like. Second, because of the long history of political violence and brutality on both sides, the idea that there may be a real political Center in the country is very hard for many people to accept. For a campesino, say, and a colonel to realize that they are on the same side requires overcoming a mountain of habit and suspicion. Still, it is possible to summarize the state of political opinion in El Salvador thus: although many feel that, until the planned free elections are carried out, the government is not a legitimate one, and many see President Duarte as a partisan leader rather than as a true national figure representing the whole Center, the great majority nevertheless support the junta against its enemies. Only a small portion of the population supports or desires the victory of either of the violent extremes.

[2] See Carlos Rangel's "Mexico and Other Dominoes" in the June 1981 COMMENTARY.

Americans tend to ignore the "technical" issues of police or military tactics and other "non-humanistic" aspects of the manipulation of violence and crude power. Unfortunately such "technical details" sometimes mean the difference between victory and defeat, between totalitarian control and relative freedom.

The job of defeating guerrilla forces of the kind attacking El Salvador requires a combination of police and military measures. The police measures are primary. The job of the police is to find out who are the criminals by penetrating conspiracies and learning about clandestine channels of supply and intelligence. The military's first job is to protect the police against armed attack. It must also fight against the insurrectionary force when the latter has been located by police/intelligence efforts.

Most of the police task is accomplished by patient routine measures, such as having good file systems, being known and respected and available so citizens can report what they see, being able to protect those who help, and being organized so that the information supplied is effectively integrated with other information. Systematic use of undercover agents, informers, and defectors is also a key police function that can increase the effectiveness of anti-guerrilla efforts. On the basis of police/intelligence programs and good strategy the military can then use ambush tactics with great effectiveness, incurring few if any civilian or military casualties.

None of this is terribly difficult or esoteric, but it must be learned. If the Salvadoran security forces do not know the easy and effective way to fight, they will fight in other ways. The difference is like night and day. And there is no reason to assume that routine military training can provide the methods and ideas that are needed. In fact, it is unusual for military forces to give sufficient weight and respect to police measures, which often seem like a strange and foreign sideline.

As for the military itself, training efforts to increase its effectiveness are grossly inadequate. Salvadoran soldiers receive less training than do many of the young boys trained abroad to fight for the FMLN/DRU. The army has fewer noncommissioned officers than does the enemy. Here relatively minor efforts can make an immense difference. But such efforts need to be undertaken before the FMLN/DRU can build up its forces further and before Nicaragua completes the expansion of its army, which will make that country the overwhelmingly dominant military force in Central America.

There is one other necessary arena for action. The relatively free flow of men and material into El Salvador to support the counterrevolutions must be reduced. The movement of new supplies, fresh personnel, and outside leaders must be made much more problematic, unreliable, and costly. Doing this involves political, military, police, and intelligence measures. Right now the government forces are failing.

When it comes to the general strategy the United States should be following in El Salvador, one popular idea has been to focus on negotiations between the revolutionary government and the FMLN/DRU. Some say negotiations are the only possible solution. Fine: whenever there is fighting, negotiations should be considered. But this means more than saying negotiations are a good idea; it means finding a framework for negotiations that is based on realities.

In thinking about negotiating with the FMLN/DRU and its political front, however, a conflict immediately arises. Some members of the front do not want anything substantially different from what the government is already doing, but they are not convinced that the government means what it says. Negotiations to resolve these doubts can continue to be a goal of the government—indeed, President Duarte has continually asserted his government's willingness to negotiate with Ungo and the other democratic elements that are now serving the FMLN/DRU.

But a basic problem in negotiating with Ungo and the others is that they are not really in control of their own actions. They have agreed to serve as "another soldier in the revolution." All their military force, including the arrangements for their personal safety, is in the hands of the FMLN/DRU.

Another problem is that success in these negotiations would not end the war. If Ungo, all of the non-Communist, and even some of the Communist elements of the counterrevolution came to an agreement with the government, the fighting would not so much as slow down. After all, when these elements were in the government in 1979, the violence increased. Nor would such a negotiating success necessarily add substantially to the government's popular support in the country, because none of the political groups helping the FMLN/DRU has mass allegiance. The gain would be primarily in terms of external image-potentially valuable, but not enough to justify big risks.

One requirement for any kind of success in El Salvador, often overlooked in American discussions, is the continuing confidence of the officer corps that it will not be sold out by the politicians. The fact that the corps has thrown out much of its right wing and stated it will abide by the results of elections does not mean that it is not concerned to protect itself and its view of the country's needs. Its unity and confidence must be the bedrock on which all political and military measures are built. If negotiations to reassure Ungo or to improve El Salvador's image abroad are allowed to threaten the confidence of the army, the results may be disastrous.

In Washington one sometimes hears that Duarte wants to stop the violence but that he needs help to overcome resistance in the army. Partly on the basis of this argument, some have urged that the U.S. make its aid to El Salvador conditional on steps being taken toward preventing and punishing atrocities. This is a double error. First, there is no reason to believe that the army leaders are any less eager than President Duarte to deal with atrocities. Second, as a means of influencing government behavior, threats to cut off aid could well backfire. Our political process is not sufficiently fine-tuned to deliver subtle messages of this kind, nor can we control what others will see as a necessary response to a deadly challenge.

There is some speculation in the U.S. that the FMLN/DRU might be interested in arrangements to insure that free elections would be held and allowed to take effect, and that their safety and right to campaign peacefully would be guaranteed. But the FMLN/DRU has never said anything like that. Real negotiations for those purposes would be highly desirable, so long as they did not suggest to the army that it would be sold out without elections. Unfortunately there is no basis for believing that the FMLN/DRU has any interest in such negotiations. Why, indeed, would it want to accept the result of free elections? It represents a small percentage of the population. Its ideology does not require—or even advocate—free elections. The FMLN/DRU has fought for years, and believes in what it is fighting for. It also believes that sooner or later it will win. It is not interested in settling for a nice reformist, democratic, free El Salvador, with land-owning farmers and peace and prosperity. It wants a Cuba (or a Kampuchea), an "anti-imperialist" country allied with Castro and Nicaragua against the United States.

Are there any non-military measures that might work? There are some. First, there is reason to believe that if the European democracies and the Socialist parties joined the Latin democracies and the Christian Democratic parties and the free trade unions and the Catholic Church in their support of the revolutionary government, and condemned the violent counterrevolutions, the Ungo and most of the other democratic elements might be convinced to stop supporting the FMLN/DRU. This would deprive the FMLN/DRU of its hope of dislodging the U.S. It would reassure that the army and thus weaken right-wing elements in the security forces, enabling the government in turn to bring security under better control and perhaps completely put down the counterrevolution of the extreme Right.

The same goal could be approached simultaneously from the opposite direction as well. The U.S. could crack down on the use of U.S. territory by the extreme Right counterrevolutionaries, and perhaps help the Salvadoran government to take similar measures to this end. Clearer action in this direction might help to convince Ungo and others in El Salvador, and domestic foreign supporters of the insurrection, to swing toward the revolutionary government.

Success in these matters would not necessarily end the fighting. The FMLN/DRU, with support from Cuba, North Korea, the Soviet Union, can keep on without any help from the Socialist International or France or even Mexico. One way or another, it is likely to be able to recruit thousands of teen age Salvadorans a year to be trained and indoctrinated in Cuba or elsewhere. If necessary it will be able to use Nicaraguans or Cubans. Whether it will choose to do so depends on international politics. Therefore, uniting the democracies in support of the Salvadoran revolutionary government would be very useful even if it did not end the fighting right away.

IV

When societies are faced with severe challenges—external or internal—their survival often depends on whether they continue to quarrel about lesser issues or recognize the crisis, face up to the pain of having to choose one of only two or three alternatives, and commit their resources to supporting that choice.

Always in these situations everything appears confused and complex. Each alternative is fuzzy, uncertain, perhaps capable of being changed for better or worse. Sophisticated analysts can prove that the alternatives are not so stark, and that in-between results are possible. But those groups in society who use their energies to modify details, or who keep out of a conflict because no side is good enough to justify real support, lose their vote. They have no effect. The choice is then made by those who concentrate on victory. If most of the society throws away its vote, a very small but determined segment can decide the result.

El Salvador is today faced with a conflict among three forces, one of which will win and destroy the others and control the country, perhaps for many years. Two of the three alternatives would bring terrible results for the people of El Salvador right away—many thousands of deaths, a police state, scores of thousands of refugees. The third alternative, a victory for the revolutionary junta and whoever wins the electoral process initiated by the junta, would put El Salvador on the road toward democracy and economic development. That road would have many twists and turns. Periods of less democratic government and periods of costly economic policies would not be unlikely. Whether El Salvador did well would depend on many factors. But the alternatives are very much worse.

No one should underestimate the difficulty of this choice for the Salvadorans themselves, who experience daily the fear, defenselessness, and anger that are the undercurrents of life in their country. For many, saying what one believes in may mean having to form an alliance with the murderers and torturers of one's own family and friends. In this respect as in so many others, the fanatics who brought war on El Salvador have much to answer for. Yet pretending that one does not have to make the grim choice means helping one's enemies.

The ability of the moderate revolution in El Salvador to survive the deadly attacks on it from the extreme Left and the extreme Right depends on whether the Salvadoran people and leaders, and American and other democratic forces outside El Salvador, spend their energies trying to move the government a little bit Right or a little Left, or concentrate instead on helping the democratic alternative defeat its undemocratic enemies. If they fail, a brave move toward democracy will go down to bloody defeat by a band of gangsters whose drive for power will not be diverted or diffused.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message from the President of the United States was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Saunders, one of his secretaries.

SUMMARY REPORT OF THE DEPARTMFNT OF ENERGY SUNSET REVIEW—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 111

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with the accompanying report, which was referred to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources:

To the Congress of the United States:

Transmitted herewith is the Summary Report of the Department of Energy Sunset Review. A Program-by-Program Analysis which provides detailed background information is being transmitted at the same time by the Secretary of Energy. These two volumes together satisfy the requirements of Title X of the Department of Energy Organization Act (P.L. 95-91).

I have asked Secretary Edwards and his staff to be available to respond to any questions or comments you may have regarding the Department of Energy Sunset Report.

RONALD REAGAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 9, 1982.

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

At 2:30 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives delivered by Mr. Berry, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has agreed to the following concurrent resolution, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H. Con. Res. 268. Concurrent resolution providing for an adjournment of the House from February 10 to February 17, 1982, and an adjournment of the Senate from February 11 or February 12 to February 22, 1981.

At 4:08 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives delivered by Mr. Berry, announced that the House has passed the following joint resolution, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.J. Res. 389. Joint resolution making an urgent supplemental appropriation for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982, for the Department of Agriculture.

At 5:53 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives delivered by Mr. Gregory, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has agreed to the following concurrent resolution, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.J. Res. 392. Joint resolution making an urgent supplemental appropriation for the Department of Health and Human Services for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982.

At 6:41 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Mr. Gregory, announced that the House has passed the following joint resolution, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.J. Res. 391. Joint resolution making an urgent supplemental appropriation for the Department of Labor for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The joint resolution (H.J. Res. 392) making an urgent supplemental appropriation for the Department of Health and Human Services for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982, was read twice by title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS

The following communications were laid before the Senate, together with accompanying papers, reports, and documents, which were referred as indicated:

EC-2625. A communication from the Acting Assistant Secretary of Defense (Comptroller) transmitting, pursuant to law, certain contract award dates for February 15 to March 15, 1982; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-2626. A communication from the Acting Director of the Defense Security Assistance Agency transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on a foreign military sale to Greece; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-2627. A communication from the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Manpower, Reserve Affairs, and Logistics transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on the extent of commercial and industrial functions performed by private contractors; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-2628. A communication from the Chairman of the Board of Governors of the U.S. Postal Service transmitting, pursuant to law, the Annual Report of the Postmaster General for fiscal year 1981; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC-2629. A communication from the Acting Commissioner of the Immigration and Naturalization Service transmitting, pursuant to law, copies of orders suspending deportation of certain aliens; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EC-2630. A communication from the Chief Commissioner, U.S. Court of Claims, transmitting, pursuant to law, reports of the Trial Commissioner and the Review Panel in the matter of Innocent Victims of the Occupation of Wounded Knee, South Dakota v. United States, Cong. Ref. No. 4-76; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EC-2631. A communication from the Secretary of Defense transmitting, pursuant to law, the eighth annual report on force improvements and defense cooperation within NATO; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-2632. A communication from the Secretary of Defense transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report of the Department of Defense for fiscal year 1983; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-2633. A communication from the General Counsel of the Department of Defense transmitting, pursuant to law, copies of certain amendments to the Manual for Courts-Martial; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-2634. A communication from the Assistant Secretary of the Air Force for Research, Development, and Logistics transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on the conversion of various functions at different installations from in-house operation to commercial contract; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-2635. A communication from the Acting Director of the Defense Security Assistance Agency transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on a proposed foreign military sale to Saudi Arabia; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-2636. A communication from the President of the United States transmitting, pursuant to law, certification that the production of lethal binary chemical munitions is essential to the national interest; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-2637. A communication from the Comptroller General of the United States transmitting, pursuant to law, a report entitled "The Army's Multiple Launch Rocket System is Progressing Well and Merits Continued Support"; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-2638. A communication from the Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense transmitting, pursuant to law, a report for fiscal year 1982 on the North Atlantic Treaty Organization Acquisition and Cross-

Servicing Agreement; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-2639. A communication from the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Manpower, Reserve Affairs, and Logistics transmitting, pursuant to law, reuse studies for Craig Air Force Base, Selma, Alabama, declared excess to defense needs in 1977; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-2640. A communication from the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development transmitting, pursuant to law, a study of the relative risks of loss under certain insurance programs of the National Housing Act; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

EC-2641. A communication from the Acting Assistant Administrator of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, transmitting pursuant to law, notice of the withdrawal of certain rules promulgated by the Administration on July 8, 1981; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following executive reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. PERCY, from the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Frederic N. Andre, of Indiana, to be a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission for the term of 7 years from January 1, 1981;

James Daniel Theberge, of the District of Columbia, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Chile (together with additional views) (Ex. Rept. No. 97-46).

Contributions are to be reported for the period beginning on the first day of the fourth calendar year preceding the calendar year of the nomination and ending on the date of the nomination.

Nominee: James Daniel Theberge.
Post: Ambassador to Chile.
Contributions, amount, date, donee.
1. Self, $500, 1977, Hon. David Bowen.
2. Spouse, $500, 1980, George Bush.
3. Children and spouses, none.
4. Parents, none.
5. Grandparents, none.
6. Brothers and spouses:
$50, 1979, Constance Morella.
$50, 1980, Constance Morella.
$50, 1981, Constance Morella.
$50, 1980, Repub. Party of Md.
$100, 1980, Senator J. Garn.
$100, 1981, Ben Blackburn.
7. Sister and spouses, none.

(The above nominations from the Committee on Foreign Relations were reported with the recommendation that they be confirmed, subject to the nominees' commitment to respond to requests to appear and testify before any duly constituted committee of the Senate.)

By Mr. TOWER, from the Committee on Armed Services:

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, from the Committee on Armed Services, I report favorably the following nominations: In the Air Force Reserve there are 26 appointments to the grade of major general and below (list begins with Richard D. Anderegg), in the Air Force there are 56 appointments to the grade of brigadier general (list begins with Joseph A. Ahearn), Lt. Gen. Richard E. Cavazos, U.S. Army, to be general, in the Army Reserve and National Guard there are 29 appointments to the grade of major general and below (list begins with Anthony H. Conrad, Jr.), in the Navy there are 7 permanent promotions to the grade of commodore (list begins with Joseph S. Cassells), in the Navy there are 38 permanent promotions to the grade of commodore (list begins with Robert E. Klee), and Capt. William M. Narva, U.S. Navy, for permanent promotion to the grade of rear admiral. I ask that these names be placed on the Executive Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, in addition, in the Air Force there are 591 permanent promotions to the grade of colonel and below (list begins with Jack C. Aarestad), in the Air National Guard of the Air Force Reserve there are 967 promotions to the grade of lieutenant colonel (list begins with James H. Andrews), in the Air Force and Air Force Reserve there are 46 appointments/promotions to the grade of colonel and below (list begins with Curtis C. Andrews), in the Army there are 2,562 permanent promotions to the grade of major (list begins with Alvin D. Aaron), in the Navy and Naval Reserve there are 6,905 permanent promotions to the grade of lieutenant commander (list begins with Roy V. Aasen), in the Naval Reserve there are 386 permanent promotions to the grade of captain and below (list begins with Robert M. Alston), in the Naval Reserve there are 29 permanent promotions to the grade of captain and below (list begins with Raymond E. Chop), in the Naval Reserve there are 7 permanent appointments to the grade of captain and below (list begins with Bruce L. Bosworth), in the Navy and Naval Reserve there are 9 permanent promotions/appointments to the grade of commander and below (list begins with James R. Nichols), and in the Navy and Naval Reserve there are 144 permanent promotions/appointments to the grade of commander and below (list begins with James B. Cumbie). Since these names have already appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and to save the expense of printing again, I ask unanimous consent that they be ordered to lie on the Secretary's desk for the information of any Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The nominations ordered to lie on the Secretary's desk were printed in the RECORD of January 28, 1982, at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

By Mr. PERCY, from the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Lawrence S. Eagleburger, of Florida, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, class of career minister, to be Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs;

Michael Hayden Armacost, of Maryland, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States to the Philippines:

Contributions are to be reported for the period beginning on the first day of the fourth calendar year preceding the calendar year of the nomination and ending on the date of the nomination.

Nominee: Michael H. Armacost.
Post: The Philippines.
Contributions, amount, date, donee.
1. Self, none.
2. Spouse, none.
3. Children and spouses, none.
4. Parents, Dr. and Mrs. George H. Armacost:
$20, 1978, GOP National Committee.
$25, 1979, GOP National Committee.
$40, 1980, GOP National Committee.
$20, 1980, GOP California Committee.
$100, 1981, GOP National Committee.
5. Grandparents, not available.
6. Brothers and Spouses:
Peter H. Armacost, None.
Samuel H. Armacost:
$25, 1978, Overseas Republican Party.
$25, 1979, Overseas Republican Party.
$85, 1980, GOP National Committee.
7. Sisters and Spouses: Mary A. Hulst, None.

Fred M. Zeder II, of Hawaii, for the rank of Ambassador during the tenure of his service as Personnel Representative of the President to conduct negotiations on the future political status of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands:

Contributions are to be reported for the period beginning on the first day of the fourth calendar year preceding year of the nomination and ending on the date of the nomination.

Nominee: Fred Monroe Zeder II.
Post: Ambassador.
Contributions, amount, date, donee.
1. Self. See appended sheet.
2. Spouse. See appended sheet.
3. Children and Spouses: Wendy Elizabeth Zeder, $250, January 12, 1979, George Bush.
4. Parents deceased.
5. Grandparents deceased.
6. Brothers and spouses: None.
7. Sisters and spouses:
Mrs. E. Lee Fox, $200, 1977-81, Republican Committee.
Mrs. P. Posselius, $800, 1977-81, Republican Committee.

ADDENDUM

Date, donee, amount.
1977
April 2, John Tower Dinner, $1,000.
April 30, Welcome Home—George Bush, $250.
October 28, Friends of Jim Collins, $500.
November 15, Baldwin Campaign Fund (Dallas), $100.
November 17, Steve Baldridge (Dallas), $100.
1978
January 10, George Bush for Congress, $100.
June 28, George Bush for Congress, $500.
July 10, Committee for Limited Government, $2,500.
September 20, Friends of Lacys (Rep. State Legislature), $25.
1979
January 12, George Bush for President, $1,000.
April 6, Republican Party of Hawaii, $122.
September 28, Boat Day for DKI, $200.

1980

May 5, Republican Party of Hawaii, $66.

September 30, Prelude to Victory Reagan-Bush, $500.

October 3, Peter Coleman for Governor, $200.

December 15, President Inaugural Committee, $400.

December 10, Republican Party of Hawaii (Boat Day), $2,500.

February 5, Donna Ikeda (State Land), $20.

May 4, Barbara Marimoto (State Land), $25.

May 25, John Carroll for Senate (State), $100.

January 26, Reagan for President, $1,000.

March 11, House Senate Dinner, $100.

May 6, John Connolly, $100.

June 17, Gerald R. Ford Library, $7,500.

CONTRIBUTIONS

Martha B. Zeder (Spouse):

1977, Apr. 10, Prestoncrest Republican Club, $24.

1978, Mar. 15, Prestoncrest Republican Club, $30.

1979, Jan. 12, George Bush for President, $1,000.

Mar. 16, Prestoncrest Republican Club, $10.

1981, Mar. 15, Oahu League of Republican Women, $23.50.

Apr. 23, Rohlfing for Hawaii, $100.

Aug. 12, Honolulu County Committee, $10.

Time for Barbara Marimoto, $50.

Children and spouses:

Wendy Elizabeth Zeder (Daughter).

1979, Jan. 12, George Bush for President, $250.

Parents and grandparents: None.

Brothers and spouses: None.

Sisters and spouses:

Mrs. E. Lee Fox (Sister).

1977-81, Republican Committee, $200.

Mrs. Priscilla Posselius (Sister).

1977-81, Republican Party, $800.

Fred J. Eckert, of New York, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Fiji, and to serve concurrently and without additional compensation as Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States to the Republic of Kiribati, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Kingdom of Tonga, and Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Tuvalu.

Contributions are to be reported for the period beginning on the first day of the fourth calendar year preceding the calendar year of the nomination and ending on the date of the nomination.

Nominee: Fred J. Eckert.

Post: Fiji, Tonga, Tuvalu, Kiribati.

Contributions, amount, date, donee.

1. Self expenses for primary election campaigns. Volunteered time and paid personal travel 1980, Ronald Reagan.*

(The above nominations from the Committee on Foreign Relations were reported with the recommendation that they be confirmed, subject to the nominees' commitment to respond to requests to appear and testify before any duly constituted committee of the Senate.)

*Expenses in conjunction with New Hampshire Primary (1980): Travel and hotel—$250.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. KASTEN:

S. 2080. A bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act to provide that all persons must comply with the act; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

By Mr. STENNIS:

S. 2081. A bill for relief of Seyed Mohammad Hossein Paya; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 2082. A bill for the relief of Maria Refugio Ruiz; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SASSER (for himself, Mr. CANNON, Mr. PELL, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. EAGLETON, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. PRYOR, and Mr. DECONCINI):

S. 2083. A bill to discourage the violation of mineral leasing laws and to improve the collection of Federal royalties and lease payments derived from certain natural resources under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. D'AMATO (for himself and Mr. THURMOND):

S. 2084. A bill to establish a fair and consistent national policy for the resolution of claims based on a purported lack of congressional approval of ancient Indian land transfers and to clear the titles of lands subject to such claims; to the Select Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. JEPSEN:

S. 2085. A bill for the relief of Alexander Ginsburg, Irina Ginsburg, Alexander Ginsburg, and Alexei Ginsburg; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. METZENBAUM (for himself, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. EAGLETON, Mr. INOUYE, and Mr. BRADLEY):

S. 2086. A bill to amend title II of the Social Security Act to provide for certain procedures to accompany reviews of continuing eligibility for disability insurance benefits; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. DECONCINI:

S. 2087. A bill to authorize the issuance of U.S. obligations secured by and redeemable in gold; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

By Mr. McCLURE (by request):

S. 2088. A bill to require treatment of citizens of the Northern Mariana Islands as citizens of the United States of America for purposes of particular Federal statutes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

S. 2089. A bill to clarify the applicability of the Federal Tort Claims Act to claims arising in the Northern Mariana Islands; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

S. 2090. A bill to amend the application of the Clean Air Act to the Northern Mariana Islands; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

By Mr. EXON (for himself and Mr. ZORINSKY):

S. 2091. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to engage in feasibility studies of water resource development and for other purposes in the Central Platte Valley, Nebr.; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

By Mr. CHAFEE:

S. 2092. A bill to amend section 280A of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to permit Members of Congress to deduct expenses incurred while away from home in pursuit of trade or business on the same basis as other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD (by request):

S. 2093. A bill to require the Administrator of General Services to take suitable action to provide public buildings underground when proven to improve security, energy efficiency, and cost effectiveness; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

SUBMISSION OF CONCURRENT AND SENATE RESOLUTIONS

The following concurrent resolutions and Senate resolutions were read, and referred, or acted upon, as indicated:

By Mr. PRESSLER:

S. Con. Res. 65. A concurrent resolution to protect the Nation's elderly from proposed fiscal year 1983 budget cuts; to the Committee on the Budget.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. KASTEN:

S. 2080. A bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act to provide that all persons must comply with the act; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN EQUAL AND TOTAL DISCLOSURE ACT

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, today I am introducing the "Federal Election Campaign Equal and Total Disclosure Act." This bill would reaffirm the Federal Election Campaign Act requirement that all political parties, including the Communist Party, disclose contributors and financial records. My bill has two sections. The first requires every party to fully disclose the information required under the Election Act. The second provides a criminal penalty if this disclosed information is used to harass or threaten contributors.

My bill is the result of a ruling by Federal Judge Lee Gagliardi in an FEC suit brought to force the Communist Party to meet the requirements of the Federal Election Campaign Act. During the 1976 Presidential election campaign, the Communist Party established an election committee to support its Presidential and Vice-Presidential candidates. The committee, like committees for all political parties, came under the Federal Election Campaign Act disclosure requirements. The act required political party election committees to disclose the name and address of each person contributing in excess of $50 to a campaign, and the name, address, occupation, and principal place of business of each person contributing more than $100. The Communist Party, however, refused to disclose the names and financial information as required, and the Federal Election Commission sued to force the party to disclose the required information.

Judge Gagliardi held that the Communist Party did not have to disclose its financial records or name its contributors. He found that to force the Communist Party to disclose the information would "subject them to threats, harassment, or reprisals from either governmental officials or private parties," and would be likely to abridge the party's associational rights under the first amendment. He also noted the small size of the Communist Party and the reduced likelihood of candidate success in exempting the party from the filing requirements.

Mr. President, I am introducing this bill today because I believe all political parties should be held to high standards, and should be required to disclose their contributors' names and financial records as required under the Federal Election Campaign Act. This legislation should address the problems raised by the Gagliardi decision. I do believe all persons should feel free to contribute to the party of their choice without fear of intimidation or harassment. My bill requires all political parties to disclose the required information, without regard to party size or the likelihood of winning elections. In order to insure that contributors will not be harassed, the bill provides a criminal penalty in the form of a fine up to $25,000, and up to 1 year in prison, for any person using the disclosed information to harass or intimidate contributors. This penalty will eliminate the reason for nondisclosure stated in the court decision. The bill applies to all political parties equally, and insures that everyone is treated fairly under the law.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my bill be printed in the RECORD followed by a recent column by Victor Riesel on this subject published in the Milwaukee Sentinel.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2080

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Federal Election Campaign Equal and Total Disclosure Act".

SEC. 2. The Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended by adding after section 310 the following:

"§ 310A. Equal disclosure requirements and protections

"(a) Every provision of this Act, including all recordkeeping and reporting requirements mandated by this Act, shall be applied equally to all persons, committees, and organizations without regard to party size, amount of contributions, likelihood of a candidate's election to office, or other reason.

"(b) Any person who knowingly and willfully uses information disclosed under this Act for the purpose of subjecting another person to threats, harassment, or reprisals, shall be fined not more than $25,000, or be imprisoned not more than one year, or both.".

[From the Milwaukee Sentinel, Friday, Jan. 15, 1982]

COMMUNISTS EXEMPT FROM DISCLOSURE LAW

(By Victor Riesel)

NEW YORK, N.Y.—There is one political party which is permitted to keep its big donors anonymous, which isn't required to maintain financial records of such contributors, which can defy the Federal Election Commission's request for this financial information and thus is exempt from the Federal Election Campaign Act governing all other parties and political action committees (PACs).

Ironically, it is the Communist Party of the United States of America, the "CPUSA," constantly chorusing the Soviet line on oppression in our land.

This exemption was granted recently by Federal Judge Lee Gagliardi of the Southern District here. The judge thought the party might be harassed if its supporters obeyed the same law abided by all other campaign organizations.

This Communist Party, headed by Gus Hall, who has been greeted by standing ovations at Soviet Communist Party Congresses in Moscow, does some harassment on its own. It has attacked Pope John Paul II, it has vilified American leaders and it has denounced Poland's independent union, Solidarity, now gasping for freedom.

Thus with full freedom, the Communist Party is permitted to operate here as the ally of the Communist Party USSR, which runs the Soviet government, the KGB and the military blamed by the free world for imprisoning Polish freedom.

Hall has run for president of the US and has had his party on the ballot in 25 states.

It is a minor party, but hardly minor in its operations. Some of its fellow travelers hold office in unions. It has some allies in the United Steelworkers of America, whose officialdom the party is always attempting to topple.

The CPUSA does well in New York. It has raised thousands of dollars for national campaigns. There is a daily paper friendly to it. The movement has a building in Manhattan assessed at half a million dollars. This is about half of what it could bring on the open market.

The movement also has printing presses and other mechanical equipment available. Magazines, pamphlets and other booklets are whipped out by a commercial press. Soon the comrades will have a People's School for Marxist Studies. There are libraries, research equipment—and, of course, the First Amendment.

The CPUSA doesn't seem to lack money for politics, for a hall in which to denounce the pope or for organizing. Late in December, Hall spoke at something called the Unity Center. He drew over 1,000 persons and greeted them in behalf of the CPUSA Central Committee. To them he was a hero.

Hall is welcomed when he wishes, or is "invited," to go to Moscow as the representative of the American working class.

Whatever he does in Moscow doesn't appear to matter to the District Court here which rejected an FEC suit to force the CPUSA to obey the same federal statutes observed by the Republicans, the Democrats and independent candidates. The law mandates that all contributors of $100 or more to federal political campaigns must be publicly identified. The FEC moved several years ago when the CPUSA listed 424 such contributors as "anonymous."

Recently Judge Gagliardi finally ruled that the CPUSA was exempt. He stated that the Communist Party shouldn't be compelled to maintain records identifying its contributors or to disclose the information to the FEC because he thought that the CPUSA had established "a reasonable probability" that revealing its contributors would result in their harassment and reprisals.

If this were the criterion, what would happen to our election law on public records? What would happen to freedom of information? Does the judge believe that Republicans, Democrats, John Anderson, et al., haven't been harassed over the years?

So we find in our democratic land that the distinction of exemption from the law goes to the Communist Party dedicated to the overthrow of our laws.

By Mr. SASSER (for himself, Mr. CANNON, Mr. PELL, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. EAGLETON, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. PRYOR, and Mr. DECONCINI):

S. 2083. A bill to discourage the violation of mineral leasing laws, and to improve the collection of Federal royalties and lease payments derived from certain natural resources under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MINERAL LEASING LAW VIOLATIONS

● Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, today I am introducing for myself, and my distinguished colleagues, Senators CANNON, PELL, RIEGLE, EAGLETON, MOYNIHAN, LEVIN, PRYOR, and DECONCINI, a bill to attack the underpayment of royalties owed the United States for oil and gas produced on Federal lands. Congressional hearings, and studies by both the administration and the General Accounting Office show that underpayments may amount to as much as $650 million a year, or $1 in $10 owed. This situation cannot continue in times of budget deficits and tax breaks for the energy industry. It is a loss to the American taxpayer, and it is not an instance of the fair and diligent collection of taxes.

Royalty underpayments have been attributed to producer underpayment, fraud, theft, lease mismanagement, error, and other irregularities which the lessee can prevent. Indeed, up to 6 percent of all crude oil produced in the United States may be stolen from oilfields and gasfields and tank farms on public lands. It is my intention to give weight to the recent court decision that concluded that "error or dishonesty are not beyond the control of the lessee." What is necessary, therefore, is to establish the standards of tenant accountability that have been missing to date.

At present, there are not the adequate sanctions necessary to discourage the irregularities which have been rampant to date. Moreover, there is not adequate Federal authority to organize the leasing process so as to enforce obligations in a Federal minerals lease. The administration has proceeded admirably in focusing on this problem through the work of the Commission on Fiscal Accountability of the Nation's Energy Resources, and in undertaking the recommendations of that Commission for administrative overhaul of the royalty collection and accounting system. But more needs to be done to give this worthy effort greater force.

Several points will illustrate the need for legislation. First, the system clearly lacks the basic means to establish in all cases who owes money to the Government, how much they owe, and who is responsible for its payment. The bill I am introducing today would grant the Department of the Interior the authority to designate for each lease a principal lessee, whose responsibility it would be to report and make all royalty payments from the many interests in a single lease's production, and will eliminate the antitrust problems which prevent such simplification of the system now.

Second, the existing disincentives for underreporting of production from Federal lands, and hence the underpayment of oil and gas royalties, cannot effectively discourage the irregularities which presently plague the system. Incidents of theft from oilfields and tank farms, of royalty oil being transported without a run ticket, of tampered with or mismanaged rig production monitoring equipment, and of reporting "errors," every one of which underreports, rather than overreports, production are reported throughout congressional and executive investigations.

The bill I am introducing today would set reasonable civil penalties for compliance violations by the lessee or its agents. This provision will shore up site security irregularities, by placing a cost on such actions.

In addition, this bill will add a 5-percent additional interest fine to the rate at which the Federal Government borrows money for late payments caused by error, delay, or worse irregularities. Finally, violations of the terms of the lease, when due process considerations have been served, shall result in the forfeiture of the lease involved.

This action would serve notice to the 25 oil companies who are responsible for 85 percent of all royalties collected that a more responsible execution of the terms of the leases of public lands is necessary.

I do not believe that the industry has had a respectful approach to this problem. A recent editorial by the editor of the Oil Daily, DeVan Shumway, describes interest in eliminating irregularities in royalty payments in the following terms. He says:

It would be a shame if the solution to the cheating problem . . . becomes the establishment of another Government bureaucracy. Otherwise, the petroleum industry is slated for more intrusion of Government—right down to the wellhead.

This is not a question of regulation, this is a question of the collection of money owed the public treasury for production done on public lands.

The continued loss of revenues owed the Federal and State Governments cannot continue. At the very least, it fosters fraud and abuse. Administration action to date requires legislation to make its internal actions fully effective. I also believe that administration's legislative proposals will not be stiff enough in the matter of disincentives to abuse of the system. I invite my colleagues to join me in this effort.

I would also like to compliment Senators McCLURE, WALLOP, MELCHER, and COHEN for their interest and action in this matter. I look forward to working together with them and the legislative task force now emerging from the Department of the Interior in developing strong answers to this problem. The Senate Energy Committee has been very responsive to the report of the Commission on Fiscal Accountability of our Nation's Energy Resources, and I wish to commend the members of that committee for their work in this matter.

I ask unanimous consent that a statement by Senator CANNON, who is a cosponsor of the bill I am introducing today, be inserted immediately following my remarks, and that after this statement that the text of S. 2083 be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2083

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as "The Royalty Collection Incentive Act of 1982".

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) as much as $650,000,000 in oil and gas royalties go unpaid each year;

(2) royalty payments on oil and gas may amount to $23,000,000,000 by the end of the decade;

(3) production data used for royalty calculations are also used in calculation of the windfall profit tax;

(4) unpaid royalties can be attributed to producer under reporting, theft, lease mismanagement, and other irregularities which the lessee can prevent; and

(5) the United States Geological Survey does not necessarily have the authority to insure due payment of royalties.

(b) The purpose of this Act is to create a principal lessee for each mineral lease whose responsibility it will be to report production and make royalty payments on such lessees' lease and to provide new penalties for the violation of mineral leasing laws.

SEC. 3. Section 17 of the Act of February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. 437; 30 U.S.C. 226) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following:

"(l) (1) The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to designate a principal lessee (or his designee), with respect to any lease of land containing oil or gas issued under this Act, who shall be responsible to make all royalty and lease payments to the Secretary under such lease.

"(2) Compliance with subsection (1) shall not be a violation of any provision of the Federal antitrust laws.".

SEC. 4. Section 17 of the Act of February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. 437; 30 U.S.C. 226) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(m) (1) At the request of the Secretary of the Interior, the Attorney General or a United States attorney shall institute a civil action in the district court of the United States for the district in which the affected operation is located for a temporary restraining order, injunction, or other appropriate remedy to enforce any provision of this Act respecting any oil or gas lease, any regulation or order issued under this Act respecting any oil or gas lease, or any term of a lease issued pursuant to this Act respecting oil or gas.

"(2) If any person fails to comply with any provision of this Act respecting any oil or gas lease, or any term of a lease issued pursuant to this Act respecting oil or gas, or any regulation or order issued under this Act respecting any oil or gas lease, after notice of such failure and expiration of any reasonable period allowed for corrective action, such person shall be liable for a civil penalty of not more than $10,000 for each day of the continuance of such failure. The Secretary may assess, collect, and compromise any such penalty. Any overdue royalty payments due on an oil or gas lease under this paragraph shall be subject to a fine of an additional 5 percent interest payment above the current rate of interest. No penalty shall be assessed until the person charged with a violation has been given an opportunity for a hearing.

"(3) Any person who knowingly and willfully (A) violates any provision of this Act respecting any oil or gas lease, any term of a lease issued pursuant to this Act respecting oil or gas, or any regulation or order issued under the authority of this Act respecting any oil or gas lease, (B) makes any false statement, representation, or certification in any application, record, report, or other document filed or required to be maintained under this Act respecting any oil or gas lease, (C) falsifies, tampers with, or renders inaccurate any monitoring device or method of record required to be maintained under this Act respecting any oil or gas lease, or (D) reveals any data or information required to be kept confidential by this Act respecting any oil or gas lease shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine of not more than $100,000, or by imprisonment for not more than ten years, or both. A violation of this paragraph shall automatically result in the forfeiture of any oil or gas lease held by the person convicted. Each day that a violation under clause (A) continues, or each day that any monitoring device or data recorder remains inoperative or inaccurate because of any activity described in clause (C), shall constitute a separate violation.

"(4) Whenever a corporation or other entity is subject to prosecution under paragraph (3), any officer or agent of such corporation or entity who knowingly and willfully authorized, ordered, or carried out the proscribed activity shall be subject to the same fines or imprisonment, or both, as provided for under paragraph (3).

"(5) The remedies and penalties prescribed in this subsection shall be concurrent and cumulative and the exercise of one shall not preclude the exercise of the others. The remedies and penalties prescribed in this subsection shall be in addition to any other remedies and penalties afforded by any other law or regulation.".●

● Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I am pleased to be a cosponsor of this bill, which is intended to discourage the violation of our mineral leasing laws. This bill is also intended to improve the collection of Government royalties and lease payments received from oil and gas produced on Federal lands.

Various studies and congressional hearings clearly indicate that our Government is shortchanged as much as $1 for each $10 owed in royalties. These underpayments, which could amount to as much as $650 million a year, can be frequently attributed to producer underreporting, fraud, theft, lease mismanagement, error, and other irregularities.

Currently there is no adequate authority to organize the leasing process or to enforce the terms of the leases. Neither are there any adequate sanctions to discourage present irregularities.

This continued loss of revenue cannot continue. Production data used for royalty calculations are also used in calculation of the windfall profit tax, thereby compounding the revenue loss to the Federal Government. Further distressing is the fact that these underpayments and accompanying revenue losses come at a time of large budget deficits and simultaneous tax breaks for the energy industry.

This bill is needed to strengthen the system by which we establish who owes money to the Federal Government. We need to clearly define how much is owed and who is responsible for its payment. This bill is also needed to reduce the existing disincentives for underreporting of production on Federal lands. There is a need for fines, civil penalties, and even lease forfeitures in order to combat lease violations and misuse.

With this bill, the Interior Department would have the authority to designate a principal lessee for each lease and to assure that the lessee's responsibility for reporting and payment of royalties would be clearly defined.

I urge my colleagues to support passage of this important and necessary legislation.●

By Mr. D'AMATO (for himself and Mr. THURMOND):

S. 2084. A bill to establish a fair and consistent national policy for the resolution of claims based on a purported lack of congressional approval of ancient Indian land transfers and to clear the titles of lands subject to such claims; to the Select Committee on Indian Affairs.

ANCIENT INDIAN LAND CLAIMS SETTLEMENT

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, today I am introducing, with Senator THURMOND, comprehensive legislation which will resolve the remaining disputed Indian land claims in New York and South Carolina. The purpose of this act is to remove the clouds on the titles to land owned by homeowners and municipalities, property owners, and shopkeepers. While preserving for present occupants what is theirs, this legislation also provides for those Indians who have alleged or would allege land claims, due process of law, and monetary compensation. Surely, after nearly 200 years of dispute, the time has come for Congress to settle the issue of the land claims once and for all.

In New York, two Indian claims which cloud the title to almost 6 million acres of land in the central part of the State, and a third which threatens another 3 million acres, have been filed in the last 4 years. The size of the claims are vast, as great as the size of the States of Rhode Island, Delaware, and Connecticut combined. Should the claimants be restored to the possession of the lands that they claim, there would be enormous disruption to innumerable homes, businesses, municipal facilities, public services, and State and local taxation programs, with adverse consequences that would extend beyond the claims area. The financial consequences would be disastrous for thousands of innocent persons, as security for personal, business, and governmental obligations would be fatally impaired or wiped out.

What was vacant and unimproved lands when owned by the Indians 200 years ago is now enormously valuable property improved by the investments of equity and invaluable work of thousands of individuals, businesses, and governmental units that did not even exist when the wrongs alleged by the Indians were committed.

In addition to claiming millions of acres of land, the Indian tribes in New York and South Carolina are seeking recovery of hundreds of millions of dollars in trespass damages on the ground that the original transfers of the land by Indian tribes in the 18th and 19th centuries were invalid because the Federal Government never explicitly ratified or approved those transfers. While the basic issue raised by the Indian groups is that these land transfers were invalid because the United States failed to approve these transfers in accordance with the Non-Intercourse Act provision of the Indian Trade and Intercourse Act of 1790, the transfers have also been challenged under various other legal theories, including theories involving provisions of the Constitution and the Articles of Confederation.

CAYUGA CLAIM

The most recent suit filed in New York involves the Cayuga Nation. The Cayuga Tribe claims that the treaty it entered into deeding the State of New York 64,000 acres on July 24, 1795, is void because of an alleged failure to comply with the provisions of the Federal Non-Intercourse Act. In their lawsuit, the Cayugas request declaratory relief that they have legal and equitable title and the right of possession on the subject lands; ejectment and repossession of these lands; $350 million in trespass damages; an escrow fund of local property taxes and proceeds from land sales; an accounting of all mineral and timber removed from the land in question; and plaintiffs' attorneys' fees.

The Cayugas' case is based on an agency theory, claiming that the treaty in question was witnessed by a Federal agent, Israel Chapin, Jr., who lacked the required authority to provide the Federal presence necessary under the Non-Intercourse Act. The Cayugas base their objection on the fact that Chapin received a letter from President Washington's Secretary of War ordering him not to witness such a treaty signing. It is disputed as to whether or not this letter referred to the Cayugas. However, Chapin did not receive the correspondence until after he attended the treaty signing. As a result of this letter, the Cayugas are seeking to wipe out nearly 200 years of the history of the use of this land. It is simply not right or equitable to turn back the clock to 1795 to correct alleged errors and miscommunication at the expense of present title holders by forcing them to vacate the land they own. And so long as the suit is pending, there is a cloud on the titles of current landowners, and it is difficult for the land to be transferred or mortgaged.

RESPONSIBILITY OF THE UNITED STATES

During the past 200 years, the Federal Government has maintained a policy with regard to claimed land which has provided de facto approval of the validity of the land transfers. This course of conduct by the United States has resulted in the justifiable reliance by generations of landowners, and by the affected communities and States, in the integrity of present day land titles, founded on the belief that the United States had fulfilled whatever fiduciary responsibility it may have had to these tribes with regard to their land transfers.

The actions of the Federal Government constitute more than mere acquiescence in the validity of the transfers. Over the years, the United States has acquired land in the claims areas for many Federal purposes, such as the construction of post offices, courthouses, and military facilities, and has treated the landowners as the rightful owners of the property. It has granted Federal funds to State and local agencies for various projects that involve the utilization of this land. It has provided millions of dollars in financial assistance, under the auspices of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, the Farmers Home Administration, and the Small Business Administration, to individuals and corporations to use, develop, and improve the lands claimed. Despite the Federal Government's extensive involvement in the land in the claim areas, it has never suggested that the non-Indian landowners did not have rightful title to the land because of the purported rights of the Indian tribes that are currently laying claim to the land.

SUMMARY OF THE ACT

The purpose of this legislation is to remove the clouds on titles to land located in New York and South Carolina as a result of the claims. In order to do this, the act approves, validates, and ratifies land transfers with the same effect as if such approval, validation, and ratification had been given at the time of the transfers. The act provides Indian tribes whose transfers have been approved by the act with due process with a means of obtaining fair compensation for their claims, including a cause of action for monetary compensation against the United States in the Court of Claims.

There are two processes by which the Indian tribes can have their claims adjudicated. First, as soon as possible after the enactment of the bill into law, the Secretary of the Interior is to publish in the Federal Register a notice of the information that should be supplied by an Indian tribe to allow the Secretary to determine whether in the absence of the act the Indian tribe had a credible claim and to determine a fair monetary award that should be paid by the United States in settlement of the claim. If the Indian tribe agrees to the settlement, there should be a final agreement constituting a permanent settlement. This section of the bill also authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to assist the Indian tribe in purchasing land from willing sellers.

The second process of adjudication provides that the Indian tribe may bring an action in the U.S. Court of Claims against the United States within 3 years of the date of the enactment of the act. The burden of proof is on the Indian tribe to establish that it or its predecessor did not receive fair or conscionable consideration for the land transfer.

Monetary damages awarded by the Court of Claims shall be equivalent to the difference between the fair market value that the claimant should have received for the transfer of its interest in the land and the compensation, if any, actually received by the claimant or its predecessor. The amount of the award shall be increased by simple interest from and after the date of the transfer until the date final judgment is entered in the Court of Claims.

This measure provides a fair and equitable solution to the Indian land claims controversy, addressing the serious problems facing present landowners and the claims made by Indian tribes. In a recent New York State Bar Journal article on the New York Indian land claims, Allan Van Gestel succinctly stated the issue before us:

There is a basic inequity in forcing present-day landowners to defend themselves against ancient claims that are in so sense based upon any wrongdoing on their part while the United States sits on the sidelines or assists in the prosecution. It is time for congress to live up to its representative responsibility and enact legislation which will clear away once and for all the clouds on title by these kinds of Indian land claims.

The time to act is now.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I wish to express my support for the legislation just introduced by the distinguished Senator and my good friend from New York (Mr. D'AMATO) and I am pleased to be a cosponsor.

This legislation addresses itself to a matter that is long overdue for congressional consideration. The issue of Indian land claims in the eastern and gulf regions of the United States is unquestionably a matter of national interest and concern.

Until recently, Congress believed that this was an issue which had been addressed and settled back in 1946. In that year, Congress enacted the Indian Claims Commission Act. Under that act, a commission was set up to adjudicate all Indian land claims against the United States which were based on allegedly unfair takings and/or inadequate compensation for takings of Indian lands by the U.S. Government. This act provided that all such claims had to be filed by 1951 or they would be forever barred. However, the Congress failed in that act to address the issue of Indian claims arising, not against the United States, but against States, municipalities, and private landowners. This is the type of action which the legislation introduced today is designed to address.

I believe the time has come for the Congress to resolve this issue once and for all. Without congressional action, private landowners who bear no responsibility for the current situation will continue to be forced into court to litigate the question of title to land they purchased in good faith, but which, because of actions taken by Indian tribes and local governments some 200 years ago, has now become the subject of litigation. For the Congress to stand by and allow this deplorable situation to continue would be both unfair and unacceptable.

This legislation would remove all such Indian claims to the U.S. Court of Claims for resolution, and would direct that in those cases deemed meritorious by the court, only a monetary remedy could be awarded. This would eliminate the cloud on title currently hanging over the heads of landowners in the affected States. In addition, a fair compensation formula for this monetary remedy has been included in the text of the bill.

I urge my colleagues to carefully consider the merits of this proposal. I feel that it provides an acceptable vehicle for a final resolution of this issue, one that is fair to all sides and all parties. I would also hope that the Senator from Maine (Mr. COHEN) and the other members of the Indian Affairs Committee will agree to early hearings on this bill.

By Mr. METZENBAUM, (for himself, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. EAGLETON, Mr. INOUYE, and Mr. BRADLEY):

S. 2086. A bill to amend title II of the Social Security Act to provide for certain procedures to accompany reviews of continuing eligibility for disability insurance benefits; to the Committee on Finance.

CONTINUING DISABILITY INVESTIGATIONS IMPROVEMENT

● Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, information has come to my attention that the Social Security Administration (SSA) is using seriously flawed procedures in its investigation of the continuing eligibility of current recipients of social security disability benefits. As a result, needed benefits are being denied to many truly disabled persons who have no alternative source of income.

Today, Senators MOYNIHAN, EAGLETON, INOUYE, BRADLEY and myself are introducing a bill to correct the procedural inequities that we have found in the present system. While I agree that our social security system can ill afford to carry persons on its rolls who are no longer disabled, we cannot allow our cost-saving initiatives to become so overzealous that we harm those very persons who are most in need of Government assistance and protection.

Starting in March 1981, SSA, at the request of the administration, has engaged in a massive, accelerated review of title II disability recipients. Nationwide, State agencies are receiving over 35,000 cases for review each month and that number is expected to double later this year. The offices are severely understaffed, the backlog of cases is enormous, and there is tremendous pressure to move these cases quickly. SSA has informed the State examiners that they will closely scrutinize cases in which a decision is made to continue benefits, but there is no review of decisions to terminate benefits. As a result of this not too subtle message to decrease the disability rolls, some egregious errors are being made.

Agency personnel have informed my staff that very often the agency does not even request a medical report from the recipient's treating physician, particularly if that person is receiving care in a clinic setting. Even where medical evidence is requested, the agency is allegedly making its decisions to cease benefits prior to waiting a reasonable length of time for receipt of such a report or without reviewing those reports received.

In addition, serious allegations have been made concerning the quality and adequacy of the medical examinations conducted by the independent medical examiners under contract with the State agency. There are too many disturbingly similar stories of hasty 5-minute interviews with indifferent doctors to believe that these are just isolated incidents. As a result of these ill-advised procedures, the State agency in Ohio is currently ceasing benefits in 47 percent of the cases it reviews while the termination rate nationwide is 45.1 percent. However, in Cleveland, the administrative law judges are reversing at least 50 percent of these initial State agency decisions when the cases finally reach them on appeal. In other States I understand that the error rate is even higher. This incredible reversal rate means that about 25 percent of the disability recipients being removed from the rolls by the State agencies are actually entitled to continued benefits.

The consequences of an erroneous decision by the State agency are severe. Despite a request for a hearing on this initial determination that a person's disability has ceased, benefits are terminated pending the hearing decision. The waiting period for such a decision can be as long as 1 year. When benefits are restored, as they are in at least 50 percent of the cases, it may be too late for those persons with no other sources of income.

My staff have been contacted by desperately ill persons who are being forced to sell their homes and resort to other serious irreversible measures while awaiting this restoration of benefits. Lives are being destroyed, literally, as a result of this process. Several recent suicides and suicide attempts have been attributed to the loss of social security disability benefits.

In one case brought to the attention of my office, Calvin J. Crick, a 55-year-old man who had been on total disability since 1975 when he suffered a massive heart attack, received a notice that his benefits were being terminated because he was no longer disabled. Despite the report of his own physician of 12 years that a series of four heart attacks had left Mr. Crick permanently disabled and unable to resume working and despite previous test results to this effect, the State agency insisted that they would need current laboratory findings. Mr. Crick agreed to undergo a heart catheterization to prove his disability despite the warning of his physician that the operation could be life threatening. Mr. Crick felt he had no choice but to take the risk because he had to support a wife and two children. When one of my staff insisted that a medical consultant at SSA in Baltimore review this case, it was found that Mr. Crick's case file already contained more than sufficient evidence to prove his disability. While Mr. Crick was saved from a life-threatening operation by the last-minute intervention of this office, how many other lives are seriously damaged because no one has intervened on their behalf?

In another Ohio case, a 59-year-old woman had been receiving disability benefits because of a heart condition and progressively deteriorating arthritis. She had worked for 27 years as a dental technician before suffering a heart attack. After several unsuccessful attempts to continue working, she finally was forced to go on disability. Last October, the State agency, ignoring the report of her treating physician, terminated her benefits based on the report of a State-paid doctor who had spoken to her for only a few minutes and who had not even conducted a physical examination of her condition. This woman's husband is 76 years old and he receives a small pension, but their income was cut in half with the loss of her disability benefits.

These and countless other similar examples have led us to the conclusion that a legislative change is necessary. My bill simply requires SSA and the State agencies to adopt fairer procedures in their review. It requires SSA to give adequate notice to recipients whose cases have been chosen for investigation in order to give them sufficient time to make doctor appointments, undergo necessary tests and examinations, and obtain medical reports. The notice will inform recipients that they should obtain a report of a recent medical examination of their disability by a provider of medical services of their choice and that such report will be used in determining their continued eligibility for benefits. It requires the State agency to request such a report and to wait 30 days after their request for receipt of the report prior to making any determination as to whether the recipient's disability has ceased.

In addition, my bill would provide for a continuation of benefits in those cases where there is a substantial difference of medical opinion as to the recipient's disabling condition between the recipient's own treating physician and the consultative physician who was chosen by SSA or the State agency. Benefits would continue pending a hearing decision by the administrative law judge. Benefits would also continue during the appeals process for those recipients who could prove substantial dependence upon such benefits. This would only partially parallel the right to continued benefits which SSI disability recipients have under current law. Finally, in cases where benefits were continued pursuant to the above requirement, no overpayment could be recovered from recipients whose income did not exceed 150 percent of the poverty line if the final appeals decision was to cease benefits.

Time is of the essence in bringing about these needed procedural changes. Congress must take action to prevent further tragedies from occurring. We must not let our search for fraud and abuse result in harm to truly disabled persons who have worked and earned these benefits which they currently receive.●

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, in 1980, after the General Accounting Office investigated problems in the social security disability insurance (DI) program, Congress amended the Social Security Act to insure that only genuinely disabled persons receive social security disability insurance. The Disability Insurance Amendments of 1980 require the Social Security Administration to reexamine everyone now receiving DI benefits. Those found no longer disabled are to be removed from the benefit rolls.

Let me say first of all that I altogether support the goals of the 1980 amendments. Simply put, persons who once were but no longer are disabled should not continue to receive DI benefits. It is incumbent upon us to prevent such abuse.

It is, however, equally our responsibility to insure that the truly disabled receive the DI benefits to which they are entitled. It was not Congress intent to eliminate both the healthy and the disabled from the disability insurance program.

These mandatory reexaminations began in March 1981. Evidence provided by the Social Security Administration itself indicates that a very great number of disabled persons are being removed from the DI rolls. In 1981, the State agencies which carry out the DI reviews looked at 351,000 cases. According to the Social Security Administration, benefits were terminated in 45 percent of those cases. Persons denied benefits may appeal their case to an administrative law judge (ALJ). Benefits were reinstated in 47 percent of the cases heard on appeal.

I imply no meanness of spirit to the Social Security Administration and the State agencies that administer the medical reviews. In the past, State agencies would review 150,000 DI cases yearly. Caseload doubled in 1981, and will rise more than fourfold, to

89-059 O-85-78 (Pt. 1)

521,000, this year. The State agencies are illequipped to handle these cases. Social Security Administration officials speak of a large backload of cases in each State agency, and little incentive to review each case thoroughly. SSA admits that medical examiners often do not request a report from the beneficiary's treating physician, and also admits that many of the State-sponsored reexaminations are cursory.

As a result, many disabled persons are wrongly being denied DI benefits. I am pleased to be an original cosponsor of this bill, which would require SSA and the State agencies that carry out case reviews to adopt some procedural safeguards to protect those entitled to DI benefits.

This bill makes two important changes in current law. First, it requires the State medical reviewers to request, and to consider, recent reports of disability provided by a beneficiary's own doctor or clinic. Second, if DI benefits are discontinued despite evidence of genuine disability provided by a DI recipient's treating physician, and the recipient asks for an ALJ hearing, benefits would continue pending the ALJ decision. If the ALJ upholds terminating benefits, SSA would be empowered to recoup benefits paid after State agency determination that payment should cease. Payments would not continue if no difference of medical opinion exists. Only when there is genuine disagreement about a DI recipient's health would SSA continue to provide benefits. If an administrative law judge finds no reason to continue benefits, SSA would collect the amount of benefits paid after the State agency originally terminated the case.

In short, this bill offers the disabled some assurance that they will not be left destitute if their benefits are mistakenly terminated. I urge its speedy enactment.●

By Mr. DECONCINI:

S. 2087. A bill to authorize the issuance of U.S. obligations secured by and redeemable in gold; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

GOLD SECURITY

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, the bill I am introducing today authorizes the issuance of U.S. obligations secured by and redeemable in gold. This new species of Federal debenture would, in other words, have a par value denominated in both gold and currency when issued. At maturity, the bearer would have the option of redeeming the security for either the stipulated quantity of gold or its cash equivalent.

The introduction of a gold-secured instrument of this sort on a trial basis should furnish a useful test, under limited conditions, of the possible effects of gold convertibility on the Federal budget, the financial markets, and the economy as a whole.

From the standpoint of Federal financial and fiscal policy, gold bonds or certificates offer certain immediately obvious advantages. First, gold backed securities should, all things being equal, command a more favorable; that is, lower coupon or discount rate, thereby reducing interest costs to the Government. This is no small matter, given a trillion dollar debt. Interest payments on the Federal debt last fiscal year, in fact, come to just under $100 billion. Even under the most optimistic assumptions, the cost of financing Federal red ink in the current fiscal year will undoubtedly exceed that figure, quite probably by a substantial margin.

Obligations redeemable in either specie or equal amounts of cash would have another, albeit somewhat less direct, fiscal benefit. They give the Government a very strong incentive to institute the measures necessary to assure monetary stability. It is not difficult to see why. Inflation and the price of gold in the relevant currency are, as a general rule, inversely related. Obligations entitling the bearer to payment in either gold or the cash equivalent would impose a severe penalty—in the shape, in effect, of appreciating principal—on any failure to arrest increases in the general price level.

Finally, Mr. President, the Presidential Gold Commission established under Public Law 96-389 is currently reviewing the various roles gold plays or might play in domestic and international monetary and financial systems. The concept embodied in this legislation is one which I believe deserves serious study; I commend it to the Commission's attention and ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S 2087

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, without regard to the provisions of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to issue to the public, on a demonstration basis and at a rate of return not to exceed 75 percentum of the rate of return on comparable medium term government securities, obligations of the United States which are secured by, and may be redeemed by the holders thereof at maturity for, specified quantities of gold or amounts of currency of the United States measured thereby.

By Mr. McCLURE (by request):

S. 2088. A bill to require treatment of citizens of the Northern Mariana Islands as citizens of the United States of America for purposes of particular Federal statutes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

S. 2089. A bill to clarify the applicability of the Federal Tort Claims Act to claims arising in the Northern Mariana Islands; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

S. 2090. A bill to amend the application of the Clean Air Act to the Northern Mariana Islands; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

NORTHERN MARIANA ISLANDS LEGISLATION

● Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, at the request of the administration, I send to the desk for appropriate reference three bills:

First, to require the treatment of citizens of the Northern Mariana Islands as citizens of the United States of America for purposes of particular Federal statutes;

Second, to clarify the applicability of the Federal Tort Claims Act to claims arising in the Northern Mariana Islands; and Third, to amend the application of the Clean Air Act to the Northern Mariana Islands.

Mr. President, this draft legislation was submitted by James A. Joseph, Chairman of the Northern Mariana Islands Commission on Federal Laws, which was appointed by the President pursuant to Public Law 94-241. I ask unanimous consent that the bills, and the executive communication which accompanied the proposals from the Chairman of the Commission be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2088

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That provisions of law prohibiting the payment of compensation to, or employment of, any person not a citizen of the United States of America by the United States of America shall not bar the United States of America from paying compensation to or employing citizens of the Northern Mariana Islands.

STATUTES RELATING TO THE UNIFORMED SERVICES.

SEC. 2. In accordance with the Covenant To Establish a Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Inlands in Political Union with the United States of America (approved on March 24, 1976, by Public Law 94-241), a citizen of the Northern Mariana Islands who declared in writing an intent to become a citizen, and not a national, of the United States of America upon full implementation of such Convenant shall be deemed a citizen of the United States of America for purposes of:

(a) Sections 311, 510, 532, 591, 2004, 2031, 2104, 2107, 2122, 4348, 6019, 6911, 6958, 6959, 8257, and 9348 of title 10, United States Code;

(b) Section 195, 371, 706, and 823 of title 14, United States Code; and

(c) Section 313 of title 32, United States Code.

STATUTES RELATING TO THE FEDERAL EMPLOYMENT

SEC. 3. Citizens of the Northern Mariana Islands shall be deemed citizens of the United States of America for purposes of

(a) Sections 5342, 5343, 5561, 5595, 5912, 5922, 6301, 7103, 7532, 8171, 8501, 8701, and 8901 of title 5, United States Code;

(b) Section 22 of title 13, United States Code;

(c) Section 2 of Public Law 86-91, 73 Stat. 213 (20 U.S.C. section 901);

(d) Sections 301-03 of the Act of January 27, 1943, c.36, 62 Stat. 6, as amended (22 U.S.C. sections 1451-53);

(e) Section 636 of Public Law 87-195, 75 Stat. 424, as amended (22 U.S.C. section 2396);

(f) Sections 5 and 6 of Public Law 87-293, 75 Stat. 612, as amended (22 U.S.C. sections 2504-05);

(g) Sections 103, 301, 312, 403, 409, 504, 608, 901, 903, 904, and 1101 of Public Law 96-465, 94 Stat. 2071 (22 U.S.C. sections 3903, 3941, 3952, 3963, 3969, 3984, 4008, 4081, 4083, 4084, and 4131);

(h) Section 15 of Public Law 90-202, 81 Stat. 602, as added by section 28(b)(2) of Public Law 93-259, 88 Stat. 55, and as amended (29 U.S.C. section 633a);

(i) Sections 235 and 4105 of title 38, United States Code;

(j) Section 203 of the Act of July 1, 1944, c.373, 53 Stat. 682, as amended (42 U.S.C. section 204);

(k) Section 104 of Public Law 93-113, 87 Stat. 394 (42 U.S.C. section 4954); and

(l) Civil Service Rules VII and VIII (5 C.F.R. parts 7 and 8).

STATUTES RELATING TO PROTECTION AND SERVICES IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES

SEC. 4. Citizens of the Northern Mariana Islands shall be deemed citizens of the United States of America for purposes of:

(a) Sections 351 and 1486 of title 10, United States Code;

(b) Section 498 of the Act of June 17, 1930, c.497, 46 Stat. 590, as amended (19 U.S.C. section 1498);

(c) Subsection (b) of section 502 of Public Law 93-618, 88 Stat. 1978 (19 U.S.C. section 2462(b));

(d) Section 2001 of the Revised Statutes of 1878 (22 U.S.C. section 1732);

(e) Section 108 of Public Law 95-105, 91 Stat. 845 (22 U.S.C. section 2151n-1);

(f) Sections 601 and 620 of Public Law 87-195, 75 Stat. 424, as amended (22 U.S.C. sections 2351 and 2370);

(g) Section 3 of the Act of August 1, 1956, c.841, 70 Stat. 890 (22 U.S.C. section 2670);

(h) Section 7 of Public Law 96-8, 93 Stat. 14 (22 U.S.C. section 3306);

(i) Sections 1707, 1709, 1711, 1734, and 1737 of the Revised Statutes of 1878, as amended (22 U.S.C. sections 4193, 4195, 4197, 4217, and 4218);

(j) Section 1 of the Act of December 23, 1944, c.716, 58 Stat. 921, as amended (31 U.S.C. section 492a);

(k) Sections 3048 and 3689 of the Revised Statutes of 1878, as amended (31 U.S.C. section 711);

(l) Sections 4294 and 4295 of the Revised Statutes of 2878 (33 U.S.C. sections 382 and 383);

(m) Section 1113 of the Act of August 14, 1935, c.531, 49 Stat. 620, as added by section 302 of Public Law 87-64, 75 Stat. 131, and as amended (42 U.S.C. section 1313);

(n) Section 521 of Public Law 94-163, 89 Stat. 871 (42 U.S.C. section 6391); and

(o) Sections 2, 8, 10, and 12 of the Act of October 6, 1917, c.106, 40 Stat. 411, as amended (50 U.S.C. App. section 2, 8, 10, and 12).

STATUTES RELATING TO COMMERCE

SEC. 5. Citizens of the Northern Mariana Islands shall be deemed citizens of the United States of America for purposes of:

(a) Sections 302, 310D, 311, and 321 of Public Law 87-128, 75 Stat. 294, as amended (7 U.S.C. sections 1922, 1934, 1941, and 1961);

(b) Section 5146 of the Revised Statutes of 1878, as amended (12 U.S.C. section 72);

(c) Subsection (a) of section 25 of the Act of December 23, 1913, c.6, 38 Stat. 251, as added by the Act of December 24, 1919, c.18, 41 Stat. 378, and as amended (12 U.S.C. section 619);

(d) Subsection (a) of section 7 of the Act of July 22, 1932, c.522, 47 Stat. 725, as amended (12 U.S.C. section 1427(a));

(e) Subsection (b) of section 5.1 of Public Law 92-181, 85 Stat. 583 (12 U.S.C. section 2222);

(f) Subsection (i) of section 44 of the Act of July 5, 1946, c.540, 60 Stat. 427, as amended (15 U.S.C. section !126(i));

(g) Subsection (b)(7) of section 4 of the Act of August 8, 1956, c.1036, 70 Stat. 1119, as amended (16 U.S.C. section 742c(b)(7));

(h) Subsection (e) of section 4 of the Act of June 10, 1920, c.285, 41 Stat. 1063, as amended (16 U.S.C. section 797(e));

(i) Subsection (b) of section 101 of Public Law 94-553, 90 Stat. 2541 (17 U.S.C. section 104(b));

(j) Subsection (a) of section 526 of the Act of June 17, 1930, c.497, 46 Stat. 590, as amended (19 U.S.C. section 1526(a));

(k) Subsection (a)(5) of section 2 of the Act of June 20, 1936, c.638, 49 Stat. 1559, as amended (20 U.S.C. section 107a(a)(5));

(l) Section 238 of Public Law 87-195, 75 Stat. 424, as added by section 105 of Public Law 91-175, 83 Stat. 805, and as amended (22 U.S.C. section 2198);

(m) Section 897 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as added by subsection (a) of section 1122 of Public Law 96-499, 94 Stat. 2599 (26 U.S.C. section 897);

(n) Subsection (b)(7) of section 622 of Public Law 96-294, 94 Stat. 611 (30 U.S.C. section 1522(b)(7));

(o) Subsection (5) of section 3 of Public Law 93-627, 88 Stat. 2126 (33 U.S.C. section 1502(5));

(p) Subsection (f)(3) of section 514 of the Act of July 15, 1949, c.338, 63 Stat. 413, as added by subsection (a) of section 804 of Public Law 87-70, 75 Stat. 149, and as amended (42 U.S.C. section 1484(f)(3));

(q) Subsection (d) of section 103 and subsection (d) of section 104 of the Act of August 1, 1946, c.724, 60 Stat. 754, as added by section 1 of the Act of August 30, 1954, c.1073, 68 Stat. 921, and as amended (42 U.S.C. sections 2133(d) and 2134(d));

(r) Subsection (b)(2)(A) of section 7 of Public Law 93-577, 88 Stat. 1878 (42 U.S.C. section 5906(b)(2)(A));

(s) Subsection (p)(1) of section 19 of Public Law 93-577, 88 Stat. 1878, as added by subsection (b) of section 207 of Public Law 95-238, 92 Stat. 53 (42 U.S.C. section 5919(p)(1));

(t) Subsection (b) of section 179 of Public Law 96-294, 94 Stat. 611 (42 U.S.C. section 8779(b)(4));

(u) Subsection (a)(3) of section 2, subsection (a) of section 101, and subsection (e)(2)(C) of section 108 of Public Law 96-320, 94 Stat. 974 (42 U.S.C. sections 9101(a)(3); 9111(a); and 9118(e)(2)(C));

(v) Section 4219 of the Revised Statutes of 1878, as amended (46 U.S.C. section 121);

(w) Section 4131 of the Revised Statutes of 1878, as amended (46 U.S.C. section 221);

(x) Section 1 of the Act of August 1, 1939, c. 409, 53 Stat. 1145, as amended (46 U.S.C. section 242);

(y) Section 4377 of the Revised Statutes of 1878, as amended (46 U.S.C. section 325);

(z) Section 5 of the Act of June 25, 1936, c. 816, 49 Stat. 1930 (46 U.S.C. section 672a);

(aa) Section 36 of the Act of September 7, 1916, c. 451, 39 Stat. 728 (46 U.S.C. section 834);

(bb) Sections 302, 501, 509, 601, 809(a), 1103, and 1104 of the Act of June 29, 1936, c. 858, 49 Stat. 1985, as amended (46 U.S.C. sections 1132, 1151, 1159, 1171, 1213, 1273, and 1274);

(cc) Subsection (a) of section 203 of Public Law 96-320, 94 Stat. 974 (46 U.S.C. section 1279c(a));

(dd) Sections 1201 and 1203 of the Act of June 29, 1936, c. 858, 49 Stat. 1985, as added by the Act of September 7, 1950, c. 906, 64 Stat. 773, and as amended (46 U.S.C. sections 1281 and 1283);

(ee) Sections 1301, 1303, 1304, and 1306 of Public Law 96-453, 94 Stat. 1997 (46 U.S.C. sections 1295, 1295b, 1295c, and 1295e);

(ff) Subsection (1)(l) of section 303 and subsection (b) of section 310 of the Act of June 19, 1934, c. 652, 48 Stat. 1064, as amended (47 U.S.C. sections 303(1)(l) and 310(b));

(gg) Subsection (16) of section 101, section 104, and subsection (d)(4) of section 401 of Public Law 85-726, 72 Stat. 731, as amended (49 U.S.C. sections 1301(16), 1304, and 1371(d)(4));

(hh) Section 418 of Public Law 85-726, 72 Stat. 731, as added by subsection (a) of section 17 of Public Law 95-163, 91 Stat. 1278, and as amended (49 U.S.C. section 1388); and

(ii) Sections 501, 602, and 1303 of Public Law 85-726, 72 Stat. 731, as amended (49 U.S.C. sections 1401, 1422, and 1533).

STATUTES RELATING TO POLITICAL AND CIVIL RIGHTS

SEC. 6. Citizens of the Northern Mariana Islands shall be deemed citizens of the United States of America for purposes of:

(a) Section 319 of Public Law 92-225, 86 Stat. 3, as added by subsection (2) of section 112 of Public Law 94-283, 90 Stat. 475, and as redesignated by subsection (5) of section 105 of Public Law 96-187, 93 Stat. 1339 (2 U.S.C. section 441e);

(b) Subsection (a)(2) of section 3 of Public Law 93-579, 88 Stat. 1896, as amended (5 U.S.C. section 552a(a)(2));

(c) Sections 241 and 243, subsection (b)(5) of section 245, subsection (a) of section 4000, and subsection (b) of section 4100 of title 18, United States Code;

(d) Sections 4081 and 4082 of the Revised Statutes of 1878, as amended (22 U.S.C. sections 257 and 258);

(e) Subsection (b)(2) of section 1 of Act of June 8, 1938, c.327, 52 Stat. 631, as amended (22 U.S.C. section 611);

(f) Sections 1343, 1344, 1391, 1443, 1861, 1862, 1863, and 1865 of title 28, United States Code;

(g) Section 505 of the Act of June 30, 1948, c.758, 62 Stat. 1115, as added by section 2 of Public Law 92-500, 86 Stat. 816 (33 U.S.C. section 1365);

(h) Subsection (a)(1) of section 2004 of the revised Statutes of 1878, as amended (42 U.S.C. section 1971(a)(1));

(i) Section 2, subsection (b) of section 3, section 4, and subsection (a) of section 10 of Public Law 89-110, 79 Stat. 437 (42 U.S.C. sections 1973, 1973a(b), 1973b, and 1973h(a));

(j) Subsection (a) of section 201 of Public Law 89-110, 79 Stat. 437, as added by section 6 of Public Law 91-285, 84 Stat. 314, and as amended (42 U.S.C. section 1973aa(a));

(k) Section 203 of Public Law 89-110, 79 Stat. 437, as added by section 301 of Public Law 94-73, 89 Stat. 400 (42 U.S.C. section 1973aa-1a);

(l) Section 104 of Public Law 85-315, 71 Stat. 634, as amended (42 U.S.C. section 1975c);

(m) Section 1979 of the Revised Statutes of 1878, as amended (42 U.S.C. section 1983);

(n) Section 1980 of the Revised Statutes of 1878 (42 U.S.C. section 1985);

(o) Section 702 of Public Law 88-352, 78 Stat. 241, as amended (42 U.S.C. section 2000e-1);

(p) Section 717 of Public Law 88-352, 78 Stat. 241, as added by section 11 of Public Law 92-261, 86 Stat. 103 (42 U.S.C. section 2000e-16);

(q) Section 2 of the Act of March 2, 1917, c.145, 39 Stat. 951, as amended (48 U.S.C. section 737);

(r) Subsection (i) of section 101 of Public Law 95-511, 92 Stat. 1783 (50 U.S.C. section 1801);

(s) Subsection (b)(3) of section 10 of the Act of June 24, 1948, c.625, 62 Stat. 604, as amended (50 U.S.C. App. section 460(b)(3));

(t) Section 105 of the Act of October 17, 1940, c.888, 54 Stat. 1178, as added by section 4 of the Act of October 6, 1942, c.581, 56 Stat. 769 (50 U.S.C. App. section 514); and

(u) Section 512 of the Act of October 17, 1940, c.888, 54 Stat. 1178, as amended (50 U.S.C. App. section 572).

STATUTES RELATING TO FEDERAL PROGRAMS AND BENEFITS

SEC. 7. Citizens of the Northern Mariana Islands shall be deemed citizens of the United States of America for purposes of:

(a) Subsection (f) of section 6 of Public Law 88-525, 78 Stat. 703, as amended (7 U.S.C. section 2015(f));

(b) Subsection (a) of section 2545 of title 10, United States Code;

(c) Subsection (m)(2) of section 2[3] of the Act of September 21, 1950, c.967, 64 Stat. 873, as added by section 6(c)(4) of Public Law 95-369, 92 Stat. 607 (12 U.S.C. section 1813(m)(2));

(d) Subsection (b) of section 500 of title 14, United States Code;

(e) Paragraphs (4) and (5) of subsection (a) of section 4 of Public Law 88-578, 78 Stat. 897, as added by section 2 of Public Law 92-347, 86 Stat. 459, as amended, and by subsection (2) of section 9 of Public Law 96-344, 94 Stat. 1133 (16 U.S.C. section 4601-6a (a)(4) and (5));

(f) Section 29 of the Act of August 1, 1956, c. 841, 70 Stat. 890, as added by section 2201 of Public Law 96-465, 94 Stat. 2071 (22 U.S.C. section 2701);

(g) Section 2 of Public Law 95-524, 92 Stat. 1909 (29 U.S.C. sections 834(3) and 993(b)(1)(C));

(h) Subsection (g) of section 9 of the Act of March 4, 1927, c.509, 44 Stat. 1424, as amended (33 U.S.C. section 909(g));

(i) Subsection (b) of section 624 of title 38, United States Code;

(j) Subsection (d)(12) of section 789, formerly section 776, of the Act of July 1, 1944, c. 373, 58 Stat. 682, as added by subsection (a) of section 3 of Public Law 93-154, 87 Stat. 594, as amended (42 U.S.C. section 295g-8(d)(12));

(k) Subsection (b) (3) of section 2 and section 4 of the Act of August 14, 1935, c.531, 49 Stat. 620, as amended (42 U.S.C. sections 302(b)(3) and 304);

(l) Subsection (t) of section 202 of the Act of August 14, 1935, c.531, 49 Stat. 620, as added by subsection (a) of section 118 of the Act of August 1, 1956, c.836, 70 Stat. 807, and as amended (42 U.S.C. section 402(t));

(m) Subsection (a)(4) of section 103 of Public Law 89-97, 79 Stat. 285, as amended (42 U.S.C. section 426a(a)(4));

(n) Subsection (a)(3) of section 228 of the Act of August 14, 1935, c.531, 49 Stat. 620, as added by subsection (a) of section 302 of Public Law 89-368, 80 Stat. 38, as amended (42 U.S.C. section 428(a)(3));

(o) Subsection (b)(2) of section 1002 and section 1004 of the Act of August 14, 1935, c.531, 49 Stat. 620, as amended (42 U.S.C. sections 1202(b)(2) and 1204);

(p) Subsection (b)(2) of section 1402 and section 1404 of the act of August 14, 1935, c.531, 49 Stat. 620, as added by section 351 of the Act of August 29, 1950, c.809, 64 Stat. 477 (42 U.S.C. sections 1352(b)(2) and 1354);

(q) Subsection (a)(1)(B) of section 1614 and subsection (a)(3) of section 1818 of the Act of August 14, 1935, c.531, 49 Stat. 620, as added by sections 301 and 202, respectively, of Public Law 92-603, 86 Stat. 1329, and as amended (42 U.S.C. sections 1382c(a)(1)(B) and 1395i-2(a)(3));

(r) Subsection (2) of section 1836 and subsection (b)(4) of section 1902 of the Act of August 14, 1935, c.531, 49 Stat. 620, as added by subsection (a) of section 102 and subsection (b) of section 121, respectively, of Public Law 89-97, 79 Stat. 285 (42 U.S.C. sections 1395o(2) and 1396a(b)(4));

(s) Subsection (b) of section 2 of the Act of August 16, 1941, c.357, 55 Stat. 622 (42 U.S.C. section 1652(b)).

(t) Subsection (c) of section 101 of the Act of December 2, 1942, c.668, 56 Stat. 1028, as amended (42 U.S.C. section 1701(c));

(u) Section 10 of the Act of May 10, 1950, c.171, 64 Stat. 149, as amended (42 U.S.C. section 1869);

(v) Subsection (c) of section 2 of Public Law 86-209, 73 Stat. 431 (42 U.S.C. section 1881(c)); and

(w) Section 2 of the Act of August 3, 1950, c.520, 64 Stat. 397 (42 U.S.C. section 1922).

GEOGRAPHIC APPLICABILITY OF LAWS UNAFFECTED

SEC. 8. Nothing in this Act shall extend to the Northern Mariana Islands any law not otherwise geographically applicable to or within the Northern Mariana Islands.

STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION

SEC. 9. Citizens of the Northern Mariana Islands shall be deemed citizens of the United States for purposes of any provision requiring United States citizenship as a prerequisite to receipt of any benefit, right, privilege, or immunity in any statute made applicable to the Northern Mariana Islands by the terms of that statute or by operation of the Covenant to Establish a Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands in Political Union with the United States of America (approved on March 24, 1976, by Public Law 94-241).

DEFINITION

SEC. 10. For purposes of this Act, "citizens of the Northern Mariana Islands" are those persons defined as United States citizens or United States nationals in section 8 of the Schedule on Transitional Matters of the Constitution of the Northern Mariana Islands, as approved by Presidential Proclamation 4534 of October 24, 1977.

EXPIRATION

SEC. 11. This Act and the rights and privileges extended hereunder shall expire upon establishment of the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands.

S. 2089

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Northern Mariana Islands shall not be considered "a foreign country" for purposes of subsection (k) of section 2680 of title 28, United States Code.

SEC. 2. This Act shall expire upon the establishment of the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands.

S. 2090

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 301 of the Clean Air Act (42 U.S.C. section 7601) is amended by adding a new subsection to read as follows:

"(d) The Administrator shall exempt the Northern Mariana Islands from any requirement imposed by this Act (or by regulations issued hereunder) on a finding by the Governor of the Northern Mariana Islands that the benefits of compliance with that requirement are to be significantly outweighed by the costs of compliance."

SEC. 2. Subsection (d) of section 302 of the Clean Air Act (42 U.S.C. section 7602(d)) is amended by adding, "except for purposes of part A of title II of this Act," before "the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands.".

NORTHERN MARIANA ISLANDS,
COMMISSION ON FEDERAL LAWS,
Washington, D.C., January 25, 1982.

Hon. GEORGE BUSH,
President of the Senate,
The Capitol, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I have the honor of submitting to you an interim report of the Northern Mariana Islands Commission on Federal Laws. The Commission, appointed by the President pursuant to section 504 of the Covenant to Establish a Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands in Political Union with the United States of America (approved by Public Law 94-241, 90 Stat. 263, March 24, 1976), is instructed "to survey the laws of the United States and to make recommendations to the United States Congress as to which laws of the United States not applicable to the Northern Mariana Islands should be made applicable and to what extent and in what manner, and which applicable laws should be made inapplicable and to what extent and in what manner."

The Commission is authorized, before submitting its final report, to "make such interim reports and recommendations to the Congress as it considers appropriate to facilitate the transition of the Northern Mariana Islands to its new political status." The enclosed report is such an interim report.

Legislation to implement the Commission's recommendations is incorporated within the report. The Commission urges the Congress to enact this legislation at its earliest opportunity.

Sincerely,

JAMES A. JOSEPH.

Enclosure.●

By Mr. CHAFEE:

S. 2092. A bill to amend section 280A of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to permit Members of Congress to deduct expenses incurred while away from home in pursuit of trade or business on the same basis as other taxpayers; to the Committee on Finance.

REPEALING CERTAIN TAX DEDUCTIONS FOR MEMBERS OF CONGRESS

● Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to repeal the authority of the Internal Revenue Service to grant Members of Congress a per diem tax deduction for unsubstantiated business expenses. My bill will require Members of Congress to deduct expenses on exactly the same basis as other taxpayers.

Over the past 4 months, the Senate has changed the rules for deducting congressional business expenses on two occasions, once during debate on the first continuing resolution in September and again just before we adjourned sine die in December. Let me briefly review the legislative history.

In 1954, Congress passed a law allowing each Member of Congress to deduct $3,000 from his/her salary to offset the cost of maintaining a second residence in the Washington area. This exemption was allowed regardless of actual expenses and was not subject to audit by the IRS. In September 1981, Congress voted to remove the $3,000 deduction, thereby requiring the Members to itemize their legitimate business expenses, just as any other taxpayer would do.

I supported this action because I do not believe Members of Congress should be treated differently from other taxpayers. Enacting special tax laws just for Senators and Congressmen is wrong on principle and creates public distrust of elected representatives. They should itemize business expenses under the rules applicable to every other citizen and be subject to the same IRS scrutiny faced by every other taxpayer.

In December, however, Congress legislated once again on this subject. An amendment passed, which I and 43 Senators voted against, requiring the IRS to draft special regulations establishing an amount that Members of Congress can deduct for expenses without proving the expenses were actually made. IRS has set that amount at $75 for every day, and many weekends in between the days, that Congress is in session. No other American is blessed with such privilege.

This new provision is a direct contradiction to the principle we sought to establish in September by removing the $3,000 limit. In these times of fiscal austerity, when Congress has voted to cut sharply in many important domestic spending areas, we are creating a double standard: Benefits for Congressmen and benefit cuts for everyone else. These legislative actions have not escaped public notice. Let me quote from letters which my constituents have sent me on this matter. They speak more eloquently than I can:

As hard working, productive citizens, we feel that we must go on record as notifying you that we find this (tax break) to be an unconscionable and reckless proposal in the face of all the cuts being put into effect by our President which are particularly destructive to the poor and elderly who are suffering from the rigors of a harsh winter.

I am writing to express my surprise and disappointment with the manner in which Congress underhandedly voted itself a raise by providing for tax breaks and allowances to which no other citizen is entitled . . . how do you think this makes the average American, who has no control of the constant tug on his or her tax dollar, feel; and

Who are you to present yourselves as an insulated class of the effects of inflation and taxation that your peers must face?

Mr. President, the law on the subject of business tax deductions should be neutral. Members of Congress should enjoy no special tax privileges nor bear any added burden. Having consistently voted with these objectives in mind, I urge my colleagues to cosponsor and support my bill.●

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS

S. 256

At the request of Mr. PERCY, the Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. KASTEN) and the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. HEINZ) were added as cosponsors of S. 256, a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to eliminate the requirement that a member of the Armed Forces maintain a household in the United States to be eligible for an earned income credit.

S. 439

At the request of Mr. MATTINGLY, the Senator from Florida (Mrs. HAWKINS) was added as a cosponsor of S. 439, a bill to restrict bail pending appeal where the conviction involves a drug-related offense.

S. 1323

At the request of Mr. TSONGAS, the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1323, a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 with respect to the residential energy and investment tax energy credits, and for other purposes.

S. 1590

At the request of Mr. THURMOND, the Senator from Washington (Mr. JACKSON) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1590, a bill to amend title 10, United States Code, to provide for legal assistance to members of the Armed Forces and their dependents, and for other purposes.

S. 1645

At the request of Mr. MOYNIHAN, the Senator from Arizona (Mr. DECONCINI), and the Senator from Montana (Mr. BAUCUS) were added as cosponsors of S. 1645, a bill to let funds in individual retirement accounts be used to purchase collectibles.

S. 1678

At the request of Mr. HATCH, the Senator from Utah (Mr. GARN), the Senator from Alabama (Mr. HEFLIN), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), and the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. BURDICK) were added as cosponsors of S. 1678, a bill to amend the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 with regard to mortgage investments.

S. 1698

At the request of Mr. DENTON, the Senator from New York (Mr. MOYNIHAN) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1698, a bill to amend the Immigration and Nationality Act to provide preferential treatment in the admission of certain children of U.S. Armed Forces personnel.

S. 1748

At the request of Mr. HATCH, the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. COCHRAN), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. DURENBERGER), the Senator from California (Mr. HAYAKAWA), the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. JEPSEN), the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. ZORINSKY), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. SYMMS), and the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. BOSCHWITZ) were added as cosponsors of S. 1748, a bill to exempt certain fixed contribution multiemployer pension plans from title IV of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974.

S. 1812

At the request of Mr. PERCY, the Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON), the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. ZORINSKY), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. BUMPERS), the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. WILLIAMS), and the Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH) were added as cosponsors of S. 1812, a bill to insure congressional approval for the use of commercial irradiated fuel and to support the Nonproliferation Treaty.

S. 1817

At the request of Mr. MOYNIHAN, the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1817, a bill to further the national security of the United States and the Nation's economy by providing grants for foreign language programs to improve foreign language study for elementary and secondary school students and to provide for per capita grants to reimburse institutions of higher education for part of the costs of providing foreign language instruction.

S. 1844

At the request of Mr. JOHNSTON, the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. NICKLES) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1844, a bill to facilitate the national distribution and utilization of coal.

S. 1896

At the request of Mr. PELL, the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BIDEN) and the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BOREN) were added as cosponsors of S. 1896, a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to repeal the special leasing provisions enacted by the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981.

S. 1907

At the request of Mr. ROTH, the Senator from Florida (Mrs. HAWKINS) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1907, a bill to amend the Currency and Foreign Transactions Reporting Act and section 1961(1) of title 18, United States Code, to improve enforcement, and for other purposes.

S. 1943

At the request of Mr. SCHMITT, the Senator from Georgia (Mr. MATTINGLY), the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. EAST), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. GRASSLEY), the Senator from Florida (Mrs. HAWKINS), and the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. COCHRAN) were added as cosponsors of S. 1943, to increase the penalties for smuggling quantities of marihuana exceeding 1,000 pounds.

S. 2010

At the request of Mr. BOREN, the Senator from Montana (Mr. BAUCUS), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. SIMPSON), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL), the Senator from Georgia (Mr. NUNN), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. STENNIS), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. RUDMAN), the Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. PROXMIRE), and the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS) were added as cosponsors of S. 2010, a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to eliminate the special leasing provisions of the accelerated cost recovery system.

S. 2027

At the request of Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD, the Senator from Montana (Mr. MELCHER), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), the Senator from Indiana (Mr. LUGAR), and the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. FORD) were added as cosponsors of S. 2027, a bill to provide for an accelerated study of the causes and effects of acid precipitation, to provide for an examination of certain acid precursor control technologies, and for other purposes.

S. 2048

At the request of Mr. CRANSTON, the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. HUMPHREY) was added as a cosponsor of S. 2048, a bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to restore eligibility for burial benefits in the case of certain veterans of war whose bodies are not claimed, and for other purposes.

S. 2057

At the request of Mr. KASTEN, the Senator from New York (Mr. D'AMATO) and the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. PRESSLER) were added as cosponsors of S. 2057, a bill to amend title 49, United States Code.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 131

At the request of Mr. EXON, the Senator from Indiana (Mr. LUGAR), the Senator from New York (Mr. D'AMATO), and the Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON) were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 131, a joint resolution designating "National Theatre Week".

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 138

At the request of Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD, the Senator from Indiana (Mr. LUGAR), the Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON), and the Senator from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN) were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 138, a joint resolution to authorize and request the President to designate the week of April 18, 1982, through April 24, 1982, as "National Coin Week."

AMENDMENT NO. 1244

At the request of Mr. RANDOLPH, the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER) was added as a cosponsor of amendment No. 1244 intended to be proposed to Senate Resolution 20, a resolution providing for television and radio coverage of proceedings of the Senate.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 65—TO PROTECT THE NATION'S ELDERLY FROM PROPOSED FISCAL YEAR 1983 BUDGET CUTS

Mr. PRESSLER submitted the following concurrent resolution, which was referred to the Committee on the Budget:

S. CON. RES. 65

Whereas the elderly of this nation have spent a lifetime paying taxes; and

Whereas inflation and rising energy costs impact especially hard on retired persons: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that no reductions will be approved by Congress in the 1983 budget for Federal programs affecting the elderly, including medicare, without corresponding reductions in defense funding.

● Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, as a supporter of President Reagan's economic program, I am concerned that the 1983 budget submission indicates a reduction in programs for the elderly, including a 5-percent cut in medicare.

While I am also an advocate of a strong national defense, I do not believe that we should slight our senior citizens in attempts to reduce the budget.

Many of our Nation's elderly are worried about how they are going to survive the winter with high home heating costs. Rightly or wrongly, they are deeply troubled about the continued solvency of social security. The present budget proposal only adds to their sense of uncertainty. Regardless of what state the economy is in later this year, the concerns of the elderly will be a key issue in this fall's elections.

Mr. President, I believe that the Senate should go on record early in support of elderly programs. We should not put our senior citizens through months of uncertainty regarding the funding of Federal programs while we debate the budget. I am, therefore, today submitting a sense of the Congress resolution stating that no reductions will be approved by Congress in the 1983 budget for Federal programs affecting the elderly, including medicare, without corresponding reductions in defense funding.●

REFERRAL OF SENATE RESOLUTION 313

Senate Resolution 313 expressing the sense of the Senate that the Congress should expeditiously consider making an urgent supplemental appropriation for the Department of Labor for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982, which was ordered held at the desk February 4, 1982, until the close of business February 9, 1982, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED FOR PRINTING

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE AUTHORIZATION ACT, 1982

AMENDMENT NO. 1255

(Ordered to be printed and lie on the table.)

Mr. DOLE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 951) to authorize appropriations for the purpose of carrying out the activities of the Department of Justice for fiscal year 1982, and for other purposes.

AGENT IDENTITIES ACT

AMENDMENT NO. 1256

(Ordered to be printed and lie on the table.)

Mr. CHAFEE (for himself, Mr. JACKSON, Mr. ABDNOR, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. DENTON, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. EAST, Mr. GARN, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. GOLDWATER, Mr. HATCH, Mrs. HAWKINS, Mr. HELMS, Mr. LAXALT, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. MATTINGLY, Mr. NICKLES, Mr. SCHMITT, Mr. SIMPSON, Mr. SYMMS, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. TOWER, Mr. WALLOP, and Mr. WARNER) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them to the bill (S. 391) to amend the National Security Act of 1947 to prohibit the unauthorized disclosure of information identifying certain U.S. intelligence officers, agents, informants, and sources.

BROADCAST DEREGULATION ACT OF 1981

AMENDMENT NO. 1257

(Ordered to be printed and lie on the table.)

Mr. PRESSLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1629) to amend the Communications Act of 1934 to encourage and develop marketplace competition in the provision of certain broadcast services and to provide certain deregulation of such broadcast services, and for other purposes.

● Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, today I am submitting an amendment to S. 1629, legislation which deregulates certain aspects of the broadcasting industry. My amendment directs the Senate to include certain provisions of S. 898, the Domestic Telecommunications Act, in any conference report on telecommunications deregulation agreed to with the House.

I am submitting this amendment because I feel strongly that we must guarantee the continuation of our national policy to provide universal telephone service at reasonable rates, particularly in rural areas. Because of long distances and seasonal bad weather, Americans in rural areas are particularly dependent on telephone service. Senior citizens in our rural States rely on their telephones to maintain their independent lifestyles in their own homes.

There has been much speculation about the possibility of local telephone rate increases in light of the recent proposed settlement between A.T. & T. and the Justice Department. Throughout the Senate's debate on S. 898 last fall, this question was a major issue and my colleagues are already familiar with the arguments. There are several provisions in S. 898 which were offered as solutions to this potential problem. Section 202(e) authorizes the Federal Communications Commission to adopt a procedure such as a surcharge system on access charges in an effort to avoid astronomical rate increases for basic telephone service. Section 222(i) directs the FCC to insure that rural telephone interexchange and exchange rates will not exceed 110 percent of the national average for similar services.

My amendment directs the Senate, in any future conference with the House on telephone deregulation legislation, to maintain the Senate's position regarding these two sections of S. 898. I believe this amendment is necessary to demonstrate the Senate's commitment to affordable rural telephone service and I urge my colleagues to support this language.●

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE AUTHORIZATION ACT, 1982

AMENDMENT NO. 1258

(Ordered to be printed and lie on the table.)

Mr. GORTON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 951) to authorize appropriations for the purpose of carrying out the activities of the Department of Justice for fiscal year 1982, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENTS NO. 1259 AND 1260

(Ordered to be printed and lie on the table.)

Mr. JOHNSTON submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 951) supra.

CRIMINAL CODE REFORM ACT OF 1981

AMENDMENTS NO. 1261 THROUGH NO. 1266

(Ordered to be printed and lie on the table.)

Mr. SYMMS submitted six amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1630) to codify, revise, and reform title 18 of the United States Code, and for other purposes.

REGULATORY REFORM ACT

AMENDMENT NO. 1267

(Ordered to be printed and lie on the table).

Mr. DECONCINI (for himself, Mr. SIMPSON, Mr. HATCH, and Mr. ZORINSKY) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them to the bill (S. 1080) to amend the Administrative Procedures Act to require Federal agencies to analyze the effects of rules to improve their effectiveness and to decrease their compliance costs; to provide for a periodic review of regulations, and for other purposes.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I am today submitting as a printed amendment to S. 1080 language to amend various venue statutes of the United States Code. Through these amendments I hope to put in place the principle that cases involving the Federal Government or agency rulings should be heard in a locale where there is a significant impact and not in a forum far removed from where the impact of a decision will be felt.

I, together with several of my distinguished colleagues on the Committee on the Judiciary such as Senators LAXALT, SIMPSON, and HATCH, have had a great interest in this subject matter for the past several years since some egregious examples of forum shopping came to our attention. During the past Congress, hearings were held on bills introduced by Senator LAXALT and myself before the Courts Subcommittee. The result was S. 3023 of the 96th Congress which was approved by the Judiciary Committee but never brought before the full Senate. The language of this amendment includes major portions of that bill and extends its application to other than simply environmental matters. For instance, much of the seminal work on the 28 U.S.C. 1391(e) district court amendments, was done by Senator SIMPSON and with his approval and cosponsorship has been added to the venue revision encompassed by the amendment.

Within the past decade we have witnessed a growing disillusionment with the concentration of power in our Federal Government in Washington. A part of this feeling has been the consequence of actions taken by judges in the Federal courts of the District of Columbia in cases which had little or no impact on the residents of Washington, but which deeply affected the lives of citizens living thousands of miles away from the Capital. In many of our States, these judges are viewed as just another extension of the Federal Government, and their rulings are viewed suspiciously as just another attempt by the Federal Government to intrude upon the lives of the people. I know that the people of Arizona or Nevada would feel much better and have a much greater sense of participating in our Government's workings if it were judges in those States, or the ninth circuit, that were making the decisions that affected their lives, particularly in those situations where they are the only people affected.

I hope to receive the support of all of my colleagues who believe that their district of circuit court judges are equally as competent to hear cases and render justice as are judges of the District of Columbia; I hope to receive support from all those who believe that democracy is best served by facilitating the participation of the people affected by actions of their Government; I hope to receive the support of all those who do not want to place their constituents in the difficult position of possibly being forced into a distant forum, such as the District of Columbia, to adjudicate their grievances against the Government. This amendment will complete the effort begun two decades ago in the Mandamus and Venue Act of 1962 to return justice to the people and not force them to come to Washington, D.C. This amendment will return the wheels of justice to the four corners of the country and dissolve Washington, D.C., courts as the hub of litigation affecting people and interests far removed from the Nation's Capital when there is no significant impact on the people of the District.

Special interest groups that have made Washington, D.C., the center for their operations will not be pleased at the thought of having to go to those parts of the country where the results of their litigation will have a great impact, but I believe it will be educational for them to realize the great plurality of feelings that exist west of the Potomac. Whereas, it may be slightly more inconvenient for lawyers of these special interest groups to litigate a case in Cheyenne, Wyo., that must be balanced against the greater convenience that will obtain for the attorneys of Wyoming and the greater opportunity to observe the workings of justice that will be available to the people of that State.

I have shared the language of this amendment with many interested parties and many valid suggestions for change have resulted. I hope by having the amendment printed and a detailed explanation of my fears and reasoning placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that further perfecting suggestions will come to my attention so that when S. 1080 is raised this amendment will have reached a point of technical and policy perfection to allow its ready adoption by this body.

I ask unanimous consent that my amendment be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMENDMENT No. 1267

On page 39, strike lines 9 through 13, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(3) Any court in which a proceeding with respect to any agency action is pending, including any court selected pursuant to a system of random selection pursuant to paragraph (1), may, in the interests of justice, transfer such proceeding to any other court of appeals and shall, upon motion by any party thereto, transfer such proceeding to the court of appeals for a circuit in which the action under review would have a substantially greater impact, unless the interests of justice require the court to—

"(A) retain such proceedings, or

"(B) transfer the proceedings to a circuit other than one in which the impact would be substantially greater.

"(4) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a petition for review of any agency rule reviewable directly in a circuit court of appeals may be filed in the judicial circuit in which the person seeking review resides or has its principal place of business.".

On page 39, after line 25, insert the following:

(c) (1) Section 1391 of title 28, United States Code, is amended—

(A) by amending subsection (e) to read as follows:

"(e) A civil action in which a defendant is an officer or employee of the United States or any agency thereof acting in his official capacity or under color of legal authority, or an agency of the United States, or the United States, may, except as otherwise provided by law, be brought only in a judicial district in which—

"(1) a defendant in the action resides;

"(2) the cause of action arose;

"(3) any real property involved in the action is situated; or

"(4) the plaintiff resides if no real property is involved in the action, except that no such action may be brought in a judicial district pursuant to paragraph (1) or (4) hereof unless the agency action or failure to act that is the subject of the lawsuit would substantially affect the residents of that judicial district. A cause of action pursuant to paragraph (2) hereof shall be deemed to arise in the judicial district or districts in which the residents would be substantially affected by the agency action or failure to act that is the subject of the lawsuit."; and

(B) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(g)(1) In any action brought in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia under subsection (e) that may be an action of a local environmental nature as defined in paragraph (3) of this subsection, the plaintiff shall, at the time the action is filed—

"(A) forward a copy of the complaint to the attorney general of each State in which a judicial district described in paragraph (3) of this subsection is located, subject to the limitation provided in paragraph (2); and

"(B) file a statement with the clerk of the court indicating compliance with the requirements of subparagraph (A).

"(2) The provisions of paragraph (1)(A) do not require the plaintiff to forward a copy of the complaint to more than five State attorneys general.

"(3) An action is an action of a local environmental nature if—

"(A) the action primarily affects local or regional interests in one or more contiguous judicial districts other than the district in which the action was originally filed; and

"(B) the action arises under any Act of Congress pertaining to wildlife, public lands, water rights, or any other Act of Congress relating to environmental quality.

"(4) Compliance with this subsection does not constitute an admission by the plaintiff that the action is an action of a local environmental nature as defined in paragraph (3) of this subsection. Failure to comply with this subsection may be cause, in the discretion of the court, for appropriate sanctions, including dismissal of the action without prejudice.".

(2) Nothing in the amendments made by paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be construed to affect venue in an action relating to civil rights.

(d) Section 1404 of title 28, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subsection (a) by inserting before the period the following: ", except that the court shall transfer actions described in subsection (e) of this section in accordance with that subsection"; and

(2) by inserting at the end thereof the following:

"(e) In any civil action in which a defendant is an officer or employee of the United States or any agency thereof acting in his official capacity or under color of legal authority, or the defendant is an agency of the United States, or the United States, a district court shall, upon motion of any party thereto, transfer the action to a district or division, where the action might have been brought, and in which the action would have a substantially greater impact, unless the interests of justice require the court to—

"(1) retain the action, or

"(2) transfer the action to a district or division other than one in which the impact would be substantially greater.".

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE URGENT SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS

AMENDMENT NO. 1268

(Ordered to be printed.)

Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. QUAYLE, and Mr. MATTINGLY) proposed an amendment to the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 389) making an urgent supplemental appropriation for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982, for the Department of Agriculture.

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

SUBCOMMITTEE ON WATER AND POWER

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the information of the Senate and the public that S. 1553 has been added to the agenda of the hearing schedules before the Subcommittee on Water and Power for Friday, February 12. S. 1553 authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to proceed with development of the web pipeline, to provide for the study of South Dakota water projects to be developed in lieu of the Oahe and Pollock-Herreid irrigation projects, and to make available Missouri Basin pumping power to projects authorized by the Flood Control Act of 1944 to receive such power.

For further information regarding this hearing you may wish to contact Mr. Russell Brown of the subcommittee staff at 224-2366.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the information of the Senate and the public the scheduling of a public hearing before the Senate Select Committee on Indian Affairs.

The hearing is an oversight hearing and will be held in Phoenix, Ariz., on February 15, 1982, in the Maricopa County Board of Supervisors Auditorium at Third Avenue and Jefferson Street. The hearing will begin at 8 a.m. and testimony is invited regarding the impact of fiscal year 1982 budget reductions in Indian Health Service funded and operated programs on Phoenix, Navajo, and Tucson IHS area Indian tribes.

For further information regarding the hearing, you may wish to contact John Mulkey at 224-4521. Those who wish to submit a written statement for the hearing record should write to the Senate Select Committee on Indian Affairs, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C. 20510.

Mr. President, I would like to announce for the information of the Senate and the public, the scheduling of a public field hearing before the Select Committee on Indian Affairs, chaired by Senator JOHN MELCHER.

The hearing is scheduled for February 12, 1982, beginning at 9 a.m. in the Yellowstone County Court House, 27th and 3d Avenue, North, Billings, Mont. 59101. Testimony is invited regarding S. 1894, a bill to permit Indian tribes to enter into certain agreements for the disposition of tribal mineral resources, and for other purposes.

For further information regarding the hearing you may wish to contact Virginia Boylan or Max Richtman of the committee staff on 224-2251. Those wishing to testify or who wish to submit a written statement for the hearing record should write to the Select Committee on Indian Affairs, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C. 20510.

Mr. President, I would like to announce for the information of the Senate and the public, the scheduling of an open business meeting before the Senate Select Committee on Indian Affairs.

An open business meeting is scheduled for February 11, 1982, beginning at 10 a.m., in room 4232 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building. The following is to be considered for markup: S. 159, a bill to authorize the exchange of certain land held by the Navajo Tribe and the Bureau of Land Management; S. 503, a bill to authorize the purchase, sale, and exchange of lands by the Devils Lake Sioux Tribe of the Dveils Lake Sioux Reservation, N. Dak.; S. 563, a bill to authorize the States and Indian tribes to enter into mutual agreements and compacts respecting jurisdiction and governmental operations in Indian country; S. 792, a bill to promote the development of Native American culture and art; S. 1340, a bill to provide for the use and distribution of Clallam judgment funds in Docket No. 134 before the Indian Claims Commission; S. 1468, a bill to provide for the designation of the Burns Paiute Indian Tribe as the beneficiary of a public domain allotment, and to provide that all future similarly situated lands in Harney County, Oreg., will be held in trust by the United States for the benefit of the Burns Paiute Indian Colony; S. 1779, a bill to authorize the exchange of certain land held in trust by the United States for the Navajo Tribe; and, S. 1986, a bill to provide for the use and distribution of funds awarded the Blackfeet and Gros Ventre Tribes of Indians and the Assiniboine Tribe of the Fort Belknap Indian Community, and others, in Dockets Nos. 250-A and 279-C by the U.S. Court of Claims.

For further information regarding the business meeting, you may wish to contact Timothy C. Woodcock of the committee staff on 224-2251.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO MEET

SUBCOMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND REFUGEE POLICY

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Immigration and Refugee Policy, of the Judiciary Committee, be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate at 2 p.m. on Tuesday, February 9, to discuss proposed changes in the refugee assistance regulations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON INTELLIGENCE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Intelligence Committee be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate at 10 a.m. on Wednesday, February 10, to receive an intelligence briefing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

RECOGNIZING THE FUTURE FARMERS OF AMERICA DURING FFA WEEK

● Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, in 1972, I was honored to be the first member of the U.S. Senate to become a life member of the National Future Farmers of America Alumni Association. The organization is one of the supportive organizations of the Future Farmers of America, or the FFA as it is commonly known.

The Smith-Hughes Act of 1917 laid the groundwork and foundation for the teaching of vocational agriculture in high schools across this Nation, a vital part of our educational programs in the United States. The FFA, a vocational student organization, is an integral part of the instructional program in vocational agriculture/agribusiness.

Since its humble beginnings 55 years ago, the FFA has endeavored to aid in the preparation of young men and women for careers in the industry of agriculture. The organization, now boasting nearly 500,000 students in over 8,000 schools throughout the United States, has successfully prepared these young people for roles of leadership in the agricultural industry. It has given us producers and suppliers of agricultural products. It has given us community and business leaders, Senators, Representatives, Governors, commissioners of agriculture, and a President of the United States.

Having had several opportunities to address the Future Farmers, I have seen dedication and skills instilled in our young people as they attempt to provide even greater vitality to this Nation's most vital and basic industry, the industry of agriculture.

During the week of February 20-27, the nearly one-half million Future Farmers in all 50 States and Puerto Rico will celebrate National FFA Week. This week commemorates the birthday of a great leader and a fine agriculturalist, George Washington. By following the example of George Washington, Future Farmers have made outstanding contributions to our agricultural industry by providing food, fiber, services, and leadership, I think it is only fitting to recognize the accomplishments of these young men and women across our Nation during National FFA Week.

I am confident that Future Farmers of America will continue to "Grow for America," and encourage my colleagues to support this fine organization in attaining its worthy goals.

Recognizing that an organization is only as strong as its leadership, I ask to have the following list of FFA leaders printed in the RECORD:

BOARD OF STUDENT OFFICERS—TEXAS

President, Rafe Foreman, Idalou.

Vice presidents: Steven Ray, Robert Lee, Kelly White, Sam Houston, Houston; Mark Bland, Merkel; Kreg Roberts, Honey Grove; Mike Smith, Van; Coby Loessberg, Boerne; Todd Staples, Palestine; Kevin Maxwell, Grapeland; and, Wil Galloway, Beeville.

Board of directors: G. G. Scroggins, State Advisor, Austin; Durwin Hill, Executive Secretary, Austin; Jeff Davis, Crockett; Billy Steelhammer, Corpus Christi; Jay Eudy, Plainview; Hulan Harris, Big Spring; Joe Correa, Mission; O. L. Christi, Idalou; Rodney Flanagan, Ballinger; and Charles Yarbrough, Honey Grove.

NATIONAL OFFICERS

National President, Scott Neasham, Newton, Iowa; National Secretary, John Pope, Maiden, North Carolina; National Vice Presidents, Scott Watson, Gallatin, Missouri; Melanie Burgess, Harrisonburg, Virginia; Randy Hedge, Grannis, Arkansas; Jack Stewart, Douglas, Wyoming.

Board of directors: Chairman, Byron F. Rawls; Members of the Board, John W. Bunten, Curtis Corbin, Jr., Ralph Dreessen, Larry Nelson, Duane Nielsen, James A. Shaeffer, Les Thompson, J. W. Warren.

National staff: National Advisor, Chief Executive Officer, Byron Rawls; Executive Secretary, Coleman Harris; National Treasurer, J. M. Campbell; Administrative Director, Edward J. Hawkins; Manager of International Programs, Lennie Gamage; FFA Program Specialist (Awards), Robert Seefeldt; FFA Program Specialist (Contests), Ted Amick; FFA Program Specialist (Leadership), Tony Hoyt; Director of Information, Cameron Dubes; Director of FFA Supply Service, Harry J. Andrews; Manager, Computer Services, George Verzagt; Executive Director FFA Alumni Association, Robert W. Cox.●

SENATOR DAN QUAYLE—OUTSTANDING YOUNG MAN

● Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, for nearly four decades, the U.S. Jaycees have annually extended special recognition to 10 outstanding young men as examples of the important contributions that young persons can make in today's world.

The criteria the judges have used over the years to select candidates for this honor include extraordinary performance over an extended period of time, selfless devotion to a cause, principle or duty, or a single act of courage or bold leadership.

The Jaycees honored me by placing me on their list in 1974. Because I know how special the award really is, it gives me great pleasure to inform my colleagues that among the recipients this year was Senator DAN QUAYLE of Indiana.

I ask that the synopsis of Senator QUAYLE's outstanding career which the Jaycees included with their announcement of his selection be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

I am certain that all Senators agree with me that the Jaycees made an excellent selection by including Senator QUAYLE on their list.

The synopsis follows:

SENATOR DAN QUAYLE

Dan Quayle got into government at the state level after a stint in the newspaper business as associate publisher of the Huntington Herald Press in his Indiana home town. He went to work in the state attorney general's office, spent two years as administrative assistant to Indiana Governor Edgar Whitcomb and later worked in the state revenue department. During his four years of state service, he obtained his attorney's degree by attending night classes.

In addition to his Juris Doctorate from the Indiana University School of Law, Quayle holds a bachelor's degree in political science from Depauw University of Greencastle, Ind.

In 1976, the Indiana Republican was elected to the U.S. House, upsetting a 16-year incumbent. He won his Senate seat in 1980—again in a campaign that was all uphill—unseating Sen. Birch Bayh, who had served for 18 years.

Not one to shy away from getting his feet wet too quickly, Quayle plunged into the senatorial waters immediately after taking office—becoming the first freshman Senator to have a bill signed into law by President Reagan. That bill continued the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA) program for another year, with new safeguards to reduce wastefulness and fraud.

Quayle, who chairs the Senate Subcommittee on Employment and Productivity, believes the federal government should retain a limited involvement in youth job programs for the "hard-core unemployed," and promote further youth employment opportunities through private initiatives and state and local governments.

Ironically, while he is an attorney, Quayle sometimes wishes the Senate were made up of fewer barristers and more businessmen, especially where balancing the budget is concerned.

The Indianapolis native is concerned that cynicism has eroded many government programs due to "the idea that the federal government is somewhat arrogant and aloof, and only wants to regulate." Feeling those complaints are somewhat justified, Quayle wants to help make government more flexible and decentralized, "oriented toward states' rights and local community concerns."

Quayle's wife, Marilyn, is also an attorney. They have three children—Tucker, Benjamin and Corrine.●

TRIBUTE TO JOSEPH D. DUFFEY, FORMER CHAIRMAN, NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE HUMANITIES

● Mr. PELL. Mr. President, at a time when the contributions of the Federal Government to the vitality and wellbeing of our people and institutions are being questioned, when not actually denied, I beg leave to draw attention to the distinguished services rendered to the commonwealth by Joseph D. Duffey during his recently completed term as chairman of the National Endowment for the Humanities.

When in September 1977 Joseph Duffey appeared before our Committee on Human Resources in order that we might examine his qualifications for that post, one of his sponsors informed the committee that he had known and worked with Mr. Duffey for many years. "Mr. Duffey," he said, "has demonstrated an extraordinary ability to organize, to lead, and to inspire others in pursuit of worthwhile goals. * * * Of all the years I have known Joe Duffey, everything he does, he does well. Everything he does is done with a commitment and with the highest degree of integrity." In the 4 years and a few months of his term of office, Mr. Duffey has abundantly proved the accuracy of that description, and added to it achievements in the management of the National Endowment for the Humanities of notable benefit to scholars and the public alike.

At that 1977 hearing before the Committee on Human Resources Mr. Duffey stated his view of the two chief interests and objectives of the Federal Government in the area of the humanities. "The first," he said, "is to promote excellence and to encourage achievement. The second is to make opportunities for learning and insight, and the activity in the humanities available to an ever-widening circle of the public." To this definition, he added the wise caution, "In pursuit of these objectives, Federal activity must be conducted with a deft hand and a sensitivity to particular problems."

As Chairman of the Endowment, Mr. Duffey promoted excellence and encouraged achievement. He made opportunities for learning and insight, and the activity in the humanities, available to an ever-widening circle of the public. In short, he pursued the interests and objectives of the Federal Government, as defined, to the benefit of all. In so doing, he was profoundly sensitive to particular problems and he conducted the activity of the Endowment with precisely the deft hand he had advised was essential.

The National Endowment for the Humanities is a small Federal agency, but as we all know, the shortcomings of bureaucracy are not confined to large agencies—nor to the public sector. Joseph Duffey rationalized and greatly improved the administration of the Endowment during his term, to the benefit of, among others, the public purse. And he did so, to put it in the words of the late E. F. Schumacher, counseling economists to practice their discipline, "as if people mattered." For Mr. Duffey made it clear in his administration that above all it is people who matter.

In all of these achievements, Mr. Duffey advanced the cause—sometimes overlooked these days—of civility in both public and private discourse. The questioning of others' motives, the sensational accusation, rhetorical violence, the bending of accuracy to partisan advantage, were not for him. He instinctively acknowledged in others the integrity which is part and parcel of his own character and his performance.

I would therefore like to record gratitude for Mr. Duffey's contributions. They have dignified the public service, they have honored the Federal role in our national life, and, above all, they have served the people. We await, and shall welcome, his return to public life.●

RULES OF THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

● Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, in accordance with the requirement of Senate rule XXVI to publish the rules of each Senate committee in the RECORD not later than March 1 of each year, I submit the procedural rules of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

The procedural rules are as follows:

RULES OF THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

GENERAL RULES

Rule 1. The Standing Rules of the Senate as supplemented by these rules, are adopted as the rules of the Committee and its Subcommittees.

MEETINGS OF THE COMMITTEE

Rule 2. (a) The Committee shall meet on the third Wednesday of each month while the Congress is in session for the purpose of conducting business, unless, for the convenience of Members, the Chairman shall set some other day for a meeting. Additional meetings may be called by the Chairman as he may deem necessary.

(b) Business meetings of any Subcommittee may be called by the Chairman of such Subcommittee, Provided, That no Subcommittee meeting or hearing other than a field hearing, shall be scheduled or held concurrently with a full Committee meeting or hearing, unless a majority of the Committee concurs in such concurrent meeting or hearing.

OPEN HEARINGS AND MEETINGS

Rule 3. (a) Hearings and business meetings of the Committee or any Subcommittee shall be open to the public except when the Committee or such Subcommittee by majority vote orders a closed hearing or meeting.

(b) A transcript shall be kept of each hearing of the Committee or any Subcommittee.

(c) A transcript shall be kept of each business meeting of the Committee or any Subcommittee unless a majority of the Committee or the Subcommittee involved agrees that some other form of permanent record is preferable.

HEARING PROCEDURE

Rule 4. (a) Public notice shall be given of the date, place, and subject matter of any hearing to be held by the Committee or any Subcommittee at least one week in advance of such hearing unless the Chairman of the full Committee or the Subcommittee involved determines that the hearing is noncontroversial or that special circumstances require expedited procedures and a majority of the Committee or Subcommittee involved concurs. In no case shall a hearing be conducted with less than twenty-four hours notice.

(b) Each witness who is to appear before the Committee or any Subcommittee shall file with the Committee or Subcommittee, at least 24 hours in advance of the hearing, a written statement of his or her testimony in as many copies as the Chairman of the Committee or Subcommittee prescribes.

(c) Each Member shall be limited to five minutes in the questioning of any witness until such time as all Members who so desire have had an opportunity to question the witness.

(d) The Chairman and ranking Minority Member or the ranking Majority and Minority Members present at the hearing may each appoint one Committee staff member to question each witness. Such staff member may question the witness only after all Members present have completed their questioning of the witness or at such other time as the Chairman and the ranking Majority and Minority Members present may agree.

BUSINESS MEETING AGENDA

Rule 5. (a) A legislative measure or subject shall be included on the agenda of the next following business meeting of the full Committee or any Subcommittee if a written request for such inclusion has been filed with the Chairman of the Committee or Subcommittee at least one week prior to such meeting. Nothing in this rule shall be construed to limit the authority of the Chairman of the Committee or Subcommittee to include legislative measures or subjects on the Committee or Subcommittee agenda in the absence of such request.

(b) The agenda for any business meeting of the Committee or any Subcommittee shall be provided to each Member and made available to the public at least three days prior to such meeting, and no new items may be added after the agenda is so published except by the approval of a majority of the Members of the Committee or Subcommittee. The Staff Director shall promptly notify absent Members of any action taken by the Committee or any Subcommittee on matters not included on the published agenda.

QUORUMS

Rule 6. (a) Except as provided in subsections (b), (c), and (d), seven Members shall constitute a quorum for the conduct of business of the Committee.

(b) No measure or matter shall be ordered reported from the Committee unless eleven Members of the Committee are actually present at the time such action is taken.

(c) Except as provided in subsection (d), one-third of the Subcommittee Members shall constitute a quorum for the conduct of business of any Subcommittee.

(d) One Member shall constitute a quorum for the purpose of conducting a hearing or taking testimony on any measure or matter before the Committee or any Subcommittee.

VOTING

Rule 7. (a) A roll call of the Members shall be taken upon the request of any Member. Any Member who does not vote on any roll call at the time the roll is called, may vote (in person or by proxy) on that roll call at any later time during the same business meeting.

(b) Proxy voting shall be permitted on all matters, except that proxies may not be counted for the purpose of determining the presence of a quorum. Unless further limited, a proxy shall be exercised only upon the date for which it is given and upon the items published in the agenda for that date.

(c) Each Committee report shall set forth the vote on the motion to report the measure or matter involved. Unless the Committee directs otherwise, the report will not set out any votes on amendments offered during Committee consideration. Any Member who did not vote on any roll call shall have the opportunity to have his position recorded in the appropriate Committee record or Committee report.

(d) The Committee vote to report a measure to the Senate shall also authorize the staff of the Committee to make necessary technical and clerical corrections in the measure.

SUBCOMMITTEES

Rule 8. (a) The number of Members assigned to each Subcommittee and the division between majority and minority Members shall be fixed by the Chairman in consultation with the ranking minority Member.

(b) Assignment of Members to subcommittees shall, insofar as possible, reflect the preferences of the Members. No Member will receive assignment to a second Subcommittee until, in order of seniority, all Members of the Committee have chosen assignments to one Subcommittee, and no Member shall receive assignment to a third Subcommittee until, in order of seniority, all Members have chosen assignments to two Subcommittees.

(c) Any Member of the Committee may sit with any Subcommittee during its hearings and business meetings but shall not have the authority to vote on any matters before the Subcommittee unless he is a Member of such Subcommittee.

SWORN TESTIMONY AND FINANCIAL STATEMENTS

Rule 9. Witnesses in Committee or Subcommittee hearings may be required to give testimony under oath whenever the Chairman or ranking Minority Member of the Committee or Subcommittee deems such to be necessary. At any hearing to confirm a Presidential nomination, the testimony of the nominee and, at the request of any Member, any other witness shall be under oath. Every nominee shall submit a statement of his financial interests, including those of his spouse, his minor children, and other members of his immediate household, on a form approved by the Committee, which shall be sworn to by the nominee as to its completeness and accuracy. A statement of every nominee's financial interest shall be made public on a form approved by the Committee, unless the Committee in executive session determines that special circumstances require a full or partial exception to this rule. Members of the Committee are urged to make public a statement of their financial interests in the form required in the case of Presidential nominees under this rule.

CONFIDENTIAL TESTIMONY

Rule 10. No confidential testimony taken by or confidential material presented to the Committee or any Subcommittee, or any report of the proceedings of a closed Committee or Subcommittee hearing or business meeting, shall be made public, in whole or in part or by way of summary, unless authorized by a majority of the Members of the Committee at a business meeting called for the purpose of making such a determination.

DEFAMATORY STATEMENTS

Rule 11. Any person whose name is mentioned or who is specifically identified in, or who believes that testimony or other evidence presented at, an open Committee or Subcommittee hearing tends to defame him or otherwise adversely affect his reputation may file with the Committee for its consideration and action a sworn statement of facts relevant to such testimony or evidence.

BROADCASTING OF HEARINGS OR MEETINGS

Rule 12. Any meeting or hearing by the Committee or any Subcommittee which is open to the public may be covered in whole or in part by television broadcast, radio broadcast, or still photography. Photographers and reporters using mechanical recording, filming, or broadcasting devices shall position their equipment so as not to interfere with the seating, vision, and hearing of Members and staff on the dais or with the orderly process of the meeting or hearing.

AMENDING THE RULES

Rule 13. These rules may be anended only by vote of a majority of all the Members of the Committee in a business meeting of the Committee: Provided, That no vote may be taken on any proposed amendment unless such amendment is reproduced in full in the Committee agenda for such meeting at least three days in advance of such meeting.●

MARSHALL DODGE—MAINE FOLK-HERO

● Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, Maine suffered a large loss last week when Marshall Dodge was killed in a tragic accident. This New York-born humorist who gained fame as a Maine storyteller had a talent for making people laugh that won him friends around the world. His Bert and I records and stories portrayed the down-to-earth qualities for which Mainers are well known.

I was proud to count Marshall Dodge as a friend and supporter. His death saddens me greatly, as it does all Maine people.

I submit the following editorial from the Portland (Maine) Press Herald concerning Marshall Dodge for the RECORD.

[From the Portland Press Herald, Jan. 30, 1982]

DODGE/HE CAUGHT OUR CHARACTER

The sudden death of storyteller Marshall Dodge stills a voice which epitomized the character of Down East Maine.

Maine humor has a special quality not found in the regional stories of other parts of the country. Dodge was able to isolate and capture that quality early in life, and he never lost it throughout his tragically foreshortened performing career.

A native of New York City, the very antithesis of the Down East setting, Dodge so well assimilated himself here that he was mistaken by many as a native son.

He took modest pride from that status, never abusing it or exploiting the people he mimed so effectively in the famous Bert and I stories. He was, in a very real sense, one of us.

Dodge once defined Maine humor this way: "It punctures pomposity—it deflates things that are overblown."

He was faithful to that theory both on stage and in life. He never indulged pomposity in himself; his performances were always exquisitely understated.

And he was always willing to share his knowledge of the Down East character with fellow performers, a generosity rare in a trade as highly competitive as his.

There was a shy grace about him which friends and strangers alike found instantly appealing. The violence of his death was all the more shocking because of it.

Maine humor is a mixture of qualities; it is quiet, methodical, wise, naive, down-to-earth and self-effacing. That's a pretty good description of Dodge himself.

He was the real article.●

JOHN R. CORREIRO: OUTSTANDING PORTUGUESE AMERICAN

● Mr. TSONGAS. Mr. President, I should like to make my colleagues aware of an outstanding Portuguese American, John R. Correiro. Mr. Correiro, the superintendent of schools in Fall River, Mass., is the 1981 recipient of the Portuguese American Award. He was chosen for his honor by the readers and staff of "O Jornal", the Portuguese-language weekly published in Fall River.

John Correiro has been an outstanding contributor in the field of education for many years. He has devoted himself to the goal of equal educational opportunity for non-English-speaking children.

Mr. Correiro was a major force in establishing the "English as a Second Language Program" in the Fall River School System in the 1960's. He was later a strong advocate of its evolution into the current bilingual program. In the late 1970's, he served as director of the New England Bilingual Dissemination Center at Lesley College. Then in 1980 he assumed his present position in Fall River.

In addition to leadership in education, John Correiro has also served his community unselfishly in many capacities. He helped found the Portuguese Youth Cultural Organization and the Portuguese Spring Festival. He is a member of many service and cultural organizations, including the Board of the Portuguese Cultural Foundation of Rhode Island and the United Way of Fall River.

Mr. President, John Correiro has been a tireless worker for greater opportunity in his community. Now he joins other outstanding Portuguese Americans who have received this honor: Fall River Mayor Carlton M. Viveiros, Cardinal Humberto Medeiros and State Senator Mary L. Fonseca. I want to express my sincere appreciation for his years of community service.●

BANGOR'S WALTER CRONKITE

● Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, every American is well aware of the power and influence of television. Because of this influence, it is critically important that those in television journalism use their access to the medium professionally and responsibly.

Gordon Manuel, news director at WABI television in my hometown of Bangor, Maine, has always based his successful career in broadcast journalism on two things: hard work and dedication to getting the facts straight. I have known Gordon since before I began serving in Congress. He is a persistent interviewer whose questions are always tough—but always fair.

I am submitting for the benefit of my colleagues a profile on Gordon from a recent issue of the Bangor Daily News. It provides an informative, behind-the-scenes look at the career of this very successful broadcast journalist.

The article follows:

[From the Bangor Daily News, Jan. 30-31, 1982]

GORDON MANUEL: A NEWSMAN FIRST, LAST, AND ALWAYS

(By Chris Palmer)

In a world where "Take This Job and Shove It" has become the personal theme song of many a disgruntled employee, WABI-TV is fortunate to have Gordon Manuel as its new director. The man doesn't just like his job, he loves it.

"It's a job I—honest to God—feel very lucky to have," says Manuel, who began working for "Telejournal News" as a reporter nearly 14 years ago.

Though Russ Van Arsdale, news director at WLBZ-TV, Channel 2, and a former reported under Manuel, says his previous boss does know how to leave the office behind (at least when he heads for the golf course), the 36-year-old Guilford native gives a different impression when you talk to him face to face about the joys of television journalism. He goes for shop talk like a dog after a fresh bone.

"I love this business. I love news," he says. "And, yes, we all complain about the pressures of deadlines and the stress, but it's funny, when it's slow we all sit around and grumble because there's not much happening."

He adds, "If I have more than two weeks off I can't wait to get back. If I'm lying on the beach and hear a siren, my tendency is to want to get up and find out what it is."

That kind of all-consuming interest in the news leads Manuel's colleagues to describe him as "no nonsense," "demanding," "diligent," "a hard worker" and "dedicated." Jeanne Meserve, a reporter with WTVR in Richmond, Va., who once worked for Manuel, says he has "a good mix of qualities."

"Gordon has a good sense of humor," she commented, "but when you needed a disciplinary hand, he was good at that, too."

The man "whose whole life is the news" (according to WABI-TV operations manager Towle Tompkins) claims he grew up with only one goal in mind—to work in television news at Channel 5.

"Some people criticize me for not having more goals," Manuel says. Yet the lanky "Telejournal" chief, by being a staple of his station's newscasts for so many years, has given those broadcasts a depth and consistency that is rare in markets the size of Bangor.

"Someone like Gordon * * * who has built up so many contacts and been on the air so many years," says Tompkins, "can do nothing else but help you. When he's not there, you wonder what's wrong. He will do anything to motivate the people under him to get the news."

Manuel is too modest, though, to brag about being the closest thing Maine has to a young Walter Cronkite. He'd rather talk about his philosophies of news gathering, and how it is to be in charge of a crew where the average length of stay for any staff member is only 18 months to two years.

On the former, Manuel—whose career in news began at radio stations WNAC, Boston, and WOTW, Nashua, N.H.,—has some very firm ideas. "Reporting is basically getting your facts and being damn sure of your facts, and reporting them accurately and clearly," he says.

"I believe reporting on a community is maybe reporting something that a local school is doing," he continues. "That is important to that neighborhood. It may not be important to the people in Augusta or across the nation, but it's important to that area."

Believing that the visual impact of television is its forte, Manuel knows it is also the medium's Achilles heel. "The force of it," he says, "is very strong. But a big criticism in TV is that we are poor in our writing and I think that's true. We rely too much on pictures, but that is where our power lies."

That power, he feels, is awesome. "I think we're a very, very powerful medium, of which no one perhaps really understands the true power," Manuel says. "It scares me sometimes when you really think about the fact that you're going into so many homes and people are watching you and trusting you. I take that very seriously.

The inability of television news to offer the depth of coverage available in newspapers also bothers Manuel.

"Television news was very suspect nationwide and statewide when it first started out," he said. "There is still a strong suspicion. We know the majority of Americans go to television news, but we're still a headline service."

Part of the problem, he claims, is the brevity of most TV newscasts. "You take a 22-minute newscast and you have four minutes for sports and three for the weather and that gives us only 15 minutes for news. I'll be the first to tell people to read the newspaper to get the in-depth perspective on stories, to get the background."

Manuel says one of his goals is to lobby for more on-air time for his newscasts, as well as for financial backing to support half-hour local documentaries.

On the subject of his being the mentor to a number of TV journalists who have gone on to bigger markets (e.g., Meserve, Michele Marsh, Jonathan Levine, Kent Jarrell and Patsy Wiggins) Manuel admits the turnover problem at a station the size of WABI can be bothersome.

"It's frustrating, but it's the reality of the business," he said, adding that he becomes irritated with the amount of time it takes to keep filling reporting positions. He said he has received as many as 150 applications for a job opening with a starting salary of $200 a week—peanuts compared to the salaries available in larger markets that many young TV journalists are really after.

"We hire them raw," Manuel said of his cub reporters. "They might have a college education. They might have a year of radio background. But you have to teach them the subtleties that perhaps you don't learn in the classroom—how to approach people for an interview when they're nervous about talking to you—the small things that are so important."

He said he also has to train newcomers to the business to curb their egos. "You have to tone down some new people, to let them know they're not going to be the top Watergate reporter that perhaps they were lead to believe in journalism school. There just aren't those big exploding stories or scandals bursting out on the hour every hour."

Another thing Manuel won't allow on his news set or from his staff is "happy talk"—irrelevant chitchat to hype the broadcast's entertainment value. "I'm adamantly opposed to happy talk," the newsman said. "I believe that when you deliver the news you should try to be relaxed—you should try to let people know that tomorrow will be here no matter how bad today might sound. But when happy talk came along in the mid-'70s, some stations in other markets really went overboard. I felt it was hurting the credibility of television news."

Manuel demands the same dedication to credibility from his reporters as he does from himself. He said there is a tendency among people coming into TV news right out of school to be thinking "only about the cosmetics" and forgetting "that there's got to be some meat behind it."

"A lot of people coming into television are thinking of big bucks and big markets and sitting and looking pretty on the set," he said. "And I understand that's the way it's going and we have to be concerned about the cosmetics. We're seeing all the network newscasts getting flashier, with more technical production and the public likes it because it's easier to understand and it looks attractive and I thoroughly endorse it, but God help us if the reporters who are out there smiling with their capped teeth don't know what the hell they're doing."

Cooling down a bit, Manual pointed to the rewards of being a working "teacher." "I get satisfaction out of seeing new people come in who don't know how to approach an interview or put together a story and a year later they're bringing a lot of credit to the station and to me."

The news director who hates Mondays ("because they're slow news days") and who honed his reporting skills by covering the State House for six years, credits WABI general manager George Gonyar with teaching him many of the techniques of the business.

"He taught me an awful lot," he says of his boss. "I'm not saying this to fluff anyone, but when I came up here I was awfully green and I leaned on him for a lot of insight, because he knows this business better than I'll ever know it.

"He taught me a lot about how to go after news and how to develop stories with an imposing camera," he continued. "It was kind of tough in those days to go into someone's office and ask them to relax when you had three lights shinning on them and you had a big camera that squeaked every time you turned it on."

Despite the technical drawbacks, Manuel remembers those old days somewhat nostalgically. "I recall going out on nighttime story assignments with a Polaroid camera," he chuckled. "You'd take a picture which would hopefully come out and then we had a special lens we put on the black and white TV camera that blew up that Polaroid picture to full screen. Then you'd show your picture and ready your story underneath it."

The Polaroid process ended, he added, shortly after he had joined the Channel 5 news staff. He left the camera on top of the car one night before taking off on a story assignment, and that was the end of that.

The Polaroid was eventually replaced by film, which had the disadvantage of added processing time. "It was kind of funny to get back to the station at 9:30 at night, run into the darkroom and change the chemicals on the processor, turn off the lights, put your film on the processor, run it through, edit it, put that film on your total newsreel (the films you had at 6 o'clock) and then fly onto the 11 o'clock set to do the news. But it was a great experience. It taught you how much you can do when you know there's no one else to do it but you."

Manuel doesn't miss the Polaroid days nor the film days—which have now become the videotape days. Not surprisingly, what he really misses is being close to the news.

"There are days I wish I were out on the road doing a story instead of assigning it to still a reporter," he says with a smile.

On his off hours, Manuel, who lives in Hampden with his wife and two children, leads a quiet life sparked only by card games with friends, visits to various family members, an occasional movie and, when the weather is right, rides on Sebec Lake in his motor boat.

"I'm just the average person at home," Manuel says, "I mow the lawn. I shovel the snow . . . I do repairs around the house. I cut firewood." His high-pressure work week of "55-60 hours" means he spends most of his time off trying to recharge his batteries. "I'm not that exciting an individual," he says when pushed.

With no ambition to leave the company that hired him for $90 a week back in 1968, Manuel is content to stick around and give his all toward improving TV journalism at the grassroots level. "I love Maine," he says. "I love the people. To me, all the pressures and all the challenges that you can find in the big market are here."●

SELF-REGULATORY PROCESS FOR ADVERTISING

● Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, 10 years ago, the American Association of Advertising Agencies, American Advertising Federation, the Association of National Advertisers, and the Council of Better Business Bureaus established a self-regulatory process for advertising. While I am sure that the vast majority of advertising agencies and the vast majority of advertisers consider truthful advertising to be in their own best interest, the advertising industry has chosen not to trust matters of truth and accuracy to the individual conscience.

Instead, the three major advertising associations and the Council of Better Business Bureaus have worked together and developed a series of codes and the mechanisms to enforce them. The two principal administrative bodies in this self-regulatory process, the National Advertising Division of the Council of Better Business Bureaus and the National Advertising Review Board, have just completed their first decade of service with a notable record of success.

According to a recent presentation given by these groups to the Commerce Committee and staff, since 1971, NAD has processed some 6,000 matters, of which 1,860 were full-fledged investigations or cases. In 98 percent of the cases the issue was resolved either by voluntary compliance on the part of the advertisers or dismissal of the complaint. In only 2 percent of all cases has it been necessary to appeal to higher authority, the NARB. In no case has an advertiser refused to abide by the final decision of these bodies.

The NAD initiates about 45 percent of its cases from its own monitoring, with another 37 percent being competitor challenges. The remainder are consumer complaints—either directly to the NAD or to the 151 local Better Business Bureaus. (Children's advertising is treated as a special category requiring specialized expertise in the area of children's developing perceptions. A special section within the NAD, the Children's Advertising Review Unit monitors children's advertising, both broadcast and print, with particular care.)

When the NAD concludes that a claim or an advertising approach is questionable, they work with the advertiser at the top management level to find an acceptable solution. The NAD relies on the advertiser to cooperate voluntarily by setting straight anything judged to be misleading. In the vast majority of cases, the matter is resolved here.

A very few cases, however, are appealed to the NARB Chairman, who appoints a 5-member panel from the 50-member board of industry, consumer, and academic leaders and holds hearings on the matter. An advertiser's refusal to comply with an adverse decision of the NARB would result in the matter being forwarded to the appropriate Government enforcement agency for further action.

Advertiser acceptance of NARB decisions to date has made this final step unnecessary in any instance. Over 10 years, the NAD-NARB system has become an accepted force for the betterment of advertising, benefiting both the consumer and the industry.

Mr. President, I am pleased to see workable programs for industry self-regulation, because they often obviate the need for Government intrusion into the marketplace. In the case of the Consumer Product Safety Commission, Congress went so far as to require the agency to defer to voluntary consumer product safety standards rather than issuing mandatory standards when voluntary standards were effective. I commend the advertising industry for its efforts, and I look forward to working with them and other self-regulatory groups in the future.●

THE COURT STRIPPERS

● Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, a majority of this body voted last Friday to deny our Federal courts the power to issue orders directing schoolbusing to end segregation except under narrowly defined limits. I am not rising at this moment to defend busing or to raise any of the other issues that have prompted court limitation bills during this session. Many of my constituents and many lawyers, judges, scholars, and public officials throughout the country are alarmed by what we did on Friday and what will happen to the independence of our judicial system if our action signals the beginning of a trend.

Yesterday's New York Times devoted its lead editorial to this danger, headlining it as "The Court Strippers." I ask that the editorial be reproduced in the RECORD, and I commend it to all of my colleagues. It ends with a good formula for Congress in dealing with the judiciary: "It should defend the courts, not assault them."

The editorial follows:

THE COURT STRIPPERS

Some senators want to rewrite the old maxim that for every wrong there's a remedy. The current right-wing version is that for every right that the Federal courts recognize, there should be a law that strips the courts of the power to enforce it.

In one bill after another, Congressmen want to tell Federal courts to stay out of important, controversial cases. It's an easy way to tame an over-active judiciary, say voices on the right. But if they were true conservatives, they would recognize these court-stripping bills for what they really are: cheap attacks on the Constitution.

On the Senate floor now, the attack is on busing, via an appropriations rider that forbids busing even when it is the only remedy for purposeful school segregation. Later there will be a bill directing Federal courts to reopen old school cases and abandon milder desegregation remedies unless minorities can prove their cases all over again.

Then there's a bill to define abortion as murder and deny Federal courts and the Supreme Court the power to say the contrary. Another bill would forbid Federal court interference with "voluntary" public school prayer as defined by those who want to skirt Supreme Court rulings.

All these are offered as perfectly proper court-regulating measures. All are of dubious constitutionality. All are dangerous.

Is that merely partisan opinion? It's shared by distinguished lawyers of all political coloration.

The American Bar Association president, David Brink, fears the court-stripping bills will create "the most serious constitutional crisis since our great Civil War." The chief justices of all 50 states call the idea "a hazardous experiment with the nation's judicial system." Retired Justice Potter Stewart said last year that he was glad he wouldn't have to review such laws "and I hope this Court will never have to wrestle with such questions because I hope that no such legislation will be enacted."

Robert Bork, a critic of many Supreme Court decisions, has made clear his belief that court-stripping is no way to deal with unpopular rulings; his conservative credentials are such that President Reagan has named him to the United States Court of Appeals in Washington.

One of the few notable lawyers missing from this company is Attorney General William French Smith. The danger of these court-stripping bills is appreciated at every level of the Justice Department but the top one. He seems to fear the wrath of the new right more than the destruction of old rights.

The court-baiting senators are right when they say the Constitution allows Congress to change Federal court jurisdiction and regulate the Supreme Court's review powers. But that is a lot different from insisting that Congress can selectively wipe out constitutional rights by cutting citizens off from Federal courts.

It's sad that other senators, like Lowell Weicker of Connecticut, should have to filibuster to make the point: bills like the anti-busing measures are umpire-killing tricks, their anti-constitutional purpose only thinly disguised. But it's not too late for Congress to wake up and recognize what it is being asked to do. It should defend the courts, not assault them.●

PROPOSED ARMS SALES

● Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act requires that Congress receive advance notification of proposed arms sales under the act in excess of $25 million or, in the case of major defense equipment as defined in the act, those in excess of $7 million. Upon such notification, the Congress has 30 calendar days during which the sale may be prohibited by means of a concurrent resolution. The provision stipulates that, in the Senate, the notification of a proposed sale shall be sent to the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee.

In keeping with my intention to see that such information is available to the full Senate, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point the notifications which have been received.

One of the attached notifications is for the proposed sale of F-16's to Venezuela. This notification was initially received on December 4, 1981. On December 16, 1981, the notification was withdrawn by the administration with our agreement so that the Congress would have 30 days in session to consider the proposed sale.

The notification follows:

DEFENSE SECURITY ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, D.C., January 18, 1982.

Hon. CHARLES H. PERCY,
Chairman, Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Pursuant to the reporting requirements of Section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act, we are forwarding herewith Transmittal No. 82-12 and under separate cover the classified annex thereto. This Transmittal concerns the Department of the Air Force's proposed Letter of Offer to Venezuela for defense articles and services estimated to cost $615 million. Shortly after this letter is delivered to your office, we plan to notify the news media of the unclassified portion of this Transmittal.

Sincerely,

JAMES AHMANN,
Acting Director.

TRANSMITTAL NO. 82-12

NOTICE OF PROPOSED ISSUANCE OF LETTER OF OFFER PURSUANT TO SECTION 36(b) OF THE ARMS EXPORT CONTROL ACT

(i) Prospective Purchaser: Venezuela.

(ii) Total estimated value:

	Millions
Major defense equipment*	$319
Other	$296
Total	$615

*As included in the U.S. Munitions List, a part of the International Traffic in Arms Regulations (ITAR).

(iii) Description of articles or services offered: Eighteen F-16A and 6 F-16B tactical fighter aircraft with related spare parts, training, technical assistance, and support items.

(iv) Military Department: Air Force (SGA).

(v) Sales commission, Fee, etc., Paid, Offered, or Agreed to be Paid: None.

(vi) Sensitivity of technology contained in the defense articles or defense services proposed to be sold: See Annex under separate cover.

(vii) Section 28 Report: Included in report for quarter ending 30 September 1981.

(viii) Date report delivered to Congress: January 13, 1982.

POLICY JUSTIFICATION

VENEZUELA—F-16 AIRCRAFT

The Government of Venezuela has requested the purchase of 18 F-16A and 6 F-16B tactical fighter aircraft with related spare parts, training, technical assistance, and support items at an estimated cost of $615 million.

This sale will contribute to the foreign policy objectives of the United States by improving the defense capabilities of a friendly democratic country which is a continuing force for stability in Latin America.

Venezuela requires replacements for its aging CF-5A and MIRAGE aircraft. This sale should significantly enhance the Venezuelan Air Force's (VAF) capabilities and should aid in modernizing existing VAF facilities and the logistical infrastructure.

The sale of this equipment and support will not alter the basic military balance in the region.

The prime contractor will be the General Dynamics Corporation of Fort Worth, Texas.

Implementation of this sale may require the assignment of additional U.S. Government or contractor personnel to Venezuela for short term training purposes. Also, contractor assistance may be required for maintenance support during the first 1½ years of operation.

There will be no adverse impact on U.S. defense readiness as a result of this sale.

DEFENSE SECURITY ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, D.C., January 26, 1982.

Hon. Charles H. Percy
Chairman, Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Pursuant to the reporting requirements of Section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act, we are forwarding herewith Transmittal No. 82-28, concerning the Department of the Army's proposed Letter of Offer to Pakistan for defense articles and services estimated to cost $30 million. Shortly after this letter is delivered to your office, we plan to modify the news media.

Sincerely,

JAMES AHMANN,
Acting Director.

TRANSMITTAL NO. 82-28

NOTICE OF PROPOSED ISSUANCE OF LETTER OF OFFER PURSUANT TO SECTION 36(b) OF THE ARMS EXPORT CONTROL ACT

(i) Propsective Purchaser: Pakistan.
(ii) Total Estimated Value:

	Million
Major Defense Equipment *	$27
Other	$3
Total	$30

*As included in the U.S. Munitions List, a part of the International Traffic in Arms Regulations (ITAR).

(iii) Description of Articles or Services Offered: Thirty-six M109A2 155mm self-propelled howitzers, spare parts, training, and technical assistance.

(iv) Military Department: Army (VBN).

(v) Sales Commission, Fee, etc., Paid, Offered, or Agreed to be Paid: None.

(vi) Sensitivity of Technology Contained in the Defense Articles or Defense Services Proposed to be Sold: None.

(vii) Section 28 Report: Included in report for quarter ending 30 September 1981.

(viii) Date Report Delivered to Congress: January 26, 1982.

POLICY JUSTIFICATION

PAKISTAN—M109A2 HOWITZERS

The Government of Pakistan has requested the purchase of an additional 36 M109A2 155mm self-propelled howitzers, spare parts, training, and technical assistance at an estimated cost of $30 million.

This sale will contribute to the foreign policy objectives of the United States by enabling Pakistan to increase its capability to provide for its own security and defense, particularly in view of the increased threat resulting from the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

The Government of Pakistan requires these howitzers to continue the upgrading and standardizing of their existing artillery as a part of Pakistan's overall force modernization plan.

The sale of this equipment and support will not substantially after the overall military balance in the region.

The prime contractor for the M109A2 155mm self-propelled howitzers will be the Bowen-McLaughlin-York Company of York, Pennsylvania.

Implementation of this sale will require the assignment of five U.S. Government personnel to provide a Quality Assurance Team during item deliveries.

There will be minimal impact on U.S. defense readiness as a result of this sale.●

THE RECIPROCITY ISSUE

● Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the 1981 merchandise trade data released recently by the Commerce Department are of special concern to me and, I believe, the many other Members who have spoken out on the need to seek meaningful guarantees of market access abroad for U.S. exports. While the United States bill for oil imports continued to decline in 1981, U.S. exports dropped 2 percent and other imports increased. This resulted in a 13-percent greater deficit than in 1980.

The Finance Committee is examining the reasons for this declining performance and remedies the Congress should pursue. For example, the Subcommittee on International Trade, chaired by Senator DANFORTH, will hold a hearing Thursday, February 11, on the adverse effects of European agricultural policies on U.S. agricultural exports. We expect the administration to discuss the adequacy—or inadequacy—of our international agreements and domestic law to provide relief to our farmers for unfair practices that are seriously retarding their export growth. The 1981 trade figures bear this harm out.

Perhaps foremost on the minds of our Members, however, is the continued failure of our exporters to pierce the multitude of import barriers that many of our trading partners throw up. Legislation introduced recently by Senators HEINZ; ROTH, CHAFEE, and INOUYE, SYMMS, and KASTEN, and to be introduced in the near future, I understand by Senator DANFORTH, attest to the widespread feeling that where firms are willing and able to compete abroad, they must be given the chance to do so, just as this country offers that opportunity to others. These bills are serious efforts to redress manifest unfairness in the international trading system, and I commend them to the Members' earnest consideration.

The Washington Post of February 9 carried an excellent article by Robert J. Samuelson, the noted economist, that cogently capsulizes the role of Japan in the world's drift toward protectionism—a path I hope we can avoid. As Professor Samuelson puts it:

The continuation of Japan's huge trade surpluses attests to the basic Japanese attitude toward open trade: It is a one-sided affair, an avenue by which Japan can export manufactured goods and import needed raw materials.

He further points out the fallacy in this self-destructive attitude:

The overwhelming reality about Japan's exports—more important than their quality or price competitiveness—is that no one needs them.

I agree with the author when he notes that the Government of Japan in the past has sought to isolate our periodic trade disputes, ultimately agreeing to the least common denominator of "concessions" that they believe will appease the frictions of the moment. I believe that there is implicit in this approach an underlying cynicism, even contemptuousness, about the U.S. export interest and potential. I know that U.S. firms can compete—and I am committed to seeking a trading relationship that will allow them to do so. Professor Samuelson concludes his article by commenting that "the biggest barrier to imports (in Japan) today is a state of mind." That state of mind must change.

I ask that Professor Samuelson's article be included in the RECORD for the benefit of the Members.

The article follows:

[From the Washington Post, Feb. 9, 1982]

JAPAN'S VULNERABILITY: UNNEEDED EXPORTS

(By Robert J. Samuelson)

TOKYO.—It is difficult to leave this country with a good feeling about the prospects for a sensible resolution of the trade conflicts between Japan and the West. The root causes are Japan's phenomenal economic success—and the envy it stirs in the West—and the shortsightedness and insensitivity of the Japanese. Neither seems likely to disappear soon.

West—particularly the United States—and Japan seem to follow a set script, and the current combat is no exception. First there are vague rumblings in Congress that "something" must be done. The administration then disavows protectionism, but subtly encourages congressional discontent. Finally, it uses that discontent to wheedle concessions from Japanese, who resist all the way.

What makes the most recent episode extraordinary is the nature of the redress being demanded. The objective seems nothing less than a dramatic reduction in the size of Japan's trade surplus with the United States ($13.4 billion 1981 by Japanese statistics) and the European Community ($10.3 billion). This is almost certainly beyond doing, except with severe restrictions on Japan's exports. Significantly, U.S. and European officials simply haven't identified types of Western exports now being excluded in large quantities from Japan.

At one level, it is hard not to take the outbreak of anti-Japanese sentiment as scapegoating. The United States and Europe are deep in slumps and, by comparison, Japan's economy is relatively healthy. Japan's unemployment rate is 2.2 percent, and economic growth—though relatively low by Japanese standards—is expected to be about 3½ to 5 percent in the next year.

But, especially after two weeks of interviewing here, it is equally difficult to ignore Japan's culpability in the drift toward protectionism. Free trade, like any other international regime, can exist only so long as participating states feel it serves their mutual self-interest. As a state with one of the largest stakes in open trade, Japan ought to have been energetic in its defense. But it hasn't been. Consider:

U.S. cigarette makers cannot sell freely in Japan. The govenment's salt and tobacco monopoly allows foreign cigarette sales at only 20,000 of 280,000 outlets, and prices of American cigarettes are kept about one-third higher than Japanese.

Severe import quotas remain on beef and oranges—an outrage not only to the United States but also to Australia, a major beef exporter.

Despite a recent reduction, Japan still imposes a high duty (a minimum of 36 percent) on Scotch whisky—an affront to the British, who have pressed for steep cuts for years.

Lifting these restrictions would alter Japan's huge trade surplus only slightly, but their continuation attests to the basic Japanese attitude toward open trade: It is a one-sided affair, an avenue by which Japan can export manufactured goods and import needed raw materials.

In the 1950s and 1960s, when Japan was short of foreign exchange, protectionism was official policy embodied in tariffs, import licenses and other restrictions. But even though most restrictions have disappeared, the state of mind continues.

Japanese politicians and officials leave the distinct impression that everybody but Japan ought to pay the political price of open trade. Although farm families now constitute less than one-seventh of Japan's population—and most of those are part-time farmers—the government regularly has resisted lifting the beef and citrus quotas. Likewise, the Ministry of Finance jealously protects the tobacco monopoly, which provides government revenues.

Even the way the Japanese talk about their trade disputes is revealing of their narrow world view. They forever refer to the easing of "trade frictions," as if once the squeaky wheel is found, a bit of "oil" will make the "friction" vanish.

The result has been, over the years, a series of exasperating trade disputes. In each, the Japanese ultimately manage to find concessions to satisfy U.S. political interests. Yet the fact that new concessions always emerge only deepens American (and European) suspicions of still additional layers of protection.

All this had left Japan with virtually no political good will with which to defend itself against unreasonable demands. And it is enormously vulnerable, for the overriding reality about Japan's exports—more important than their quality or price competitiveness—is that no one needs them.

Japan needs the wood, coal, oil and grain it imports, but the United States does not need the autos and steel that constitute about half of Japan's exports to the United States. American industries would gladly fill the demand. With some exceptions (stereos, video tape recorders, motorcycles), the same is true of most Japanese products.

In the end, the drift toward protectionism—now garbed in the new phraseology of "reciprocity"—is likely to help neither the West's sick economies nor Japan's healthy one. The Japanese are correct when they say that bilateral trade balances have no proper place in a world of open trade. Countries' trade patterns reflect their economic strength and needs, and any attempt to focus on trade balances between nations upsets this. The United States, for instance has a large surplus with Europe.

Much of the Western failure to sell in Japan reflects inadequate effort, but it is also a failure to which the Japanese contributed. Their success in the United States reflects their ability to surmount obstacles of language, marketing and product quality. But they also had ample American help. In consumer electronics, large U.S. buyers (Sears, Roebuck and Co., Radio Shack Corp.) gave the Japanese their initial foothold by placing huge orders. Even in cars, the Japanese could rely on enthusiastic U.S. dealers.

This is what an open market is all about, but it is not what Japan is about. The biggest barrier to imports today is a state of mind. If changing that is asking too much—as many Japanese think it is—this is precisely what has helped bring Japan and the West to the edge of a mutually destructive trade war.●

PRELIMINARY NOTIFICATION PROPOSED ARMS SALES

● Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act requires that Congress received advance notification of proposed arms sales under that act in excess of $25 million, or in the case of major defense equipment as defined in the act, those in excess of $7 million. Upon receipt of such notification, the Congress has 30 calendar days during which the sale may be prohibited by means of a concurrent resolution. The provision stipulates that, in the Senate, the notification of proposed sales shall be sent to the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee.

Pursuant to an informal understanding, the Department of Defense has agreed to provide the committee with a preliminary notification 20 days before transmittal of the official notification. The official notification will be printed in the RECORD in accordance with previous practice.

I wish to inform Members of the Senate that 14 such notifications have been received.

Interested Senators may inquire as to the details of these preliminary notifications at the office of the Committee on Foreign Relations, room 4229, Dirksen Building.

The notifications follow:

DEFENSE SECURITY ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, D.C., 17 Dec. 1981.

In reply refer to: I-12283/81ct

Dr. HANS BINNENDIJK,
Professional Staff Member, Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR DR. BINNENDIJK: By letter dated 18 February 1976, the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, indicated that you would be advised of possible transmittals to Congress of information as required by Section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act. At the instruction of the Department of State, I wish to provide the following advance notification.

The Department of State is considering an offer to a NATO country tentatively estimated to cost in excess of $25 million.

Sincerely,

ERICH F. VON MARBOD,
Director.

DEFENSE SECURITY ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, D.C., 29 Dec. 1981.

In reply refer to: I-12605/81ct

Dr. HANS BINNENDIJK,
Professional Staff Member, Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR DR. BINNENDIJK: By letter dated 18 February 1976, the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, indicated that you would be advised of possible transmittals to Congress of information as required by Section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act. At the instruction of the Department of State, I wish to provide the following advance notification.

The Department of State is considering an offer to an East Asian country tentatively estimated to cost in excess of $25 million.

Sincerely,

ERICH F. VON MARBOD,
Director.

DEFENSE SECURITY ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, D.C., 29 Dec. 1981.

In reply refer to: I-12208/81ct

Dr. HANS BINNENDIJK,
Professional Staff Member, Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR DR. BINNENDIJK: By letter dated 18 February 1976, the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, indicated that you would be advised of possible transmittals to Congress of information as required by Section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act. At the instruction of the Department of State, I wish to provide the following advance notification.

The Department of State is considering an offer to a NATO country tentatively estimated to cost in excess of $25 million.

Sincerely,

ERICH F. VON MARBOD,
Director.

DEFENSE SECURITY ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, D.C., 29 Dec. 1981.

In reply refer to: I-12192/81ct

Dr. HANS BINNENDIJK,
Professional Staff Member, Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR DR. BINNENDIJK: By letter dated 18 February 1976, the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, indicated that you would be advised of possible transmittals to Congress of information as required by Section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act. At the instruction of the Department of State, I wish to provide the following advance notification.

The Department of State is considering an offer to a North African country for major defense equipment tentatively estimated to cost in excess of $7 million.

Sincerely,

ERICH F. VON MARBOD,
Director.

DEFENSE SECURITY ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, D.C., 29 Dec. 1981.

In reply refer to: I-12182/81ct

Dr. HANS BINNENDIJK,
Professional Staff Member, Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR DR. BINNENDIJK: By letter dated 18 February 1976, the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, indicated that you would be advised of possible transmittals to Congress of information as required by Section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act. At the instruction of the Department of State, I wish to provide the following advance notification.

The Department of State is considering an offer to a Middle Eastern country tentatively estimated to cost in excess of $25 million.

Sincerely,

ERICH F. VON MARBOD,
Director.

DEFENSE SECURITY ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, D.C., 29 Dec. 1981.
In reply refer to: I-12803/81ct
Dr. HANS BINNENDIJK,
Professional Staff Member, Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR DR. BINNENDIJK: By letter dated 18 February 1976, the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, indicated that you would be advised of possible transmittals to Congress of information as required by Section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act. At the instruction of the Department of State, I wish to provide the following advance notification.

The Department of State is considering an offer to a Southeast Asian country for major defense equipment tentatively estimated to cost in excess of $7 million.

Sincerely,

ERICH F. VON MARBOD,
Director.

DEFENSE SECURITY ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, D.C., 29 Dec. 1981.
In reply refer to: I-12949/81ct
Dr. HANS BINNENDIJK,
Professional Staff Member, Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR DR. BINNENDIJK: By letter dated 18 February 1976, the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, indicated that you would be advised of possible transmittals to Congress of information as required by Section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act. At the instruction of the Department of State, I wish to provide the following advance notification.

The Department of State is considering an offer to a Southeast Asian country for major defense equipment tentatively estimated to cost in excess of $7 million.

Sincerely,

ERICH F. VON MARBOD,
Director.

DEFENSE SECURITY ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, D.C., 18 Jan. 1982.
In reply refer to: I-13043/81ct
Dr. HANS BINNENDIJK,
Professional Staff Member, Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR DR. BINNENDIJK: By letter dated 18 February 1976, the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, indicated that you would be advised of possible transmittals to Congress of information as required by Section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act. At the instruction of the Department of State, I wish to provide the following advance notification.

The Department of State is considering an offer to a Southwest Asian country for major defense equipment tentatively estimated to cost in excess of $14 million.

Sincerely,

JAMES AHMANN,
Acting Director.

DEFENSE SECURITY ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, D.C., 21 Jan. 1982.
In reply refer to: I-13087/81ct
Dr. HANS BINNENDIJK,
Professional Staff Member, Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR DR. BINNENDIJK: By letter dated 18 February 1976, the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, indicated that you would be advised of possible transmittals to Congress of information as required by Section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act. At the instruction of the Department of State, I wish to provide the following advance notification.

The Department of State is considering an offer to a Southwest Asian country tentatively estimated to cost in excess of $50 million.

Sincerely,

JAMES AHMANN,
Acting Director.

DEFENSE SECURITY ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, D.C., 21 Jan. 1982.
In reply refer to: I-13092/81ct
Dr. HANS BINNENDIJK,
Professional Staff Member, Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR DR. BINNENDIJK: By letter dated 18 February 1976, the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, indicated that you would be advised of possible transmittals to Congress of information as required by Section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act. At the instruction of the Department of State, I wish to provide the following advance notification.

The Department of State is considering an offer to a Southwest Asian country tentatively estimated to cost in excess of $50 million.

Sincerely,

JAMES AHMANN,
Acting Director.

DEFENSE SECURITY ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, D.C., 22 Jan. 1982.
In reply refer to: I-13086/81ct
Dr. HANS BINNENDIJK,
Professional Staff Member, Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR DR. BINNENDIJK: By letter dated 18 February 1976, the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, indicated that you would be advised of possible transmittals to Congress of information as required by Section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act. At the instruction of the Department of State, I wish to provide the following advance notification.

The Department of State is considering an offer to a Northeast Asian country tentatively estimated to cost in excess of $50 million.

Sincerely,

JAMES AHMANN,
Acting Director.

DEFENSE SECURITY ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, D.C., 25 Jan. 1982.
In reply refer to: I-13131/81ct
Dr. HANS BINNENDIJK,
Professional Staff Member, Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR DR. BINNENDIJK: By letter dated 18 February 1976, the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, indicated that you would be advised of possible transmittals to Congress of information as required by Section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act. At the instruction of the Department of State, I wish to provide the following advance notification.

The Department of State is considering an offer to an East Asian country estimated to cost in excess of $50 million.

Sincerely,

JAMES AHMANN,
Acting Director.

DEFENSE SECURITY ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, D.C., 26 Jan. 1982.
In reply refer to: I-03716/81ct
Dr. HANS BINNENDIJK,
Professional Staff Member, Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR DR. BINNENDIJK: By letter dated 18 February 1976, the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, indicated that you would be advised of possible transmittals to Congress of information as required by Section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act. At the instruction of the Department of State, I wish to provide the following advance notification.

The Department of State is considering an offer to a Middle Eastern country tentatively estimated to cost in excess of $50 million.

Sincerely,

JAMES AHMANN,
Acting Director.

DEFENSE SECURITY ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, D.C., 26 Jan. 1982.
In reply refer to: I-13044/81ct
Dr. HANS BINNENDIJK,
Professional Staff Member, Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR DR. BINNENDIJK: By letter dated 18 February 1976, the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, indicated that you would be advised of possible transmittals to Congress of information as required by Section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act. At the instruction of the Department of State, I wish to provide the following advance notification.

The Department of State is considering an offer to a European country tentatively estimated to cost in excess of $50 million.

Sincerely,

JAMES AHMANN,
Acting Director.●

SHORTCHANGING AMERICA'S FUTURE

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, the budget for fiscal year 1983 proposed by the Reagan administration advocates severe reductions in spending for higher education. Particularly hard hit are programs for student assistance, including Pell grants, student loans, work-study, and upward bound.

Of all of the funding cuts in this budget, these may well be the most ill-founded, short-sighted, and, ultimately, the most harmful to the national interest.

This administration never misses an opportunity to proclaim its reverence for protecting the national security and enhancing investment. In light of that rhetoric, the disdain for higher education is terribly ironic.

Certainly there can be no more essential component of national security in this modern, complex world than a citizenry which reaches the full potential of its talents and intelligence.

Similarly, no investment is more critical to our future as a society than educating our young people for the challenges of the decades ahead.

Mr. President, the case for a continuing, substantial commitment of Federal resources to higher education is eloquently made by Michael Sovern, president of Columbia University, in an article in Sunday's New York Times magazine. Yesterday's Times reported that many colleges are already being forced to revise their admissions procedures in order to compensate for the harsh budget proposals. It is a sad commentary that financial ability—not intellectual promise—may determine whether some students have the opportunity for a higher education in the future.

I ask that these two articles be printed in the RECORD.

The articles follow:

[From the New York Times, Feb. 7, 1982]

THE CASE FOR KEEPING U.S. AID TO COLLEGES

(By Michael I. Sovern)

"If you think education is expensive," goes an old college fund-raising maxim, "try ignorance." The warning is timely.

At a time when Government should be making major new investments in campus research, vital to raising national productivity, the Reagan Administration has embarked on a program of "economies" that will drastically curtail research efforts in the nation's universities, turn many of the best minds of a generation away from careers in education and research, and close the door to first-rate young people who cannot pay today's tuitions.

Obviously, those assigning us the loser's role in the international technology competition have not intended these consequences. Commenting on the entire Federal budget, David Stockman himself conceded that "we didn't think it all the way through."

It is, however, not too late to think it all the way through and reverse the damaging cuts in student aid as well as cuts in the funding of new scientific equipment and in university research budgets—measures that would actually result in "savings" of only a fraction of 1 percent of the Federal budget.

The issue is not whether the Federal Government as a whole is spending too much or too little, nor whether the supply-siders, Keynesians or monetarists, have the best of the argument. Whatever the economic faith of our elected officials, increased support for education and research must be given a high priority.

The predominance of American professors among Nobel Prize winners dramatically demonstrates the importance of our campuses in producing men and women who gave this nation the lead it once enjoyed in science and technology. But Nobel Prizes celebrate the accomplishments of yesterday, not tomorrow.

Today, at independent universities that trained most of the country's scientists and produced the lion's share of major research advances, world-renowned pioneers are working in physical facilities that are woefully out of date. Although China's scientific development fell far behind us during the Cultural Revolution, a recent group of Chinese visitors were astonished at the antiquated scientific equipment they saw on a tour of a leading Middle Western university.

Had they traveled more widely, they would have realized that this was the norm and not the exception. Not only has laboratory equipment been refined at a dizzying pace, but costs have skyrocketed as well. A recent study by the Association of American Universities found that a $750 million investment in scientific equipment and facilities is needed over the next three years simply to sustain current activities at only 15 of the nation's research universities.

It would be hyperbolic to say that we are embarking on our own Cultural Revolution. But one can imagine, without exaggeration, a news story of Jan. 20, 1989, datelined Washington, that reads: "In her inaugural address, the President called for a multibillion-dollar crash program of Federal and private investment in America's university research base. She asserted that radical action is critical to meet the problems posed by the greatest shortage of scientists and scholars in our history. Without it, she said, we have no hope of regaining our position as tenth most productive nation in the world."

Such a news story would not be farfetched because the per capita gross national product of the United States has slipped to tenth place in the world. Our foreign trade pattern resembles that of an underdeveloped country: We export raw materials in abundance and import more manufactured goods than we sell abroad. All this cannot be isolated from the fact that over the past 15 years, Japan and West Germany have doubled their output of scientists and engineers.

Tolerance of this erosion of our ability to compete in the world runs counter both to the Reagan agenda and to a long and wise tradition. Since World War II, the Government has pursued a bipartisan policy rooted in the recognition that the nation's well-being depends on a national commitment to the quality of its universities. Federal support produced the rapid growth of graduate schools and the consequent surge to international pre-eminence of American university research. The Federal Government has recognized that scientific and technological competitions with other nations are won or lost on American campuses.

Major research universities cannot but applaud the Reagan Administration's goals of controlling inflation and promoting a sound and stable economy, but these goals are not served by cutbacks in Federal assistance to higher education. When a high-technology company is in danger of losing out to the competition, it invests more in research and development, not less. In the world economy, the United States competes for scientific leadership not only with Japan but with much of Western Europe. If this country is to meet that competition, have a sound economy and bring inflation under control, it must invest more in research and development. Past investment in American universities has been repaid many times over by massive contributions to the national strength. If there is a time to increase that investment, this is it.

When Ronald Reagan took office, there was no Federal program to deal with the decaying physical plant of the nation's universities. There was the beginning of a response to the problem of outdated equipment, but this was killed by the Office of Management and Budget. What all universities had was a respectable program for making the most of their "human capital." "Human capital," the economist Eli Ginzberg pointed out, "defined as the 'skill, dexterity and knowledge' of the population, has become the critical input that determines the rate of growth of the economy. . . ." This perspective underlies the Federal Government's provision since 1965 of nearly $20 billion in loan guarantees and interest subsidies for college and university students plus billions more in direct financial aid to students most in need. Session after session of Congress concluded that these funds would be a fruitful investment in the nation's future.

The Reagan Administration, however, is pressing a massive assault on virtually every aspect of the Federal student aid program. It did put an end to such questionable programs as subsidized loans to families that did not need them. But by proposing huge additional cuts in student aid, the Administration has shown little understanding of the critical importance of such aid to the national interest. Without a strong Federal role in assisting promising students to further their studies, the supply of students will diminish in quantity and quality. In fact, many graduate schools are facing a diminishing pool of qualified applicants.

Ironically, success in the drive against student aid would mean not only a dismantling of much of the nation's research base, but a large increase in costs to the taxpayer as well.

To understand that paradox, one must understand the financing of a college education. It actually costs about $8,000 per student for a college to run a high-quality undergraduate program. That does not include books, room, board and other living costs.

Suppose a promising Cincinnati high-school senior—call him Alex Hamilton—wants to attend an Ivy League university. The Hamilton family's income is about the national median of $21,000. Alex's younger sister is also a good student.

Many students like Alex are enrolled in independent colleges and universities today. How? First, they are often not charged what it actually costs to educate them. Endowment income and contributions meet some expenses that would otherwise be passed along as part of the tuition fee. Second, needy students can receive an additional subsidy in the form of a scholarship, for which Alex Hamilton would qualify at many schools. Third, Alex may borrow $2,500 from a bank at 9 percent interest under the Guaranteed Student Loan Program. Fourth, he would be eligible for a Federal Pell Grant of about $800. He and his parents would make up the rest—from any savings they might have and from his summer and afterschool jobs.

Thus, we have a package of support provided by the college, Alex, his parents, and the Federal Government. Like millions of Americans before him—including Ronald Reagan and me—Alex is working his way through college. But times have changed: No student can earn what it costs to attend an independent college today. To ask that every student contribute something before receiving help is fair. To withhold help from those who have done all that can be expected of them is cruel and ultimately wasteful.

How much is the Federal Government actually contributing to the cost of Alex's higher education? Since he pays no interest on his loan until after graduation, the Federal share includes the interest on that $2,500 loan—say $375 per year (at 15 percent interest). That plus the Pell Grant of $800 totals $1,175 for his freshman year. The taxpayer's dollar is matched about 6 to 1 by private resources, and Alex is free to choose a college based on his ability. (As he moves to his senior year and borrows more, the Federal interest cost will rise accordingly, but it will never be more than a small fraction of his total costs.)

What has the Reagan Administration proposed? First, shrink the Pell Grant program. This would eliminate Alex Hamilton's eligibility. Subtract $800. Second, abolish the in-school interest subsidy. Subtract the remaining $375. There would be an apparent saving to the taxpayer of $1,175.

But there is no such saving. It still costs $8,000 to educate Alex Hamilton. Without the option of going to a private college or university—where the cost of that education is largely absorbed by private resources—students like Alex will most likely go to a public institution close to home. The tuition at a publicly supported institution is about $1,500; the remaining $6,500 comes from public funds. Thus, by increasing the number of students at public universities, the Reagan Administration will actually be saddling state taxpayers with an increased cost of $6,500 in order to save $1,175.

Furthermore, the Reagan Administration's policy toward higher education will affect a staggeringly large number of students: Most of this country's 12 million college and university students come from families with incomes of less than $30,000; the families of many earn less than $20,000.

A fundamental strength of the American system of higher education is diversity. It would be folly to upset the balance of public and private education, to limit individual choice, to segregate rich students in private universities and the poor and middle class in public ones. Yet these are the effects of the Reagan Administration's financial aid policy.

What of the effect of the Administration's proposals on graduate schools—the source of tomorrow's researchers, scholars and teachers?

If Alex Hamilton were to spend four years at an independent college, by the time he graduated he would owe $10,000—plus, under the Administration's plan, annual interest costs. Lending institutions have indicated they will not take on the burden of collecting interest from students on a periodic basis. In response, the Administration has recommended compounding the interest so Alex will owe not $10,000 on graduation, but $12,000 or more.

At that point he must decide whether to go on for a Ph.D. or try a professional school. As a graduate student he is now entitled to borrow $5,000 a year. If Alex chooses the Ph.D. route, the Administration's proposal would bring his cumulative debt after his first year to approximately $19,000. After his second year, that debt will be approaching $26,000. And he still has at least three more years before he can reasonably hope to get an assistant professorship—at a salary of less than $20,000 a year. The prospect is forbidding even with the in-school interest subsidy.

The nation's universities are producing lawyers and business-school graduates at an unprecedented rate and scientists and scholars in diminishing numbers. Traditionally, a large proportion of graduate students in the humanities have set their sights on college teaching. But with little hope of immediate employment during the current tenure bulge, many of the best scholars are switching to professional schools. In an exhaustive and disturbing study of the perils facing American graduate schools, William G. Bowen, president of Princeton University, found that in 1980 only 34 percent of all summa graduates at Harvard-Radcliffe planned immediate graduate study in the arts and sciences—compared with more than 75 percent in the mid-1960's. And who will be there to teach the next generation of scientists? Between 1970 and 1980, the number of Ph.D.'s in physics graduating from American universities dropped by almost half—from 1,740 to 985.

If the budget cutters have their way, tomorrow's little band of Ph.D.'s will consist of the scions of the wealthy, another handful that the best-endowed universities can afford to support, and a larger number supported by taxpayers at public colleges and universities. Though our graduate schools have had a glorious past—leading the nation in a century of unparalleled advances in research—whether they have a future depends upon the continued resistance of Congress to an unbelievably shortsighted proposal.

I believe deeply in the unquantifiable values of a university. Great universities aspire to transmit to their students the heritage of civilization; to unlock the treasures of the past; to bring fresh vision and new discipline to the growing fund of human knowledge; to enliven curiosity; to cherish the freedom to explore and express; to encourage joy in the presence of beauty and appreciation in the presence of wisdom; to discover, in the words of William Saroyan, "that which shines and is beyond corruption." It is not simply for technology that we need to know more, Lewis Thomas observes, "but for the hope of wisdom which our kind of culture must acquire for its survival."

A society that undervalues such aspirations does so at its peril. But even if one believes that a democratic society has no stake transcending economics and defense in the education of its citizens, one has to conclude that the Administration's policy toward higher education runs counter to the goals it has set for itself.

Anyone who balances the cost of fundamental laboratory research—which provides the base for such practical discoveries as antibiotics—against the soaring cost of medical care will find that, dollar for dollar, biomedical research is far and away the best buy in town. The sad irony is that today, with the explosive productivity of the "new biology," the opportunities for helping patients in the nation's hospitals are greater than ever before. Yet in 1981 the Reagan Administration insisted on cutting funding of basic biomedical research in our universities.

As to the Administration's commitment to enhance our national security, I would have thought it obvious that today's defense rests fundamentally on yesterday's basic science. The laser, for example, though happily of great use to medicine, communications, chemistry and physics, among others, is also at the heart of a number of weapons systems. Every Administration for the past 40 years has recognized the fundamental importance of basic science to the defense effort.

And what of the humanists and social scientists studying the cultures, politics and economics of our allies and adversaries? How can this country conduct an informed foreign policy without a flow of experts on the various areas of the world? We have only a dribble and it is in danger of evaporating further still.

The Department of Defense (D.O.D.) is trying to help. In a memo to Pentagon officials, Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger has warned: "The national base of basic research is inadequate to meet future D.O.D. needs and substantial sustained real growth in defense research is needed to restore this base." Although the Pentagon estimates that it will increase spending for basic research at universities by some $60 million during the current fiscal year, this comes nowhere near compensating for the hundreds of millions of basic research dollars cut from other programs. And, unlike the beleaguered National Science Foundation and National Institutes of Health, which have funded broad areas of fundamental research, the Pentagon's concept of "basic" research, in line with legal, fiscal and political constraints, must be directed toward projects of identifiable value to the military.

If the American university research base is not to be saved by the Pentagon, what about corporate philanthropy? "The level of industrial support for university research may triple in the 1980's," said Dr. Edward E. David Jr., president of the Exxon Research and Engineering Company, "but that would not equal the proposed cuts in the Federal budget in only one year." Last fall, the Exxon Education Foundation, aware that in recent years doctoral candidacies in engineering have declined by one-third, announced a program sensitive to the impending shortage of faculty members (between 10 and 15 percent of engineering faculty positions across the nation are currently unfilled). The foundation divided $15 million for graduate fellowships and junior faculty salary support among 66 engineering schools, a boost for which all 66 of us are grateful. Neither Exxon nor its beneficiaries claim these new, thinly spread grants are more than a small step in the long journey toward an answer to the question: Who will be left to teach the next generation of engineers?

Increases in corporate contributions to higher education in recent years are heartening. "Total corporate aid to higher education has risen to the billion-dollar-per-year range," observed Edward G. Jefferson, chairman of Du Pont and one of the leaders in corporate support for higher education. Yet, he added, "it is unlikely that corporate aid can be expected to offset reductions in Government funding."

The proposition that Federal cuts create incentives for private gifts is dangerously deceptive. In fact, Federal dollars on campus are frequently necessary to generate private dollars—both from increased numbers of students and from private philanthropy. When Federal aid was climbing, so was the quality of graduate students attracted to well-financed research projects and prominent professors whose distinction in teaching was matched by excellence in grant-supported research. As Federal assistance declines, the quality of research deteriorates, new funds dry up, old sources of support wither.

President Reagan's science adviser, George Keyworth, agrees that "the heaviest responsibility for basic research naturally falls on the Government. This is especially true where long-term, high-risk research is involved. . . ." Those are reassuring words, but the numbers are less cheering. The President's latest budget requests call for substantial cuts in the research and development funds of most Federal agencies and departments.

Overall, according to Frank Press, president of the National Academy of Sciences, the latest cuts proposed by the President would take away another $600 million from the $5.5 billion Federal budget for basic research. The resistance of Congress has so far spared the National Science Foundation's budget for the physical sciences, mathematics and engineering—at least for the moment they are scheduled to receive nominal increases—but funding for science education was cut by more than two-thirds.

Programs for basic research have always been easy to cut. They do not pack the political punch of urgency and quick results. From 1968 to 1980, according to Richard Atkinson, Chancellor of the University of California at San Diego and former director of the National Science Foundation, basic research as a fraction of the Federal budget declined by 27 percent and as a fraction of the gross national product by 16 percent.

The abruptness of many Federal cuts aggravates the problem. Following a meeting in October with Administration officials in Washington, nearly 100 distinguished scientists issued this statement: "Instability and abrupt changes in funding have severe effects: Research teams are broken up; investments in experiments involving large facilities . . . are poorly used. The continued flow of new researchers into our industrial and university laboratories is best maintained by their stable and continued participation in university-based graduate research."

"Basic science is a long-term investment, and depends on government support," stated the scientists. "Support of scientific research is a public expenditure from which all sectors of society benefit. There are no significant sources of support for such a collective benefit which can replace the Federal Government.

Without a major increase in Federal support for research projects and assistance to students, there will almost certainly be a further weakening of this nation, as countries with the sense to anticipate the future assume the lead. "The strength of the nation's research and development comes back to the strength of our top universities," acknowledged Dr. Keyworth. "We must restore strength to them."

As the President's science adviser, Dr. Keyworth reflects the Administration's views on the importance of the nation's leading universities. At the same time, the President has a profound commitment to preserving the vitality of the private sector. In his commencement address at Notre Dame last year, he said: "If ever the great independent colleges and universities are replaced by tax-supported institutions, the struggle to preserve academic freedom will have been lost."

But if these convictions are not impressed on the budget makers who have been hacking away at higher education, this Administration is in danger of going down in history as the great ravager of our independent colleges and universities.

The President can still lead us away from that destructive fate. Congress, in resisting major student aid and research cuts, has shown that it will follow if the Administration will lead in building on what we have.

Not only should the Administration renew the research capability of the nation's universities by restoring the cuts in basic research support, it should upgrade scientific equipment in our deteriorating university laboratories and establish a national construction fund to help rebuild university research facilities.

In addition to preserving the in-school interest subsidy, the Reagan Administration should:

Continue to make loans available to every student who shows genuine need. After all, these loans are made by private institutions, not the Government, and repayment is the obligation of the student. Besides, declining interest rates will cut much more of this program's costs than any of the pending proposals for change.

Restore the cuts in the Pell Grant and related Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant programs. During the past academic year, Pell Grants closed the gap for 2.7 million students. This year the gap is wider, with $300 million already slashed from the program.

Increase support for Work-Study, the program that makes it possible for students to find jobs in a tight economy so that they can work their way through college.

Carry out the program of merit graduate fellowships that became law as the Education Amendments of 1980 but that has yet to receive an appropriation.

These measures can be funded through savings from cuts that should not be reversed—$2 billion through the elimination of Social Security's financial aid feature and billions more from changes in the Guaranteed Student Loan Program already enacted.

Should more than those savings be invested in higher education and research? All I ask is that our elected representatives look at the way our money has been used, and with what results, from the G.I. Bill of Rights to the National Science Foundation and National Institutes of Health to the Pell Grant. Is there a more productive and broadly beneficial investment in human resources and the nation's future than a strong Federal commitment to the American university?

[From the New York Times, Feb. 8, 1982]

CUT IN U.S. HELP FOR STUDENTS AFFECTING COLLEGE ENTRY RULES

(By Susan Chira)

Wesleyan University, in response to proposed cuts in Federal student aid, is ending an admissions policy that did not consider student ability to pay. The school will now reject some students who cannot afford the full tuition.

The decision reverses a policy that Wesleyan, like many other private colleges and universities, has maintained since the early 1970's.

This policy, known among educators as "aid-blind" admissions, has been under pressure at other private universities, but few admissions for financial aid officials have said publicly that their schools will have to choose students on the basis of their ability to pay.

The unanimous vote this weekend by Wesleyan's board of trustees made the Middletown, Conn., college the first major school to end its aid-blind policy publicly, educators said.

Wesleyan's president, Colin G. Campbell, called the decision "a workable accommodation to an unfortunate situation."

POLICIES EXAMINED ELSEWHERE

Officials at some other universities said yesterday that Federal cuts were forcing them, too, to re-examine their aid-blind admissions policy.

"I would hate to be in this profession if we couldn't admit students regardless of need," said Mary Ellen Ames, director of admissions at Wellesley College in Massachusetts. "But whether you have money or not sometimes changes ideals."

School financial aid officials said the events raised the question of whether only wealthier people would be able to afford to attend the most selective—and expensive—private colleges.

As Wesleyan's new system will work, beginning with the 1982-83 school year, the school will first select a class of entering students purely on merit, said Karl Furstenberg, dean of admissions. Then, if the amount of financial aid these students need totals more than 10 percent of the university's educational and general expenditures budget, students on the waiting list who did not need financial aid will be picked instead of needy students at the bottom of the first-choice list.

"No one likes the idea of taking out people without money and putting in people with money," Mr. Furstenberg said. "It wouldn't be that sort of crass exchange."

But he said cuts in Federal funds for financial aid had made it impossible for Wesleyan to provide aid for all the students it would like to admit.

In 1981-82, Wesleyan spent $2.3 million of its own unrestricted funds on scholarship grants—approximately 8 percent of its budget. Wesleyan's student-faculty budget advisory committee predicted that the university would have had to spend 15 percent of its budget on scholarship by 1986 if the aid-blind policy had remained in effect.

Mr. Furstenberg said that Wesleyan would probably spend about $3 million to finance scholarship grants next year, more than double what it spent two years ago.

Tuition, room and board at Wesleyan this year total $10,900, Mr. Furstenberg said. The college receives 30 percent of its $4 million costs for scholarship from the Government, he added. In addition Federal loan programs provide $6 million more to needy students.

REVIEWS BY OTHER COLLEGES

Among the other colleges whose financial aid officials said yesterday that they were reviewing their aid-blind admissions policies were Columbia, Barnard, Harvard, Boston College, Cornell University, Princeton University and Wellesley College. All the officials said they planned to continue their aid-blind admissions policies next year.

"Rejecting an aid-blind policy is a mistake—I oppose it 100 percent," said John Maguire, dean of admissions, records and financial aid at Boston College. "We should not play God and make decisions for people."

He and other officials said they would prefer that applicants know they were qualified for admission and then allow them to decide whether they could afford to attend.

Lawrence J. Momo, associate director of admissions at Columbia, said: "If the extent of cutbacks continues as projected, there will be very few schools who will be able to meet the full financial needs of the students."

ALTERNATIVES ARE CONSIDERED

Admissions and financial aid directors outlined alternative policies to account for Federal cuts in education aid. The one most officials favored would offer the most financial aid to the most highly qualified candidates for admission. Other suggested plans included giving only part of the aid requested by a student, dividing available funds equally among students or increasing student jobs and loans.

Increasing students' job loads may detract from their academic work, however, said Barbara Schmitterer, vice president for student affairs at Barnard. "We are trying to rethink financial aid to find innovative ways to meet student needs."

L. Fred Jewett, dean of admissions and financial aid at Harvard University said that Harvard's endowment and a current fundraising campaign would allow the university to admit those who could not afford the tuition, room and board costs, which will total more than $12,000 next year.

Federal money accounts for 24 percent of Harvard's scholarship budget, Mr. Jewett said. If the Government continues to cut grants and loans, he said, Harvard will have to use $30 million to $40 million of its endowment funds to make up the difference. "The cuts would be a severe strain on our resources," he added.

James Scannell, dean of admissions at Cornell University, said that Cornell could lose up to half its $8.5 million in Federal scholarship aid under the proposed budget cuts. Cornell's yearly costs total about $11,000.

Most private universities provide a financial aid package for needy students composed of the these Federally financed grants or loans:

Pell grants (so named because Senator Claiborne Pell, Democrat of Rhode Island sponsored the legislation) and Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants, awarded to student on the basis of need.

Low-interest National Direct Student Loans and Federally guaranteed loans.

Work/study programs, in which the Government and the university both contribute to salaries for educationally-related student jobs.

The proposed Federal budget for 1983 would cut Pell grants by one-third and trim all Federal aid for student scholarship by $636 million, or about 60 percent. In addition the Administration would impose much tighter restrictions on the guaranteed loans.●

LITHUANIAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

● Mr. ZORINSKY. Mr. President, next Tuesday, February 16, will mark the 64th anniversary of Lithuanian Independence Day and the 731st anniversary of the founding of the Lithuanian State. As has been my custom in past years, I would like to take this opportunity to say a few words about the ongoing struggle for independence of the Lithuanian people.

The 1918 declaration of Lithuanian independence ended centuries of tyranny and persecution at the hands of czarist Russia. Equally important, it opened two decades of unparalleled economic and political progress, as trade was expanded, Lithuania's standard of living improved and its political system was liberated.

Unfortunately, in June of 1940, the Soviet Union used the occasion of the spreading war in Europe to once again put Lithuania and Lithuanians under the heavy yoke of Soviet oppression. Soviet troops marched in, forced the resignation of the existing coalition government and installed a new Soviet puppet regime that continues in power today.

To its credit, the United States has never recognized the Soviet annexation of Lithuania. And the Lithuanian people themselves have resisted, with all their strength, Soviet efforts to dominate them.

This resistance is now more than four decades old. It has produced its own long list of heroes—freedom fighters seeking to achieve a new Lithuanian independence as the Soviets continue to stifle nationalism and oppress those who seek only the basic human rights to which all people should be entitled.

The efforts and suffering of these brave dissidents led to the appearance more than a year ago of a new Lithuanian journal, "Tautos Kelias" (The Path of the Nation), which has aptly described the feelings of all freedom-loving Lithuanians and those who stand with them. "The occupation government is not forever," it proclaimed, "the hour of independence shall come and Lithuania will be free and independent again."

Let us not forget, as this 64th anniversary of Lithuanian independence approaches, our commitment to these brave people and their ultimate freedom from Soviet domination.●

UNIVERSITY OF HARTFORD—SILVER ANNIVERSARY

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, education has often seemed an area of life that is—or should be—insulated from the pressures that impinge on other institutions. Even those who have shown a certain contempt for the "ivory tower" of the college or university have tended to agree that schools, because they exist to educate our young, should not be placed under the same kinds of stress as businesses and government agencies.

And yet, the history of recent decades tempts us to conclude that our educational system has faced turmoils and upheavals that exceed those confronted by the other portions of our society. In the forties, our colleges and universities were flooded with unprecedented numbers of students as returning GI's sought to make a future for themselves through the benefits provided by a grateful nation. In the fifties, the challenge of Soviet technology gave colleges a desperate relevance and placed them in a kind of goldfish bowl at the very center of American life. The radicalism of the sixties brought down on them a degree of criticism—even hostility—that they had done little to deserve, while the fiscal austerities of the seventies and eighties have posed and will continue to pose an actual threat to the existence of many of them.

Given this tumultuous history and these dangerous challenges, there is something very opportune about the fact that a unique institution located in the State of Connecticut is not only facing its future with an infectious joie de vivre but is celebrating, in the present academic year, its 25th anniversary charter year.

That institution is the University of Hartford and it offers an example for the proper conduct of educational affairs in today's United States.

Though the schools that make it up can be traced back to the period just after the Civil War, the university was actually chartered in 1957. It has faced up to the task of knitting its constituent schools into a single institution that draws on their strengths without eliminating their creative diversity. In a period of only a few years, it has overhauled its administration in order to prepare for the unprecedented challenges of the eighties—including budgetary cutbacks that directly threaten many of its students.

What makes Connecticut so proud of the University of Hartford, however, is not only this high level of accomplishment, but the vigor and sheer sense of joy with which it has been achieved. The president of the university, Mr. Stephen Joel Trachtenberg, is one of the few educators of nationwide reputation who could also earn his living as a professional humorist.

And Mr. Trachtenberg is representative of the institution he heads. Those who have visited its campus in West Hartford will agree with me when I say that there can be few schools anywhere in the world today that are quite as vibrant, as exciting, as electric.

The University of Hartford is not a school blessed with a huge endowment, with real estate holdings that date back to the Founding Fathers, or with a convenient oil well or two tucked away on its campus. It is a school that must rely on its own wits in order to confront the pressures of the present decade—including the highly menacing ones that lurk inside the present proposals for yet another round of education "cutbacks." Indeed, it is a school making a nationwide reputation for itself as a paradigm for businesslike thinking that does not negate or contradict the traditional and historical functions of higher education.

Mr. President, the present moment gives us reason for doubt as well as reasons to be hopeful. As we slide deeper into recession—and analysts wrestle with the possibility this time around recession may deepen into actual depression—it may be more essential then ever for us to seek out those areas and institutions in American life that have somehow generated a more positive outlook. The University of Hartford, I believe, is a place of this kind. We should be grateful for its existence. I hope you will join me in wishing it the very best of luck as it celebrates its 25th Anniversary Charter Year and prepares to embark on its second quarter century as a fully fledged university.●

PROCEDURES FOR CONSIDERATION OF FTC RULES UNDER LEGISLATIVE VETO PROVISION

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, last October, Senator KASTEN, the chairman of the Consumer Subcommittee, prepared a general policy statement summarizing the procedures for Senate consideration of Federal Trade Commission rules under the legislative veto provision of the Federal Trade Commission Improvements Act of 1980. In summarizing the veto procedures contained in the Improvements Act and the Senate rules, the preparation of this statement was designed to educate the Congress and the public about the veto process and improve the mechanical efficiency of our consideration of Federal Trade Commission rules. Senator KASTEN circulated the statement to other Commerce Committee members for their comments and had the statement printed in the RECORD on October 29.

I would like to commend Senator KASTEN once again for perceiving the need for this kind of clarification and for taking the initiative to put this paper together. Whether or not one favors legislative veto as a concept and regardless of the merit or lack of merit in specific agency rules, we all benefit from this kind of effort to streamline the mechanics and leave more time for consideration of important policy issues.

Mr. President, Senator KASTEN'S policy statement calls upon me, as chairman of the Commerce Committee, to have the statement reprinted in the RECORD at the beginning of each session of Congress. With the consent of the Senate, I am pleased to do so at this time.

The statement follows:

POLICY STATEMENT—SENATE CONSIDERATION OF FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION TRADE REGULATION RULES UNDER THE FTC IMPROVEMENTS ACT OF 1980

Under the FTC Improvements Act of 1980,[1] the Federal Trade Commission is required to submit all newly promulgated trade regulation rules to Congress for review. The Act permits Congress, if both Houses concur, to disapprove or "veto" a proposed rule. This Policy Statement summarizes the procedures for Senate consideration of such rules under this authority.

I. REQUIREMENTS OF THE IMPROVEMENTS ACT

Under the Act, the Federal Trade Commission is required to deliver the proposed rule to each House of the Congress on the same day, and to each House while it is in session. The rule will become effective in accordance with its terms unless, within a period of 90 calendar days of continuous session, both Houses adopt a concurrent resolution disapproving the rule.

The Act provides that a continuous session, for this purpose, is broken only by an adjournment sine die at the end of a legislative session. In addition, days on which either House is not in session because of an adjournment of more than 5 days, such as during a recess period, are not included in computing the 90 calendar day review period. Finally, if an adjournment sine die occurs before the end of the 90 days, and Congress has not acted to disapprove the rule, the Commission is then required to resubmit the rule at the beginning of the next regular session of Congress, when the 90 day review period would begin anew.[2]

The Improvements Act provides the specific form for a resolution of disapproval; therefore, only one such resolution need be introduced in each House. The Act also states that if a House adopts a resolution to disapprove a particular rule, no other disapproval resolution may be considered by that House.

Congress, under the Improvements Act, is not authorized to disapprove only a part of a rule, nor is it authorized to re-write the text of the rule. However, if both Houses adopt a concurrent resolution and a rule is disapproved, the law states that the Federal Trade Commission may alter and resubmit the rule for new consideration. The Commission may take this action based on the existing rulemaking record or by obtaining additional evidence through a further notice-and-comment proceeding.

Rules submitted to Congress by the FTC and any disapproval resolution introduced or received from the other House must be referred to the Commerce Committee in the House or Senate, as the case may be.

II. SENATE COMMERCE COMMITTEE PROCEDURES

The Improvements Act does not set particular procedures for Commerce Committee consideration of disapproval resolutions. Existing House or Senate Rules and Committee rules would apply.[3] This Policy Statement will summarize the procedures that the Senate Commerce Committee will use in considering disapproval resolutions referred to the Committee.

In accordance with Senate Commerce Committee procedures, the Chairman of the Committee would decide whether to refer the disapproval resolution to a Subcommittee and, if so, assign the appropriate Subcommittee. If the resolution is not referred to a Subcommittee, the Committee Chairman would decide whether or not to hold a hearing.[4] If the resolution is referred, however, the decision on a hearing would be made by the Subcommittee Chairman.

If a hearing is to be held, the Chairman would announce its schedule at least one week in advance, unless the Committee determines there is good cause to begin the hearing at an earlier date. The announcement would include this information:

1. Date, time and place of the hearing;
2. The Majority and Minority staff assigned;
3. An invitation for interested parties to submit concise written comments explaining why the Congress should or should not disapprove the Commission's rule; and
4. A request that parties with similar interests submit joint written comments.

Concise written comments or other statements and letters received by the Committee in response to the press announcement would be made a part of the hearing record. The customary Committee hearing procedures would otherwise govern the conduct of the hearing.

The Chairman or Subcommittee Chairman may choose to solicit written comments in advance of a hearing, or instead of having a hearing. If written comments are solicited and no hearing is held, concise written comments, statements and letters received would be published as a Committee Print.

The Committee would consider the disapproval resolution in executive session, and report the resolution by majority vote of the Members present of voting by proxy. The Committee's usual rules and procedures governing proxies, quorums, Committee reports and related matters would apply.

The Committee Chairman would have this Policy Statement printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the beginning of each regular session of Congress, so long as the veto provisions of the improvements Act remain in effect.[5]

III. DISCHARGE OF THE COMMERCE COMMITTEE AND FLOOR DEBATE

If the Commerce Committee fails to report a disapproval resolution within 75 calendar days of continuous session after referral of the resolution, the Improvements Act provides that it shall be in order to move to discharge the Committee from further consideration of the resolution.

The Act provides specific rules governing floor action in the Senate on motions to discharge. These rules are summarized here:

A motion to discharge the resolution in the Senate may be made only by a Member favoring the concurrent resoluton, and such a motion shall be privileged.

Debate on the discharge motion is limited to no more than an hour, to be divided equally between those favoring and those opposing the motion.

An amendment to the discharge motion shall not be in order, and it shall not be in order to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to or disagreed to.

Following action on a motion to discharge, the motion may not be renewed, nor may another motion to discharge be made.

When the Commerce Committee has reported, or has been discharged from further consideration of a concurrent resolution, it shall be in order at any time thereafter to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution, even if a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to. The Act also provides that:

[1] Pub. L. No. 96-252, section 21, 94 Stat. 374 (codified at 15 U.S.C. 57a-1).

[2] If a rule is resubmitted to Congress because an adjournment sine die has interrupted an initial 90 day review period, disapproval resolutions would have to be introduced and acted upon in both Houses during the second review period in order for a rule to be disapproved. Any action by one House to disapprove a rule in the initial period would thus be disregarded.

[3] The Improvements Act notes that the Congressional review provisions are enacted as an exercise of the rulemaking power of the House and Senate and that they are deemed a part of the Rules of each House. The provisions supercede other House or Senate Rules only to the extent they are inconsistent. In the Senate, Committee procedure is governed by Rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate.

[4] The Chairman may choose to hold a hearing even if a disapproval resolution is not introduced, but this presumably would not ordinarily occur.

[5] The veto provisions of the Act expire on September 30, 1982 unless they are renewed by further legislation.

This motion shall be privileged and shall not be debatable.

An amendment to the motion shall not be in order, and it shall not be in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to or disagreed to.

The Improvements Act provides specific rules governing floor debate of the resolution of disapproval:

Debate on the concurrent resolution shall be limited to not more than 10 hours, which shall be divided equally between those favoring and those opposing the resolution.

A motion to limit debate further shall not be debatable.

An amendment to, or motion to recommit, the resolution shall not be in order, and it shall not be in order to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed or disagreed to.

Appeals from the decisions of the Chair relating to the application of the Rules of the Senate to the procedures governing a concurrent resolution shall be decided without debate.

POLISH CHRISTMAS TRADITIONS

● Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, Wisconsin's heritage is rich with the traditions of the various ethnic peoples who settled and developed it. I want to share with you and my colleagues a description of the special nature of Christmas for Polish families early in this century. I call your attention to an article which appeared in the Stevens Point Journal entitled "Christmas Traditions" on December 18, 1981. It was written by Esther Corrigan of Amherst, Wis. Mrs. Corrigan, who is 71, grew up as Esther Torzewski near Ringle, Wis. She is 1 of 11 children, whose parents were immigrants who fled an earlier era of repression in Poland.

The article follows:

[From the Stevens Point Journal, Dec. 18, 1981]

CHRISTMAS TRADITIONS

(By Esther Corrigan)

The days were always short and night came early in winter in Wisconsin. But the days seemed endless before Christmas. It seemed just ages before the great day arrived. As a child the anticipation was almost more than I could bear.

We lived on a small farm and times were hard, still we always seemed to have enough money for a few extras at Christmas.

We were of Polish descent and in our home the religious aspect of the holy day was always stressed.

The day before Christmas, Dec. 24, was a day of strict fast and abstinence for adults.

The day was spent cooking and baking, decorating the house with garlands and trimming the tree with popcorn and frosted cookies. It always ended with a feast, not eaten before the first star was out. It usually was clear and cold and we eagerly looked out of frost-covered windows to get a glimpse of the first star so the festivities could begin.

The chores were done early that evening so we would all be ready to enjoy our evening meal. The table was decorated with candles and balsam boughs. Mother used her good glass bowls and the house smelled of spices and good food. We all gathered around the table and said the blessing. Dad said a special prayer of thanksgiving and then broke the Opwatek, the altar bread, baked especially for families to share at the evening meal. He then handed it to mother. She in turn broke it and handed it to the oldest child. Each child broke off a piece until we all had a portion. We solemnly ate it. After that the feast began.

Although meat was never served, Mother always made at least 12 kinds of food, one to represent each month of the year. We started out with a sweet-sour plum soup which we children loved. Then there was herring in cream and baked potatoes, beans, peas, vegetables, fruits and cheese, a variety of coffee cakes, pie and decorated animal cookies. A dish was placed under the table for food scraps and a bundle of hay was placed under the table. This was to remind us of Christ's birth on the hay. The food and hay were given to the farm animals on Christmas morning.

After we ate our meal, we gathered around our Christmas tree to sing carols. The Polish people believed the holy day began with the first star. Later we distributed the gifts that were under the tree. We never got many "store toys," but we got blocks and things made from wood by Dad. Mother always knitted each of us a new pair of mittens and we always got some long sticks of candy and perhaps an orange. We always had peanuts and nuts, and for us that was more than enough. As the evening wore on, us little ones were sent to bed and Dad and the older children prepared to walk to midnight Mass. I always remember feeling I would never get big enough to join them for that midnight walk to welcome the Christ child at the end of a perfect day. I always remember this when I attend Midnight Mass now.●

THE UNIVERSITY OF HARTFORD'S 25TH ANNIVERSARY CHARTER YEAR

● Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, At the present moment in American history, we are hearing a great deal of rhetoric about the need to return to the values of an earlier America—to end our long addiction to the idea of receiving aid from Washington, and to decentralize ourselves back into self-reliance.

So many people have jumped on this particular bandwagon, for all kinds of reasons having to do with self-interest, that it has come to seem questionable whether any of this talk can be taken seriously. It goves me special pleasure, therefore, to take note of the 25th Anniversary Charter Year of an American university that has come to embody the values that too often receive mere lipservice from other institutions.

I refer to the University of Hartford, located in my own State of Connecticut. Though its roots stretch back into the previous century, the university was officially chartered only 25 years ago. Since that time, it has begun to make an impact on this country that is out of proportion to its actual size.

I do not wish to claim that the University of Hartford does not receive a significant portion of its funding from the Federal Government. It does, expecially in the area of student financial aid. And it is struggling, like so many other private and public institutions, with cutbacks in funding that threaten many of its present and potential students.

But the University of Hartford nevertheless embodies a set of values and attitudes that deserves close attention from legislators, from other educators, and from the American public. Unlike many colleges and universities that owe their origins to the Federal largess of the postwar period, the University of Hartford was founded from the grassroots—out of a sense of local pride and local need. When it was chartered in 1957, it drew into its embrace such established local schools as the Hartford Art School, Hillyer College, and the Hartt College of Music. Today, it forms a vibrant mosaic that includes the Barney School of Business and Public Administration, the College of Engineering, and the Ward Technical College.

What distinguishes the University of Hartford, however, is its outlook—and that outlook can best be described as a very high form of adaptiveness. As a newly chartered institution, the university had no sooner caught its breath, so to speak, than it was confronted by the severe budgetary challenges of the seventies; and it had no sooner learned to take those in its stride than it had to face, as it is now facing, the unprecedented pressures of the eighties.

Other colleges and universities, confronting the same threats to their existence, have tended to become either rigid or panic stricken. The University of Hartford offers a refreshing contrast. It has responded by choosing a new administration, and by filling its executive ranks with individuals who would not be out of place in the upper echelons of private industry. It has worked hard to see to it that students admitted in a less straitened period are not forced out of the university by cuts in their scholarships and loans. It has set an internal pace that can be described as serious and concerned, but at the same time confident and optimistic. It continues to establish itself on the national educational scene as a school with traditional strengths and innovative ambitions: One of the very first American universities to understand that the pressures that have always characterized American business must now be faced, too, by those whose mission it is to educate America's youth.

The University of Hartford's 25th Anniversary Charter Year gives me the opportunity to praise it, but my praise, obviously, looks forward to the decades still to come and to the 21st century as well. We are embarked on a national experiment whose consequences must be described, at the present time, as extremely uncertain. Even those who wish the experiment nothing but success must admit that the outcome is in doubt. At the present moment, therefore, we are particularly in need of national "role models" in every area of American life—groups, agencies, and institutions that teach us how to confront an ambiguous future without terror or despair, and without premature congratulations.

The University of Hartford is an institution of this kind. It is my very real pleasure to inform you of its excellence and to commend it to you as an example for your own colleges and universities. Long may it flourish.●

CHIEF WILLIAM L. HART, DETROIT POLICE DEPARTMENT

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, tomorrow Chief William L. Hart of the Detroit Police Department will receive the "National Award in Crime Prevention" from the National Crime Prevention Coalition. He has earned the recognition and appreciation this award symbolizes.

Bill Hart started off as a patrolman in Detroit over 30 years ago. He never forgot the lesson he learned on the beat: That personal contact, mutual respect, and the involvement of citizens as well as the police are the essential ingredients in any effective crime prevention program. Bill Hart also learned that its better to avert a crime than chase a crook; better to involve people in a program of prevention than to involve them in building a penitentiary.

And Bill Hart applied those lessons that he learned. As he advanced through the ranks he instituted a variety of programs designed to deter crime. Today, Detroit has 150 officers assigned to crime prevention programs operating under a $4 million budget. And during his 5½-year tenure as chief, Detroit—in one 3-year period—experienced a 28-percent decrease in the crime rate, the most significant decrease ever recorded in any major American city.

Just as Bill Hart learned from his experiences how to deter crime, others are now seeking to learn from him. In 1981 he was appointed to the President's Violent Crime Task Force. And since his initiatives have taken root, other cities have adopted a whole host of programs which he began in Detroit, including neighborhood watch, business watch, citizen's mobile patrol, police ministations, and a specific crime prevention program focused on the elderly. Indeed, his efforts have also served as a model for the U.S. Army and Air Force which have applied many of his concepts at bases around the world.

I was president of the Detroit City Council when Bill Hart became chief of police. I have known him for many years and admired him for many years. The honor he receives today is one he truly deserves. I am pleased for him, proud of his efforts and the efforts of his officers, and delighted that the city of Detroit and the State of Michigan have had the benefits of his services for so long.●

ORDER FOR RECESS UNTIL 10 A.M. ON TOMORROW

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today it stand in recess until the hour of 10 a.m. on tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR THE RECOGNITION OF CERTAIN SENATORS ON TOMORROW

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that after the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order the following Senators be recognized for not more than 15 minutes each on special orders and in this order: the Senator from Missouri (Mr. DANFORTH) and the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. DURENBERGER).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, it is my intention on tomorrow to ask the Senate to provide a brief period for the transaction of routine morning business after the execution of the two special orders. It is my hope, however, that we can return to the consideration of this measure as soon as possible in view of the fact that certain statutory authorizations expire at midnight tonight and the House of Representatives will be in session for an uncertain number of hours on tomorrow.

So it is anticipated that after the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order and the execution of the special orders and after a very brief period for the transaction of routine morning business we will resume consideration of the urgent supplement on CCC.

We will continue on that as is necessary to complete action on that measure and then, of course, resume consideration of the Department of Justice authorizations bill under the provisions of rule XXII or one of the other urgent supplemental appropriation bills now held at the desk by unanimous consent and which are the subject of the order empowering the majority leader after consulting with the minority leader to proceed to their consideration.

Mr. President, I hope that on tomorrow we can finish all three supplementals, the two that are here and perhaps one other as it is received from the House of Representatives and resume consideration of DOJ before the conclusion of the Senate's business which I estimate to be approximately 6 p.m. on tomorrow evening.

Mr. President, there are certain other matters that may be quickly disposed of, I believe. First, a unanimous-consent request or so that I hope and believe has been cleared on the other side.

ORDER DISCHARGING COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS FROM FURTHER CONSIDERATION OF NOMINATION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, as in executive session, that the Committee on Foreign Relations be discharged from further consideration of the nomination of Reynoldo Philip Maduro, of Maryland, to be an Assistant Director of the ACTION agency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, there is one nomination under New Reports on today's Executive Calendar. May I inquire of the minority leader if he is prepared to consider that item at this time?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. We are ready on this side of the aisle to proceed.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the minority leader.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now go into executive session for the purpose of considering the nomination of Malcolm M. B. Sterrett, of Maryland, to be a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

The assistant legislative clerk read the nomination of Malcolm M. B. Sterrett, of Maryland, to be a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is considered and confirmed.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the nominee was confirmed.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified that the Senate has given its consent to this nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. BAKER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now return to legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE TOMORROW

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I have outlined the schedule for tomorrow in a previous statement. May I say, however, that in view of the agenda just described and the rather lengthy debate on the amendment to the appropriation bill this evening, there is a real possibility—and Senators should be on notice, there is a real possibility—of an early rollcall vote, within an hour, perhaps, after we convene on tomorrow or even less.

So I would warn all Senators that they should be on the lookout for a vote perhaps as early as 11 o'clock on tomorrow.

APPOINTMENT OF SENATOR INOUYE TO READ PRESIDENT WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, if the Chair will indulge me for a moment there may be one other matter to dispose of.

Mr. President, may I inquire of the Chair if he is in position to designate a Member to perform the duties of the delivery of President Washington's Farewell Address?

THE PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAYAKAWA). The Chair, pursuant to the order of January 24, 1901, appoints the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE) to read Washington's Farewell Address on Monday, February 22, 1982.

ORDER FOR RECESS UNTIL 10 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, if there is no further business to come before the Senate, I move, in accordance with the order just entered, that the Senate now stand in recess until the hour of 10 a.m. tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, at 6:42 p.m., recessed until Wednesday, February 10, 1982, at 10 a.m.

CONFIRMATION

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate February 9, 1982:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

Malcolm M. B. Sterrett, of Maryland, to be a Member of the Interstate Commerce Commission for the term of 7 years from January 1, 1981.

The above nomination was approved subject to the nominee's commitment to respond to requests to appear and testify before any duly constituted committee of the Senate.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Tuesday, February 9, 1982

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Reverend Dr. C. Curtis Hess, pastor, Central Christian Church, St. Petersburg, Fla., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, which art in Heaven, we come before Your eternal throne today, fully aware that it is in You we live, move, and have our being.

We recognize Your infinite knowledge and power over all creation. Therefore we are painfully aware that You know each one of us "inside and out." You know what we appear to be. And You also know the innermost secrets of our hearts.

But we thank You Lord that when we bring to You all our weaknesses, all our unworthiness, all our sins, humbly confessing them, then we receive healing grace and pardon.

Grant unto these Members of this great House of Representatives divinely sought wisdom. Help them to know who they are and whose they are. Remove from their hearts all prejudice and pettiness that would hinder them from making decisions that will glorify Thy name. Be with our President, our Congress, our elected leaders all over this great Nation.

God bless America. In the precious name of Christ we pray. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Saunders, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on January 30, 1982, the President approved and signed a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H.J. Res. 382. Joint resolution to permit the broadcasting in the United States of the International Communication Agency film "Let Poland Be Poland: A Day of Solidarity With the People of Poland."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Sparrow, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S.J. Res. 141. Joint resolution designating February 7 through February 13, 1982, as "National Crime Prevention Week"; and

S.J. Res. 130. Joint resolution designating February 22, 1982, the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the birth of George Washington, a "Day of National Celebration."

The message also announced that the Vice President, pursuant to Public Law 86-42, appointed Mr. ZORINSKY to the Canada-United States interparliamentary group.

The message also announced that the Vice President, pursuant to Public Law 86-42, appointed Mr. STEVENS as the chairman of the U.S. delegation to the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Union for 1982.

THE REVEREND DR. CURTIS HESS

(Mr. YOUNG of Florida asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, our guest chaplain today is my friend, Dr. C. Curtis Hess, who for 26 years has been pastor of the Central Christian Church of St. Petersburg, Fla. Under his leadership, the congregation has become one of the largest Christian churches in the great State of Florida. Dr. Hess has served in many capacities as a leader in his denominational work, on both National and State levels.

From the beginning of his ministry in St. Petersburg 26 years ago, and continuing even to this day, he has been active in the community life of Pinellas County. He has a deep desire to be an "agent of change for the better," and he has a deep commitment to love and to serve our people.

Dr. and Mrs. Hess—Jo—have been married for over 35 years. They have three children and three grandchildren.

Mr. Speaker, just about a year ago Dr. Hess baptized my youngest daughter, Kimber. We are very happy to welcome Dr. Hess to the Chamber today.

WHY NOT CHARGE INTEREST ON AGRICULTURAL LOANS AS WELL AS STUDENT LOANS?

(Mr. PEYSER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Speaker, the American public must be wondering when it is important for the Federal Government to collect interest on loans and when it is not important. Evidently, when it deals with the students of our country, it is absolutely essential that they pay interest on their loans. I happen to agree with that, but what I find very difficult to understand is how, under the Commodity Credit Corporation, when they loan billions and billions of dollars every year to the agricultural community, when those loans are forfeited no interest is charged whatsoever, even though the original agreement calls for the curent rate of interest.

I think it is time we changed that, Mr. Speaker, and give the agricultural community an opportunity to at least pay the same interest rate of 9 percent as students have to pay on its forfeited loans. We will have that chance this afternoon to defeat this bill.

PRESIDENT'S BUDGET: FICTION OR NONFICTION?

(Ms. FERRARO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. FERRARO. Mr. Speaker, President Reagan's new budget was released over the weekend, and the level of interest in it was so high that it reportedly is climbing the best-seller lists at local bookstores.

The problem is, nobody's sure whether it belongs on the fiction list or the nonfiction list.

Thanks to the President's Director of Management and Budget, we have learned that last year's budget was the result of a process of trial and error. If the numbers they tried showed a deficit too high, they decided there must be an error, and they would change the numbers. This year is no different apparently, as the administration blatantly ignores economic reality and forecasts historically unheard of growth rates. As a matter of fact, the reason we are voting this afternoon on an emergency supplemental appropriation for unemployment compensation is that the President gave us bogus numbers last year.

But there is reality in President's budget. The reality is the denial of food, housing, medical care, and education to America's poor and middle-class citizens. Unfortunately, that is not a fictionalized account.

MORE MODERATE ECONOMIC POLICIES NEEDED

(Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I have looked at the President's budget; I note that his promise now is not a promise of prosperity, but of high deficits. Just to put it in perspective, the highest deficit in the history of this country was $65.5 billion during the last year of President Ford. Now, we are talking about deficits of $100 billion or more.

Why? Because the program does not add up. We cannot have the deepest tax cut in the history of America and at the same time have the largest military buildup in the history of this country, and have a balanced budget. It does not work.

Add to that high interest rates, and you find yourself in a patch of economic quicksand. The more the administration wiggles, the deeper they are going to get.

What we need to look for is dry ground; we need to close corporate tax loopholes and raise some revenue that way; we need to moderate the increase in the military spending, and we need to start betting on the little guy, the small- to medium-sized business and the workingman. They are the ones that can make the difference in our economy.

We do not need more budget deficits in this country. We need economic growth. That is why we need more moderate economic policies than the ones the President is offering.

PASSAGE OF HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 391 URGED

(Mr. KILDEE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, House Joint Resolution 391, which will shortly be considered by the House, contains a much needed supplementary appropriation for the Federal funding of unemployment compensation and employment services programs operated by the States. As my colleagues are aware, funding levels in the continuing resolution have been inadequate to deal with the volume of unemployed workers who must rely upon these programs during the current recession. The actual unemployment rate in my home State of Michigan, for example, was 16 percent during the month of January, for the highest unemployment rate in 24 years. Although January unemployment figures for Flint, the largest city in my Seventh Congressional District, are not yet available, Flint's unemployment has consistently been higher than the State's average and will certainly exceed 16 percent in January.

Because of funding cuts contained in the continuing resolution, the Michigan Employment Security Commission announced on January 16 that it would be forced to close 42 offices and lay off an additional 750 Michigan Employment Security Commission employees across the State. These cutbacks will effectively eliminate job placement services for more than half of the nearly 677,000 unemployed workers now seeking employment through the Michigan Employment Security Commission.

It is a tragic irony that the Federal Government has cut funding and crippled these services in the States at a time when they are most desperately needed by our Nation's unemployed.

The passage of House Joint Resolution 391, which I cosponsored in its original version as introduced by Mr. YATES, would at least allow Michigan Employment Security Commission offices to remain open and its employees to continue to provide important employment services to our jobless workers. For this reason, I strongly support passage of House Joint Resolution 391.

SOME BUDGET ASSUMPTIONS CANNOT BE BELIEVED

(Mr. JOHN L. BURTON asked for and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. JOHN L. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, the President's budget projects huge increases in the receipts from sales of surplus federally owned land. I just do not believe there is that much unwanted land to sell or that big a market to buy. The big parcels of attractive surplus land usually come out of the Defense Department, which thinks they should be given away. The reasons the administration's proposed land rush will not produce the billions of dollars forecast are as follows:

Auction sales open to speculators will violate local control of these land parcels. Hospitals, schools, and State and local governments that are supposed to buy under the administration's budget assumptions do not have the money to do so. They will probably be forced to try and thwart the sales by downzoning the parcels.

The dollar estimates in the budget just are not supported by the history of what the Government got in past cash sales.

The budget proposal includes receipts from land sales between one Federal agency and another. Despite this exercise in paperwork, the budget claims the result will be more efficient property management.

Executive orders have supposedly required this kind of process for years. A proposed new Interagency Review Board will still have to get Cabinet agencies to relinquish their land, foretelling a modern version of the old range wars.

The President's budget forecasts $1 billion of income in 1983 and $4 billion every year after from all these purported land sales. The chances of finding and selling that much unwanted Federal land are about nil. If the rest of the administration's budget is based on assumptions like this one, the deficit is going to be like the proverbial elephant masquerading as a mouse with a glandular condition.

Some people may believe the President's assumptions, but the same people believe that chickens have lips.

A CHALLENGE TO THE SUPPLY SIDERS

(Mr. VOLKMER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Speaker, we all know from the passing of time and the reading of the Atlantic Monthly article that the figures for the gross national product and interest rates, inflation, and so forth, as contained in last year's budget, were not correct and were there by hook or crook; mostly crook.

Now, we look at this year's budget and basically find the same thing. That is not just Democrats talking. That is from Herbert Stein, Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers to President Nixon; William Fellner, who was a member of the Council of Economic Advisers to President Ford; and Rudy Penner, Chief Budget Economist for President Ford. They all agree that the budget deficits as proposed in President Reagan's budget for 1983 are much lower than they will be.

They also all agree that the gross national product percentage figures contained in the budget for 1983 and 1984 are a lot higher than they should be or could be. Therefore, that also shows that the unemployment rate shown in that budget is much lower than it will be, and budget deficits will be far higher. Herbert Stein also issued a challenge to Donald Regan, Secretary of the Treasury. I would like to issue that challenge to the gentleman from New York who is the supply-side expert of this House, my colleague from New York. I will be sending him a letter.

Stein rejected Donald Regan's and that Congressman's theory, borrowing to cover deficits placed less of a burden on the private economy than taxes do and he says, "if that's the case it would be interesting to have somebody on the supply side explain why we have taxes at all."

PROVIDING FOR ADJOURNMENT OF THE HOUSE FROM FEBRUARY 10 TO FEBRUARY 17, 1982, AND FOR ADJOURNMENT OF THE SENATE FROM FEBRUARY 11 OR FEBRUARY 12 TO FEBRUARY 22, 1982

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 268) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

H. CON. RES. 268

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), that when the House adjourns on Wednesday, February 10, 1982, it stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian on Wednesday, February 17, 1982, and that when the Senate adjourns on Thursday, February 11, 1982, or on Friday, February 12, 1982, pursuant to a motion made by the majority leader in accordance with this resolution, it stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian on Monday, February 22, 1982.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A FARMER'S PRIORITY

(Mr. McCURDY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McCURDY. Mr. Speaker, to the farmer who lives in my home district back in Oklahoma, the country's top priority remains balancing the Federal budget so interest rates will come down.

If he has not already lost his farm, he is hopelessly in debt with little chance for extended credit. He will set aside 15 percent of his crop this year because lower production is supposed to drive prices up. He knows only too well that the current farm depression has his average income much lower than that of nonfarm residents. Prices received by farmers collapsed to 56 percent of parity in December. As a small, independent farmer with a family, he is a dying breed in America. He prays every day that he will not become another USDA statistic—another liquidated farm for big business to gobble up.

My farmer back in Oklahoma is working the farm his daddy owned and his daddy before him. Such heritage is not easily given up. He is looking now to Washington and his country's leaders for encouragement—some reason for optimism. What he hears is more talk about higher deficits and something called New Federalism.

STATEMENT OF THE HONORABLE PARREN J. MITCHELL ON BUSING

(Mr. MITCHELL of Maryland asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks).

Mr. MITCHELL of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, on February 4, 1982, the other body passed antibusing amendments which are so stringent, that they threaten to end busing as a last resort strategy to achieve school desegregation.

If they should become law, the amendments will be challenged in court and found to be unconstitutional. It is merely a matter of time before their effect would be expunged. However, we must try to understand what was behind this unconstitutional action.

There may be one or two Members who believe that the amendments were constitutional or, put another way, that busing to achieve school desegregation is unconstitutional. Such persons merely require further education.

Others would argue in unctuous tones that even "the minorities don't like schoolbusing." To them I would say, first, that any parents who truly care about the education of their children should seek the best possible education for them, even though some sacrifices will be demanded of the parents. Second, these experts in minority attitudes should recall that, during the 1950's and 1960's, some Negroes staunchly defended racial segregation in schools; places of public accommodation and, indeed, even in the churches of the Nation.

I am convinced that the result of enactment of these amendments would be to wreck the historic separation of powers that exists between the legislative, judicial, and executive branches of Government.

Contempt and hatred for those of us who are black is a part of the cloth from which the cloak of tyranny is woven.

CONGRESS MUST REDRESS INJUSTICES OF REAGANOMICS

(Mr. VENTO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, President Reagan's political visit to St. Paul-Minneapolis was greeted by more protesters than fans yesterday, and well it should have been, considering his submission of the 1983 budget proposal. The Reagan administration's continued economic misdirection and lack of commonsense priorities is most distressing to people across this Nation, and specifically in Minnesota.

The President's indifference to the plight of the unemployed and the distress of industry after industry is appalling to all those who have witnessed the effects of Reaganomics. If the President is not part of the solution, then he is directly a big factor in the problem.

Clearly this Congress must redress the indifferences and lack of understanding reflected in the outrageous proposed cuts in domestic programs and the unparalleled increases in DOD spending. If Reagan did not have foresight, then that may be understandable; if President Reagan does not have hindsight, that is regrettable.

My hope is that this Congress will base its actions on commonsense solutions and not the emotion and faith that President Reagan has attempted to invoke as a poor defense of the worst economic management of any administration in recent history.

Mr. Speaker, if only Reagan and the Republicans were the only victims of their success, we could accept that, but unfortunately many Americans who trusted the President and the Congress to make the best decisions now are faced with the compounding of that injustice that Reaganomics attempt to perpetuate.

DEBT ESCALATES, RECESSION DEEPENS UNDER REAGAN BUDGET PROPOSALS

(Mr. PEASE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, as President Reagan reveals his budget proposals for the coming year, I urge my colleagues to carefully consider the impact of a budget that requires over $112 billion just to finance the Federal debt. That breaks down to over $300 million per day.

By the time this fiscal year is through, the national debt will reach about $1.1 trillion. Spread over a period of 20 years, the debt averages out to about $50 billion per year. The Congressional Budget Office currently projects a deficit of $109 billion for fiscal year 1982—the first step of what President Reagan terms "economic recovery." That makes his deficit more than double the average. And Mr. Reagan's deficit alone will cost $13 billion to finance for 1 year.

Mr. Reagan says you cannot correct 20 years of deficit spending in 1 year. And he has proved that. He is digging us into the gallows of recession faster and more zealously than any President in history.

UNEMPLOYMENT CRISIS OVERSHADOWS INFLATION PROBLEMS

(Mr. KOGOVSEK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KOGOVSEK. Mr. Speaker, at the President's last press conference, he described his discovery of 26 pages of help wanted ads in the Washington

Post. According to him, this means jobs are abundant, that the unemployment problem is one, in his own words, of people lacking job qualification. And yet, in his 1983 budget, the President is proposing to cut nearly all of the educational sources available to those who want to become job qualified. He proposes a merger of vocational and adult education programs, resulting in a $134 million reduction. He will consolidate employment and training programs to replace CETA, resulting in cuts of nearly $7 billion since 1980. Although unemployment among youth between the ages of 16 and 21 is 21.7 percent, the President proposes to cut Job Corps slots by 10,000. In addition, the President has asked for a 50-percent reduction in the student loan program for low- and middle-income students. The administration has abandoned responsibility for the unemployment crisis in favor of taking credit for a drop in the rate of inflation. But rates of inflation are insignificant to the jobless, who will not buy the argument that their predicament is a necessary factor in what the administration insists on labeling America's "economic recovery."

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO INSURE A MEANINGFUL SAVINGS BOND PROGRAM

(Mr. ROTH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I introduced legislation to insure a meaningful savings bond program.

This bill and its companion legislation introduced in the Senate by Senator ROTH will peg the interest on U.S. Series EE savings bonds at a rate equal to 85 percent of the yield on 52-week Treasury bills. This formula is consistent with the administration's guidelines.

The legislation will benefit our small savers across the Nation. At present there is no incentive for the small saver to buy savings bonds when he or she can purchase money market funds or certificates of deposit at much higher yields.

Savings bond redemptions exceeded sales by over $10 billion last year. This unfortunate trend will continue unless we pass this legislation, and, therefore, I urge all the Members and invite them to join me in this legislation.

A TRIBUTE TO THE LATE JOHN HAY WHITNEY

(Mr. PETRI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I rise to mark the passing of one of our Republic's most distinguished and productive citizens.

A decorated citizen-soldier, diplomat, athlete, and patron of talent in a variety of fields, John Hay Whitney was a firm believer in the genius of American democracy.

He never sought title or honor for himself but devoted himself in his modest unassuming yet perceptive way to the noble work of helping others realize their maximum potential.

John Hay Whitney set a standard of personal rectitude and public citizenship for each of us, his fellow citizens, to emulate.

A TRIBUTE TO STEVE AND PHIL MAHRE, AMERICA'S PREMIER SKIERS

(Mr. MORRISON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, two of the fastest men in the world live in my district. Steve and Phil Mahre are premier members of the U.S. ski team. A year ago, they broke European dominance of international ski competitions and brought home to the United States, for the first time ever, the World Cup Championship.

Last week, Steve became the first American to take a gold medal in the World Alpine Championships. Brother Phil was out of the race, and Steve performed heroically as our only hope in the giant slalom, edging out Ingemar Stenmark.

Prior to that race, the Mahres drove 10 hours out of their way, so Phil could carry the American flag in the opening ceremonies of the World Cup Championships.

Both Mahre brothers are legends in their home area of Yakima and the State of Washington. I think the Mahres deserve national recognition and a good old American thank you for their continuing outstanding achievements.

A PROPOSED CURE FOR "STAFFLATION"

(Mr. COLLINS of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. COLLINS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, President Reagan has submitted a new budget which calls for additional cuts. He is making a great effort to rid all Americans of too much government and waste. It is time for Congress to evaluate its own spending policies which come in the form of committee funding resolutions.

These resolutions are being drafted by the committees and being considered right now by the Subcommittee on Accounts. They fund those temporary, investigative staff which are constantly generating new ideas, new proposals, new bills and amendments to justify their jobs and salaries. They are in addition to the 30 permanent statutory staff to which most committees are entitled. The tremendous growth in some of the committees over the past decade is astounding. The cost alone has zoomed from $6.8 million in 1971 to an amazing $43.6 million in 1980.

To illustrate this unchecked stafflation, let me cite some specific examples. The District of Columbia Committee had 41 people in 1980. This is unbelievable when you consider that in 1980, the District of Columbia was handled by a subcommittee in the Senate with only seven people. Back in the 95th Congress, the Senate District of Columbia Committee became a subcommittee because of home rule. I do not see any reason with this in mind, that the House needs a full committee with 41 people to do what seven people do in a subcommittee of the Senate. Even if the House cut its staff in half, it would still have three times as many people as the Senate. And consider the cost of these staff. The 1980 authorization was $289,670, and with the 10-percent reduction in 1981, they were given $275,187. This year, they are making up for last year plus some by requesting $318,289. This is a 16-percent increase.

Another example of unchecked growth is the Rules Committee. James Kilpatrick illustrated it so well in an article last year. He told of how 30 years ago when he came to the Hill, the Rules Committee benefited from the heavy hand of Howard Worth Smith of the Eighth District of Virginia. He was not an empire builder, for he ran his House Rules Committee with a staff of three. By 1972, this number had grown to six. But by 1980, this staff had swollen to an enormous number of 45. Forty-five people. And just imagine the cost of this stafflation to the taxpayers. In the 92d Congress, the committee only needed $5,000, but the 96th, their cost exploded to a hefty $1,134,000.

Another prime example of this exorbitant growth is the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee. Now, our coastline has not changed one bit in the past decade. But the growth of this committee would make you think we had tripled in size. In 1973, this committee had a staff of 22. By 1980, this number had tripled to 88. And the cost more than tripled. In the 93d Congress, it cost $494,500. By the 96th, this cost had skyrocketed to $3,176,245.

It appears that last year a trend was started when authorizations were cut 10 percent across-the-board and House Administration voluntarily cut its budget 20 percent from 1980 expenditures. So far, with most of the budgets that have been submitted, it seems to be "business as usual." They have increases not only over the 10-percent cuts from last year, but more than that.

This escalating growth must be stopped, and I challenge this Congress to take a stand for fiscal responsibility. For how can we control the country, if we cannot even control our own House.

□ 1230

SAME OLD SONG

(Mr. MICHEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I noted by your comments outside the White House yesterday that you have already started singing the same old song about "Republicans being the party of the rich."

I have been in this House for 26 years now and I have heard that same refrain from you every election year.

For all of those 26 years, Mr. Speaker, you and your party have been in power, spending, spending, spending. And yet the number of poor has never decreased. The poor in our society have not disappeared. Instead you have made them hopelessly addicted to your idea of democratic benevolence.

But enough about your rhetoric, Mr. Speaker. Where are your solutions?

I believe, you said last year you would produce your own budget alternatives. Where are they? I want to see how you will keep inflation down, lower interest rates, eliminate unemployment, rebuild our defenses, increase productivity, keep taxes down and still continue your role as our society's toothfairy. Where is your budget, Mr. Speaker? I would like to see it. The American people want to see it.

WALESA ALIVE OR UNITED STATES-SOVIET TRADE DEAD

(Mr. BLILEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, where is Lech Walesa? What is his condition? How is he being treated?

These questions demand immeditate answers from the military junta now ruling Poland and from the Soviet leaders who are behind that Junta.

We have lost sight of the fact that Walesa is the key to the future of Poland. We are concentrating so much on economics and geopolitical realities that we tend to forget that the most famous union leader in the world is being held in captivity.

Newsweek magazine reports that Walesa has managed to smuggle out a message condemning the current military regime.

But we really do not know if Walesa is alive or dead. All we have is the word of Communists.

Mr. Speaker, it is my hope that the President sends an eight-word telegram to Mr. Brezhnev: "Walesa Alive or United States-Soviet Trade Dead."

That should get their attention.

THE MYTH OF THE PRESIDENT'S BUDGET

(Mr. MINETA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in the President's new budget that creates one new job. Nothing in the President's budget that stops the rise of interest rates. Nothing that restores business confidence.

How long must we continue with the President's experiment in theoretical economics while the lives of more and more Americans suffer hardships caused by the President's policies?

It took us 200 years to accumulate a national debt of $1 trillion—the combined work of every President from George Washington to Jimmy Carter. Mr. Reagan's experiment alone will add $500 billion to the deficit, increasing the national debt by one-half in just 3 years.

Is there anyone left who truly believes in this economic experiment? How many reasonable people still believe in the fairy tale that major tax cuts and enormous increases in defense spending will have any results other then the ones we have seen and will continue to see: Enormous deficits, high interest rates and high unemployment.

The time has come to abandon this experiment. The President's budget is based on a myth. It is time to admit that the emperor has no clothes.

STOCKMANESE

(Mr. SCHUMER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, over the weekend we have seen a new language finally formized in this country. It is called "Stockmanese." Stockmanese is guided by an equation. That equation says that $91 billion in Stockmanese equals $140 billion in English.

Why do I say this? Because the President's new budget presents the following conundrum. The budget predicts there will be a growth rate of 5.2 percent in the GNP next year. It also predicts that the Federal Government will be selling Treasury bills at 10 to 11 percent, even though we presently sell them at 14.5 percent.

Any economist worth his salt can tell you that if the economy is suddenly going to turn around and boom next year then Treasury bill rates are going to go up, not down.

In Stockmanese there can coexist up, not down a $91 billion deficit, a 5.2-percent real gain in the GNP and a 10 to 11 percent T-bill rate; in the real world such coexistence is impossible.

So $91 billion in Stockmanese equals $140 million in English; on this side of the aisle we await more procurements in Stockmanese.

TECHNICAL AND SUBSTANTIVE CHANGES IN BANKRUPTCY LAW WITH RESPECT TO SECURITIES AND COMMODITIES

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4935) to amend title 11, United States Code, to correct technical errors, and to clarify and make substantive changes, with respect to securities and commodities.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 4935

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 101 of title 11, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (35), (36), (37), (38), (39), and (40) as paragraphs (36), (37), (38), (39), (40), and (41), respectively, and

(2) by inserting after paragraph (34) the following new paragraph:

"(35) 'securities clearing agency' means person that is registered as a clearing agency under section 17A of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78q-1) or whose business is confined to the performance of functions of a clearing agency with respect to exempted securities, as defined in section 3(a)(12) of such Act (15 U.S.C. 78c(12)) for the purposes of such section 17A;".

(b) Section 101(36)(A)(xii) of title 11, United States Code, as so redesignated, is amended by striking out "is the subject of a registration statement" and inserting in lieu thereof "is required to be the subject of a registration statement".

(c) Section 101(36)(B)(iii) of title 11, United States Code, as so redesignated, is amended by striking out "commodity" the second place it appears.

(d) Section 101(40) of title 11, United States Code, as so redesignated, is amended to read as follows:

"(40) 'stockbroker' means person—

"(A) with respect to which there is a customer, as defined in section 741(2) of this title; and

"(B) that is engaged in the business of effecting transactions in securities—

"(i) for the account of others; or

"(ii) with members of the general public, from or for such person's own account;".

SEC. 2. Section 103(d) of title 11, United States Code, is amended by striking out "except with respect to section 746(c) which applies to margin payments made by any debtor to a commodity broker or forward contract merchant".

SEC. 3. (a) Section 362(a) of title 11, United States Code, is amended by inserting ", or an application filed under section 5(a)(3) of the Securities Investor Protection Act of 1970 (15 U.S.C. 78eee(a)(3))," after "title" the first place it appears.

(b) Section 362(b) of title 11, United States Code, is amended by adding ", or of an application under section 5(a)(3) of the Securities Investor Protection Act of 1970 (15 U.S.C. 78eee(a)(3))," after "title" the first place it appears.

(c) Section 362(b)(6) of title 11, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(6) under subsection (a) of this section, of the setoff by a commodity broker, forward contract merchant, stockbroker, or securities clearing agency of any mutual debt and claim under or in connection with commodity contracts, as defined in section 761(4) of this title, forward contracts, or securities contracts, as defined in section 741(7) of this title, that constitutes the setoff of a claim against the debtor for a margin payment, as defined in section 741(5) or 761(15) of this title, or settlement payment, as defined in section 741(8) of this title, arising out of commodity contracts, forward contracts, or securities contracts against cash, securities, or other property held by such commodity broker, forward contract merchant, stockbroker, or securities clearing agency to margin, guarantee, or secure commodity contracts, forward contracts, or securities contracts;".

SEC. 4. Section 546 of title 11, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) Notwithstanding sections 544, 545, 547, 548(a)(2), and 548(b) of this title, the trustee may not avoid a transfer that is a margin payment, as defined in section 741(5) or 761(15) of this title, or settlement payment, as defined in section 741(8) of this title, made by or to a commodity broker, forward contract merchant, stockbroker, or securities clearing agency, that is made before the commencement of the case, except under section 548(a)(1) of this title.".

SEC. 5. Section 548(d)(2)(B) of title 11, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out "or forward contract merchant" and inserting in lieu thereof ", forward contract merchant, stockbroker, or securities clearing agency",

(2) by inserting "741(5) or" after "section",

(3) by inserting ", or settlement payment, as defined in section 741(8) of this title" after "of this title", and

(4) by striking out "value." and inserting in lieu thereof "value to the extent of such payment.".

SEC. 6. (a) Chapter 5 of title 11, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"§ 555. Contractual right to liquidate a securities contract

"The exercise of a contractual right of a stockbroker or securities clearing agency to cause the liquidation of a securities contract, as defined in section 741(7), because of a condition of the kind specified in section 365(e)(1) of this title shall not be stayed, avoided, or otherwise limited by operation of any provision of this title or by order of a court or administrative agency in any proceeding under this title unless such order is authorized under the provisions of the Securities Investor Protection Act of 1970 (15 U.S.C. 78aaa et seq.) or any statute administered by the Securities and Exchange Commission. As used in this section, the term 'contractual right' includes a right set forth in a rule or bylaw of a national securities exchange, a national securities association, or a securities clearing agency.

"§ 556. Contractual right to liquidate a commodities contract or forward contract

"The contractual right of a commodity broker or forward contract merchant to cause the liquidation of a commodity contract, as defined in section 761(4), or forward contract because of a condition of the kind specified in section 365(e)(1) of this title, and the right to a variation or maintenance margin payment received from a trustee with respect to open commodity contracts or forward contracts, shall not be stayed, avoided, or otherwise limited by operation of any provision of this title or by the order of a court in any proceeding under this title. As used in this section, the term 'contractual right' includes a right set forth in a rule or bylaw of a clearing organization or contract market or in a resolution of the governing board thereof.".

(b) The analysis of sections for chapter 5 of title 11, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new items:

"555. Contractual right to liquidate a securities contract.

"556. Contractual right to liquidate a commodity contract or forward contract."

SEC. 7. Section 702(a)(1) of title 11, United States Code, is amended by striking out "or 726(a)(4)" and inserting in lieu thereof "726(a)(4), 752(a), 766(h), or 766(i)".

SEC. 8. Section 741 of title 11, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (4)—

(A) by striking out "at any time", and

(B) in subparagraph (A)(ii) by inserting "of a customer" after "claim",

(2) by redesignating paragraphs (5) and (6) as paragraphs (6) and (9), respectively,

(3) by inserting after paragraph (4) the following new paragraph:

"(5) 'margin payment' means payment or deposit of cash, a security, or other property, that is commonly known to the securities trade as original margin, initial margin, maintenance margin, or variation margin, or as a mark-to-market payment, or that secures an obligation of a participant in a securities clearing agency;",

(4) in paragraph (6), as so redesignated—

(A) by striking out "the aggregate of all of a customer's accounts that such customer holds" and inserting in lieu thereof "all accounts of a customer that such customer has",

(B) in subparagraph (A)(ii) by inserting "in such capacity" after "customer", and

(C) in subparagraph (B) by inserting "in such capacity" before the semicolon,

(5) by inserting after paragraph (6), as so redesignated, the following new paragraphs:

"(7) 'securities contract' means contract for the purchase, sale, or loan of a security, including an option for the purchase or sale of a security, or the guarantee of any settlement of cash or securities by or to a securities clearing agency;

"(8) 'settlement payment' means a preliminary settlement payment, a partial settlement payment, an interim settlement payment, a settlement payment on account, or any other similar payment commonly used in the securities trade; and", and

(6) in paragraph (9), as so redesignated, by striking out "Security" and inserting "Securities" in lieu thereof.

SEC. 9. Section 742 of title 11, United States Code, is amended by striking out "chapter" and inserting in lieu thereof "title".

SEC. 10. Section 744 of title 11, United States Code, is amended by inserting "but" after "relief,".

SEC. 11. Section 745(c) of title 11, United States Code, is amended by striking out "A" and inserting in lieu thereof "Each".

SEC. 12. (a) Section 746(a) of title 11, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out "effects, with respect to cash or a security," and inserting in lieu thereof "enters into",

(2) by striking out "with respect to such cash or security" each place it appears,

(3) by striking out "such date" and inserting in lieu thereof "the date of the filing of the petition", and

(4) by striking out "effected" and inserting in lieu thereof "entered into".

(b) Section 746(b) of title 11, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out "has a claim for" and inserting in lieu thereof "transferred to the debtor", and

(2) in paragraph (2) by striking out "is".

(c) The heading for section 746 of title 11, United States Code, is amended by striking out "claim" and inserting in lieu thereof "claims".

SEC. 13. Section 747 of title 11, United States Code, is amended by striking out "such claim arose" and inserting in lieu thereof "the transaction giving rise to such claim occurred".

SEC. 14. Section 749 of title 11, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out "Any" and inserting in lieu thereof "(a) Except as otherwise provided in this section, any",

(2) by striking out "except" and inserting in lieu thereof "but",

(3) by inserting "such property" after "trustee, and",

(4) by striking out "549, or 724(a)" and inserting in lieu thereof "or 549", and

(5) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) Notwithstanding sections 544, 545, 547, 548, and 549 of this title, the trustee may not avoid a transfer made before five days after the order for relief if such transfer is approved by the Commission by rule or order, either before or after such transfer, and if such transfer is—

"(1) a transfer of a securities contract entered into or carried by or through the debtor on behalf of a customer, and of any cash, security, or other property margining or securing such securities contract; or

"(2) the liquidation of a securities contract entered into or carried by or through the debtor on behalf of a customer.".

SEC. 15. Section 752(c) of title 11, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(c) Any cash or security remaining after the liquidation of a security interest created under a security agreement made by the debtor, excluding property excluded under section 741(4)(B) of this title, shall be apportioned between the general estate and customer property in the same proportion as the general estate of the debtor and customer property were subject to such security interest.".

SEC. 16. Section 761 of title 11, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (2) by inserting "made" after "commodity contracts",

(2) in paragraph (4)—

(A) by striking out "if the debtor is" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "with respect to", and

(B) in subparagraph (D) by striking out "cleared by the debtor" and inserting in lieu thereof "cleared by such clearing organization, or commodity option traded on, or subject to the rules of, a contract market or board of trade that is cleared by such clearing organization",

(3) in paragraph (9)—

(A) by striking out "if the debtor is" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "with respect to",

(B) in subparagraph (A)—

(i) by striking out "the debtor" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "such futures commission merchant", and

(ii) by striking out "the debtor's" and inserting in lieu thereof "such futures commission merchant's",

(C) in subparagraph (B)—

(i) by striking out "the debtor" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "such foreign futures commission merchant", and

(ii) by striking out "the debtor's" and inserting in lieu thereof "such foreign futures commission merchant's",

(D) in subparagraph (C)—

(i) by striking out "the debtor" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "such leverage transaction merchant",

(ii) by striking out "the debtor's" and inserting in lieu thereof "such leverage transaction merchant's",

(iii) in clause (i) by inserting "or" after the semicolon, and

(iv) in clause (ii) by striking out "hold" and inserting in lieu thereof "holds",

(E) in subparagraph (D) by striking out "the debtor" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "such clearing organization", and

(F) in subparagraph (E)—

(i) by striking out "the debtor" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "such commodity options dealer", and

(ii) by striking out "the debtor's" and inserting in lieu thereof "such commodity options dealer's",

(4) in paragraph (10) by striking out "at any time",

(5) in paragraph (12)—

(A) by inserting a comma after "property", and

(B) by striking out the comma after "credit",

(6) in paragraph (13) by striking out "217 of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission Act of 1974 (7 U.S.C. 15a)" and inserting in lieu thereof "19 of the Commodity Exchange Act (7 U.S.C. 23)",

(7) in paragraph (14) by striking out "that is engaged",

(8) in paragraph (15) by striking out "a daily variation settlement payment" and inserting in lieu thereof "mark-to-market payments, settlement payments, variation payments, daily settlement payments, and final settlement payments made as adjustments to settlement prices",

(9) in paragraph (16) by striking out "at any time", and

(10) in paragraph (17)—

(A) by striking out "holds" and inserting in lieu thereof "has", and

(B) in subparagraph (A)—

(i) by inserting "the" after "(A)", and

(ii) in clause (ii) by inserting "in such capacity" after "customer".

SEC. 17. (a) Section 764(a) of title 11, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out "except" and inserting in lieu thereof "but",

(2) by inserting "such property" after "trustee, and", and

(3) by striking out "is" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "shall be".

(b) Section 764(b) of title 11, United States Code, is amended by striking out "date of the filing of the petition" and inserting in lieu thereof "order for relief".

(c) Section 764(c) of title 11, United States Code, is repealed.

SEC. 18. Section 765(b) of title 11, United States Code, is amended by striking out "commitment" and inserting in lieu thereof "commodity contract".

SEC. 19. (a) Section 766(a) of title 11, United States Code, is amended by inserting "to such customer" after "distribution".

(b) Section 766(b) of title 11, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out "that is being actively traded as of the date of the filing of the petition", and

(2) by inserting "the" after "rules of".

(c) Section 766(d) of title 11, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out "such amount, then the" and inserting in lieu thereof "the amount to which the customer of the debtor is entitled under subsection (h) or (i) of this section, then such", and

(2) by inserting "then" after "trustee" the second place it appears.

(d) Section 766(h) of title 11, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Notwithstanding any other provision of this subsection, a customer net equity claim based on a proprietary account, as defined by Commission rule, regulation, or order, may not be paid either in whole or in part, directly or indirectly, out of customer property unless all other customer net equity claims have been paid in full.".

SEC. 20. (a) Section 19 of the Commodity Exchange Act (7 U.S.C. 24), as added by section 302 of the Act of November 6, 1978 (Public Law 95-598; 92 Stat. 2673), is redesignated as section 20.

(b) Section 20(a)(3), as so redesignated, of the Commodity Exchange Act (7 U.S.C. 24) is amended by inserting before the semicolon the following: ", including the payment and allocation of margin with respect to commodity contracts not specifically identifiable to a particular customer pending their orderly liquidation".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from California (Mr. EDWARDS) will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MCCLORY) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. EDWARDS).

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4935 makes technical and substantive changes in the provisions of the Bankruptcy Code affecting commodity and securities brokers. Several of the principal amendments contained in H.R. 4935 are intended to minimize the displacement caused in the commodities and securities markets in the event of a major bankruptcy affecting those industries.

The commodities and securities markets operate through a complex system of accounts and guarantees. Because of the structure of the clearing systems in these industries and the potential volatile nature of the markets, certain protections are necessary to prevent the insolvency of one commodity or security firm from leading to the insolvency of other firms and possibly threatening the collapse of the affected market.

The Bankruptcy Code, as enacted in 1978, already provides certain protections to the commodities market to prevent such a potential "ripple effect." H.R. 4935 would clarify and extend the commodities market protections and expressly set forth similar protections for the securities market.

The amendments made by H.R. 4935 are intended to ensure that: First, margin or settlement payments made by or to a broker cannot be set aside or recovered as a preference by a trustee in bankruptcy, except in cases of fraud; and that second, except as otherwise provided, the automatic stay or other provisions of the Bankruptcy Code will not be construed to stay or prevent brokers from closing out the open accounts of insolvent customers or brokers. the prompt closing out or liquidation of such open accounts is desirable to freeze the status quo and minimize the potentially massive losses and chain reactions that could occur if the market were to move sharply in the wrong direction.

H.R. 4935 also would clarify present law that insider claims are subordinate to public customer claims in commodity firm bankruptcies. Additionally, customer creditors of a bankrupt commodities broker are expressly given the right to participate in the election of a trustee in bankruptcy.

The Subcommittee on Monopolies and Commercial Law of the House Judiciary Committee held two days of hearings on these provisions in the first session of the 97th Congress. The bill is strongly supported by the Commodities Futures Trading Commission, the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Securities Investor Protection Corporation, and securities and commodities firms and clearing organizations. No opposition to this legislation has been received by the committee.

The Congressional Budget Office advises that no cost to the Government will be incurred as a result of enactment of this bill.

Mr. MCCLORY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is not controversial. H.R. 4935 is legislation designed to minimize the possibility that a bankruptcy in the securities or commodities industries will result in a chain reaction which could spread rapidly, injure many innocent parties, and ultimately even threaten disruption of the entire market structure. The securities and commodities industries depend upon a complex series of accounts and guarantees which make imperative the swift liquidation of a bankrupt's open accounts. This bill does no more than facilitate that swift liquidation process.

H.R. 4935 amends the 1978 Bankruptcy Code to provide that the avoiding power of a trustee in bankruptcy in either a securities broker or commodities broker case cannot be construed to permit margin or settlement payments to be set aside or recovered as preferences, except when the transfer was made with intent to defraud other creditors. Another key provision grants an exemption from the automatic stay that normally applies whenever a bankruptcy petition is filed. This would allow a broker or a clearing organization to immediately setoff margin and settlement payments due the firm against any money or property owed to the debtor and to closeout the accounts of insolvent brokers or customers. The bill also provides that a firm's contractual rights to liquidate a commodities contract may not be stayed, avoided, or otherwise limited in a proceeding under the code. The same provision is made with reference to the securities industry unless an order is authorized under the Securities Investors Protection Act or under any statute administered by the SEC.

This legislation has the endorsement of industry representatives and of the Federal regulatory bodies concerned, the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Commodities Futures Trading Commission. No opposition developed during 2 days of hearings by the Monopolies and Commercial Law Subcommittee.

Mr. Speaker, I support the prompt enactment of this bill.

● Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to associate myself with the remarks of Mr. McCLORY and would recommend adoption of this legislation amending certain provisions of the 1978 Bankruptcy Code relating to securities and commodity broker bankruptcies.

This bill has broad support. The witnesses before our subcommittee differed only on a few minor details, and these differences have been accommodated. The problems addressed by this bill are very real ones, and we have made the appropriate legislative response.

I hope the committee and the House will move with equal dispatch on other necessary bankruptcy legislation.

Thank you.●

Mr. McCLORY. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time and yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time and yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. EDWARDS) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4935.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 1362

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my name be removed as a cosponsor of H.R. 1362,

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. ROSENTHAL). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

□ 1245

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 389, URGENT SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION FOR DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, 1982, AND HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 391, URGENT SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION FOR DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, 1982

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 355 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 355

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider, section 311(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (Public Law 93-344) to the contrary notwithstanding, the following joint resolutions: H.J. Res. 389, making an urgent supplemental appropriation for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982, for the Department of Agriculture, and H.J. Res. 391, making an urgent supplemental appropriation for the Department of Labor for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982. It shall be in order to consider, section 311(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 to the contrary notwithstanding, a conference report on either of said joint resolutions if the report does not provide budget authority in excess of that provided by the joint resolution as reported to the House by the Committee on Appropriations and if the report would not cause budget outlays to exceed the budget outlays which would be caused by the joint resolution as reported to the House by the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri (Mr. BOLLING) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to read a statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. LATTA) for purposes of debate only, and pending that, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to read a statement because this procedure is technical, important, and it may be repeated. I do not want to make any mistakes when I describe the parliamentary processes. I would like to add a little bit to that statement by saying that, quite clearly, for a variety of reasons—and I am not going to try to fix any blame at this point—the processes of the House are in considerable disarray. The whole legislative process is going to be enormously difficult in this coming year. There are many causes. Some of them are problems of timing between the legislative committees and the Appropriations Committee. Some of them are problems of the Budget Act caused by, I guess, every political entity in this town, from the House of Representatives and the Senate to and including the Executive. But we are going to have a very difficult task in the House of Representatives this year bringing order out of legislative chaos. The Rules Committee is going to try to do what it can to be helpful. I am sure that all of the other committees will do the same. But it is going to get technical and difficult and complicated and sudden, because we will be dealing with nothing but emergencies. And since this illustrates a part of that problem, I intend to read the remainder of my statement.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 355 is a somewhat unusual rule. Essentially, it provides waivers of section 311(a) of the Budget Act so that the House might consider House Joint Resolution 389, an urgent supplemental appropriation for the Commodity Credit Corporation, and House Joint Resolution 391, an urgent supplemental appropriation for unemployment compensation.

Section 311(a) of the Budget Act prohibits the consideration of any bill, resolution, amendment or conference report providing additional new budget or spending authority that would result in the breach of the ceiling of total new budget authority or total budget outlays set forth in the most recently agreed to concurrent resolution on the budget for the current fiscal year.

Yesterday, the Committee on the Budget, as required by section 311(b) of the Budget Act, certified to the Speaker the current level of spending. These current level estimates indicate that there is some $4.4 billion in budget authority under the ceiling set forth in Senate Concurrent Resolution 50, the second budget resolution agreed to by the House on Decem- ber 10, 1981. Outlays are some $42.8 billion in excess of the ceiling already. Consequently, the urgent supplemental appropriation bills for the Commodity Credit Corporation and the employment services portion of the unemployment compensation bill would breech the ceilings set forth in the second budget resolution. Without the waivers, the appropriation bills would be subject to a point of order and the House could be prevented from considering these critical matters.

The rule waives section 311(a) of the Budget Act against the initial consideration of the two joint resolutions by the House. It would further provide for a waiver of the same section of the Budget Act against consideration of any conference report on either of the resolutions provided that the conference report figures do not exceed the budget authority of or outlays resulting from the joint resolutions as they were reported from the House Committee on Appropriations. In other words, to expedite consideration of these matters, the Rules Committee proposes to grant waivers to the conference reports in advance, but only so long as the figures in the bills are not increased beyond the levels as reported from committee. If those levels are exceeded the waivers are inapplicable thus requiring the Rules Committee to again review the matter. The Committee on Rules views waivers of section 311(a) of the Budget Act as a very serious distortion of the budget process and does not intend to grant any type of blanket waiver. Each request for a waiver of section 311 of the Budget Act will be reviewed very carefully and in only the most critical of circumstances will such waivers be recommended.

As I stated earlier, the rule provides only for waivers of the Budget Act. If my colleagues will permit me, however, I will quickly review the parliamentary situation for consideration of these two urgent supplemental appropriations. Supplemental appropriations for a single item or department are not privileged matters under the rules of the House. On February 4 Chairman WHITTEN asked for and received the unanimous consent of the House that four urgent supplemental appropriations bills be considered on February 5 or any day thereafter. Mr. WHITTEN'S request specified that House Joint Resolution 389 and House Joint Resolution 391 be considered in the House thereby precluding any amendment to the bills except a motion to recommit with instructions which, of course, must be germane. The bills would be considered in the House under the hour rule with the floor manager controlling the time and yielding only for purposes of debate. To put it simply, there will be an hour's debate on each of the joint resolutions at the end of which a motion to recommit either with or without instructions would be in order and then an up or down vote on the proposition. The rule does not specify the procedure but simply provides the waivers so that the process may take place.

When the unanimous-consent request was made to consider the bills, it was not clear that the budget waivers were necessary. After definite confirmation of the necessity of the budget waivers, the Rules Committee met in emergency session yesterday to consider rules on the four supplemental appropriation bills. The committee's judgment was that three of the matters were sufficiently urgent to warrant waivers. The two most pressing matters concerning unemployment compensation and the Commodity Credit Corporation were granted waivers by one rule. A separate rule on fuel assistance was recommended and will be brought up later today. No motion to grant a rule on the fourth supplemental was made.

Mr. Speaker, House Joint Resolution 389 provides $5 billion in new budget authority for the Commodity Credit Corporation to restore borrowing authority which will be exhausted in early February. House Joint Resolution 391 provides $2.3 billion in supplemental funds for the Labor Department's unemployment programs.

Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to go into further detail on the two joint resolutions as I am sure the Appropriations Committee will amply explain them. I urge my colleagues to adopt House Resolution 355 so that we might proceed to their consideration.

Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLLING. I yield to the gentleman for New York.

Mr. PEYSER. I thank the chairman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I think one of the things that is evidenced by the statement the gentleman just made and complexity of the situation, frankly, is the gratitude I feel, as I am sure all Members of the House do, for the job the gentleman has done as chairman of the Rules Committee, and, again, with great regret that he is going to be on his decision leaving us at the end of this term.

But a question I would like to put to the gentleman deals with the rule which I understand allows no amendment on the Commodity Credit question. And the question I have is: At what point, or how would the gentleman see the availability of at some time getting at the Commodity Credit Corporation so that it could be amended?

Actually, it is not that we would be legislating.

The amendment that I was interested in was trying to create a 9-percent-interest minimum that would have to be paid by people who make loans on Commodity Credit, which the Rules Committee indicated no amendments would be allowed. Commodity Credit indicates to me that they are not even going to get through this year with the $5 billion that we are now appropriating, which means they are going to be back again this year for more money, which I fear I would find myself in the same position as again not being able to amend, raise the question as to whether the House thinks a minimum interest should be paid on these loans.

Does the gentleman see a way, if this is going to happen again this year, as to how we can get at even having the House express an opinion on whether loans that presumably are supposed to bear interest, then the interest is waived and no interest is collected, to the tune this last year of $1.5 billion in interest, how are we going to get at that?

Mr. BOLLING. I would hope that the various committees that deal with the authorization and the appropriations for the Commodity Credit Corporation would recognize that this is a legitimate issue that should be considered in the House.

I would hope that it would come up in so orderly a fashion that it would be able to be debated properly and at length, rather than coming up suddenly under an urgent matter.

I cannot assure the gentleman that that will happen, but I would hope personally that it would. And I do not have a bad memory when it comes to matters of this sort; I might be able to be helpful to the gentleman somewhere down the line in his desire to have the matter at least considered in the House.

□ 1300

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLLING. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTEN. The Commodity Credit Corporation, as the gentleman knows, operates under a charter.

Also in the Corporation Control Act, which passed many years ago, it was provided that in the supervision of the Commodity Credit Corporation that no action should be taken that would prevent the Corporation from discharging its function.

So that being true, even the Corporation Control Act says you cannot prohibit the Corporation from discharging its function, which is to support prices, make loans, make payments, et cetera.

But if I may offer a suggestion, what is involved here has to do with the farm bill, a legislative act, which in turn says what the Corporation shall do in connection with farm price supports. I think that the gentleman is on the authorizing committee and it is a legislative matter and cannot be reached, as I understand it, through appropriations where the Corporation

Control Act gives us only the control and it does not prevent the Corporation from discharging its function.

I think the gentleman has his own assignment on the way to reach the Corporation, and that is to change the farm bill. That bill tells the Corporation how and where and when to payout money.

Mr. PEYSER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLLING. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Do I understand correctly that under the process as spelled out in the rule, with regard to conference reports, that the limits to this are based upon the House appropriations figure? In other words, the conference could not come back with anything which exceeds the House Appropriations Committee limits without coming in for an additional waiver from the Rules Committee; is that correct?

Mr. BOLLING. That is correct.

Mr. WALKER. Now, that also says to me, however, that what we have done in this particular instance is in essence replaced the budget process with the appropriations process as it relates to these particular matters.

Is that a fair characterization?

Mr. BOLLING. I think it is more complicated than that, but that is a beginning of the explanation that I would make.

Mr. WALKER. So that if we run into problems this year with the budget, as I think that there is some chance that we might, we may be faced in the course of the year with a large number of supplemental appropriations or emergency kinds of situations that will in fact replace the long-standing budget process with this appropriations process and then also come in as a mandate to conference committees as well.

Is that not a possibility?

Mr. BOLLING. Well, I think that is a possibility. The more likely probability is that the Rules Committee will find itself constantly, as it has in the past, having to devise processes that implement the spirit of the legislative process when there is a flaw in that process that brings into question the propriety of following a normal legislative process without a Budget Act or following it with the Budget Act.

What the Rules Committee finds it has to do is to come up with all kinds of, let me say ingenious, although I know that may sound self-serving, ingenious procedures to keep the whole process going in a fashion that allows the Members of the House the right to deal with the major elements of the conflicts before them.

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman will yield further, I thank the gentleman for his explanation.

I guess my problem is that I also see the potential, though, for having rather irresponsible budgets adopted with all kinds of questionable figures in them only to be supplanted later on by this kind of process where we waive the budget bills and go wholly with the appropriations process and that we are putting into place a new mechanism that basically would permit that somewhere down the road.

Does the gentleman see any reason that my fears on that might not be realized?

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BOLLING. May I answer first.

That potential has always been present in the existence of the Rules Committee. But I may suggest that irresponsibility in dealing with the Budget Act can come from a variety of sources and that this would not be a unique situation.

I do not intend to include in this discussion any partisan approach to this set of problems, but if I sought to find irresponsibility in the use of the Budget Act, I think I would be dealing with a very large number of acts over a very long period of time.

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman will yield further, I appreciate the gentleman's explanation, and I, too, am not trying to affix any kind of partisan responsibility for it. I am simply through commenting on the fact that it seems to me that we are putting a process into being here; we intend to be formalizing a process more and more that allows us to get around decisions that we make in the course of the budget process, and that is really my concern.

Mr. BOLLING. The only thing that I would say in response to that is a very partial response.

We have been doing that from the very beginning of the Budget Act. It was found necessary to make accommodations and we will probably continue to do it as long as we have a Budget Act that functions at least somewhat. I do not know any way to alter the fact that we use ingenious methods to make it possible for the legislative process to continue when at the very least one would have to say it has become confused with regard to the implementation of the Budget Act.

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman will continue to yield, and I appreciate the gentleman indulging me.

There is one other aspect of this rule that also bothers me and I am wondering whether or not there is some sort of precedent involved in that, and that is inclusion of two different resolutions in the same bill.

I am not familiar that this has been done in the time that I have been in the House and I am wondering whether or not this is a process that we can expect to see again. It does somewhat confuse the issue with regard to a Member rendering individual judgments on the rules as they relate to individual bills. I am somewhat bothered by that particular procedure, which seems to me to be a new procedure.

Could the chairman enlighten me on that?

Mr. BOLLING. I am not even sure that it is new or that it is not new.

We have had to apply all kinds of new procedures just to get by, and I will have to admit that the decisions that the Rules Committee makes are often made under great pressure of time and complexity and I have no brief for this process.

I do not think it sets a precedent, although I would not hesitate to recommend it again if it seemed a viable and sensible process that preserved the major right of the Members of the House to deal with matters of controversy as they come before them.

Mr. WALKER. I am wondering what is the rationale for including two bills? We have two different resolutions, each including two bills in them. What was the rationale behind that?

Mr. BOLLING. There is a rationale based on the difference between these two bills and the other two bills that were before the committee at the same time.

There is a rationale of pure expedience, the fact that we are under pressure of time. But I think we do preserve the individual right of Members to express themselves on each one of the resolutions.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the chairman.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLLING. I can yield only briefly to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTEN. I do not want anyone to think that the Appropriations Committee is trying to get around this, that and the other rule or procedure.

May I say one of the problems here is in reference to the budget resolution, which circumvented the requirements of the Budget Act. We would have no problem if we had had the Budget Act provisions and the intent of the Budget Act had been carried out in the budget resolution.

So when I asked unanimous consent to bring the bill up, and it was agreed to, we were technically within the budget resolution so far as the then current assumptions were concerned.

We were advised yesterday that the Budget Committee brought in a report which reestimated spending levels. The second budget resolution, I think, is completely unrealistic. But yesterday's action in turn raised the question and we had to take steps to make sure we could bring up these urgent resolutions.

The acute situation that faces us in the CCC resolution is that 233,000 farmers are standing in line for what the law entitled them to—that is deficiency payments. With respect to the other resolution, many of the unemployment offices are being closed. So the fact is that they both are in response to acute situations. That those come up at the same time, certainly justifies this action.

I want to point out that our committee is not trying to get around anything except that which got us in this problem by circumventing the requirements of the Budget Act.

Mr. BOLLING. I would like to say in conclusion that the gentleman from Mississippi is entirely correct. The responsibility for the rule is on the Rules Committee and the emergency was not created by the Appropriations Committee or any other committee that I can think of. It just is a fact of economic life as it operates within the budget process.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, at the outset let me say I agree with the statements made that this procedure is brought about by two emergency situations, one with unemployment compensation and one with the Commodity Credit Corporation.

In answer to my friend from Pennsylvania as to why we have two bills in one rule, we certainly could have come out with separate rules. There would not have been any reason why we could not have done so. But the majority on the Rules Committee decided otherwise and I do not see anything wrong with expediting the procedure, frankly.

A second unusual feature of this rule is that it only waives points of order, it does not deal with how long the joint resolutions will be debated or whether they will be amendable. That was established by a unanimous consent agreement on the floor of the House last week. Under those previous agreements, both joint resolutions are to be considered in the House, which means they will not be open to amendment under the 5-minute rule.

A third unusual feature of this rule is that it waives section 311(a) of the Budget Act, which prohibits spending in excess of the ceilings in the second budget resolution. In the history of the congressional budget process waivers of the budget ceilings have been granted only five times. Because of the emergency nature of these items the Budget Committee agreed not to object to these waivers, and the Rules Committee reported this rule.

A fourth unusual feature of this rule is that it protects the joint resolutions not only during their initial consideration in the House, but it also partially protects the conference reports when they come back to the House. The conference reports are protected from section 311(a) Budget Act waivers as long as they do not exceed the budget authority and outlay levels reported by the House Committee on Appropriations.

But the matter of unemployment compensation, I think, deserves more comment.

We passed a continuing resolution last December for additional funds and we provided for money for the unemployment services and the employment services, and in that resolution we inserted this statement,

Provided further, That no funds provided by this joint resolution shall be used for administrative or other expenses in connection with the closure of any State unemployment office, except in such cases as may be determined by the respective State agency to render its services more efficient.

Certainly you cannot render any office more efficient by closing it.

We have had several States, including Ohio, announcing that they were going to close unemployment offices at the very time they had many in long lines waiting to file claims. As a matter of fact, in the State of Ohio they announced they were going to close 37 offices, and we immediately started reminding them of this proviso inserted in the statute last December.

They said, "Well, we have our employment offices in with our unemployment offices. We cannot keep our employment offices open, so we have to close our unemployment offices."

Then, they backed off a bit and said, "We are not going to close any now until April," knowing full well that this Congress will act by that time.

I do not like those scare tactics, whether they are in the State of Ohio, or Texas where they attempt to use them, or in Illinois, where they were attempting to use the same type of tactics. I do not like them to put out information like that when they know what the statute says, and the Labor Department knew what the language was and they passed the word on to the regional offices and back to the States.

I hope that the Appropriations Committee will reinsert that type of language whenever it is needed and see that it is enforced, and you can certainly enforce it by notifying them from downtown that they are violating the law and hold up their payments until such time as they do comply with the law. Because we did not put that language in there idly, and certainly in times like these it is unreasonable for any State to say we are going to close your unemployment offices because we cannot get all the money from the Congress we thought we were entitled to.

I see my good friend from Mississippi wants me to yield.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LATTA. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTEN. May I say I agree with the gentleman and certainly the Congress is in full control of what moneys are appropriated for and what they shall not be used for.

I agree with the gentleman's reasoning and hope that we can cooperate in seeing that money is spent under section 628 of title XXXI, United States Code, which says money shall be only used for the purpose for which it was appropriated. That is a restriction that is ignored many times, but also I think we have a right to provide what it shall not be used for, and I hope our committee can cooperate and help the gentleman control this type of situation.

Mr. LATTA. I thank the gentleman for his comments.

Let me say that House Joint Resolution 391 provides the requested fiscal year 1982 supplemental appropriations to the Department of Labor of $343.5 million for State grants for unemployment insurance and employment services and $1.9 billion in general revenue advances to the unemployment trust fund, and these funds are in addition to what we did in December.

Let me also say that the other bill that this rule will make in order deals with the Commodity Credit Corporation, and our people who are familiar with the workings of the Commodity Credit Corporation realize that we have had some unusual drawdowns on these funds.

As a matter of fact, the CCC records on unreimbursed losses of $252.6 million from fiscal year 1980, $3.5 billion from fiscal year 1981, and $1.5 billion from the first quarter of fiscal year 1982 total $5.3 billion. In addition, unexpectedly high commodity loan demand and deficiency payments for wheat and barley reduced available borrowing authority to $603 million as of January 26, 1982.

The CCC anticipates the remaining funds will be depleted in early February by cotton and rice deficiency payments requiring suspension of all further loan and payment operations.

The CCC fund depletion is due primarily to current depressed market conditions, record 1981 crops, and increases in commodity program loan and purchase rates.

The CCC also provided funds to other agencies for Medfly operations and crop insurance payments.

□ 1315

Another factor is the higher interest rates charged the CCC on its borrowings. In fiscal year 1981, rates averaged 15 percent, and in 1981 interest payments totaled $1.2 billion; so we have seen some unusual situations that have occurred because of the depressed situation not only in the economy generally, but because of the market situations throughout the country and record crops. There is an urgent need to pass this legislation if we do not want to close down the operation of the CCC by mid February and to deny unemployment compensation to unemployed workers. Certainly on these two matters we have an emergency.

Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. LATTA. I would be happy to yield to my friend.

Mr. PEYSER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

His figures are absolutely accurate on the cost of the CCC.

I guess the question I have for the gentleman is that, as we know, the interest rates paid by the Commodity Credit Corporation averaged nearly 15 percent this last year, nearly 14 percent the year before.

Does it not seem reasonable to the gentleman that when we look at this and can act on this that there ought to be some minimum interest payment of that money repaid by those who borrow the money?

Mr. LATTA. The gentleman raises a very good question. He raised this same question before the Rules Committee on yesterday.

This is a matter that would require a change in the basic law and since the way this legislation is coming before the House there is no provision to amend it, it will have to wait for another day as both of these bills are going to be considered in the House.

Mr. PEYSER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BONIOR).

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for allowing me to address this rule and more specifically the resolution, (H.J. Res. 391), the labor supplemental appropriation.

I want to commend the chairman of the committee for guiding us through a very complicated situation yesterday in bringing before the House the bills that we will consider.

Mr. Speaker, I rise and take this opportunity to address the substance of House Joint Resolution 391 out of frustration and out of a concern for the situation that exists in the State of Michigan.

Mr. Speaker, representing the northeast suburbs of Detroit, I appreciate the intent of this appropriation as deeply as any Member of this Congress. Michigan currently suffers from a 16-percent unemployment rate. That translates into a record 600,000 unemployed. We have already closed 18 unemployment offices because of previous Federal funding cuts and without this supplemental we would probably have to close 19 more causing some of our citizens to travel as much as 94 miles to reach one of these offices.

One need not peruse very far back in the CONGRESSSIONAL RECORD to find the administration's supporters on the budget and tax debates of last year condemning the projections of the Congressional Budget Office. "Poor economics," they said. "The CBO is incompetent," they said. "CBO is using the wrong assumptions," they said. "Dr. Rivlin is too liberal and ought to be replaced," they said. One year later, we know that the CBO was right. Because their projections were based on some familiarity with economics and they refused to adopt the fantasies of the alchemists at the Office of Management and Budget, they implicitly predicted this day would be faced by this Congress.

Wishing something to be, Mr. President, does not make it so. Maybe on film, but not in the reality of the American economy. Economic policy must bear some relation to economic theory, otherwise lives, careers, and hopes of this and future generations are diminished.

This day was predictable. It was predictable last summer when this body gave away the store to corporate interests and gave a green light to military excesses, so much so that even they cannot find ways to use such unprecedented largesse. Meanwhile, we told the poor, the elderly, and the marginally employed that they were sapping the economy of its strength and it was up to them to restore it.

It was predictable when we cut job training assistance and based our ceilings for unemployment assistance on hallucinatory projections of the administration.

It was predictable, Mr. Speaker, and you know, as grateful as I am to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee for his expeditious response to this emergency, it is not going to be enough.

It is not going to be enough for workers who have lost their homes to foreclosure and with it, that most American of aspirations, inherited from previous generations. It is not going to be enough for the children of workers who will see their dreams of a college education evaporate with their parents' jobs, unemployment benefits exhausted, Federal education assistance nonexistent.

Where is the trickle-down, Mr. President? Despite mammoth concessions to corporations, our unemployed number 10 million, the business rate of investment is a meager 0.3 percent. Where is the trickle-down? These are real people, Mr. President—the unemployed are. They laugh and cry, they hope, and right now they hurt.

The President, confronted with massive unemployment in many regions of this land, contemptuously tells people to vote with their feet—to move to another part of the country.

We see stories in the newspapers regularly of thousands of applicants lining up in response to announcements of a handful of jobs. The Detroit Free Press in my own area, in a wonderful spirit of community, offered to publish at its own expense "situations wanted" ads for Detroit's unemployed. The response was six pages of free ads while the "help wanted" ads were listed on a single page. Our President tells us there are plenty of jobs offered in the newspapers for those who want to work.

It is time that this administration spent less time with the blue blooded and more time with the blue collar. Less time with black tie and more with black unemployment. Less time talking with people in reception lines and more time talking with people in unemployment lines.

There is a certain vindication for those of us who stood on this floor last year and denounced the "midnight budget" with its Disney-like assumptions, who predicted severe dislocations and resulting unemployment, which would in turn create unprecedented need for assistance, which would in turn drive deficits upward, which would in turn keep interest rates high, which would in turn prevent economic recovery.

But that vindication is hollow because it is predicated on the fulfillment of predictions which many of us expected yet hoped against. It is vindication obtained at the suffering of people I know, respect, and serve, and it is most unwelcome and bitter.

So I am happy for this bit of relief while I denounce the actions that have made it necessary. If any of my colleagues feel that this economic experiment is still attractive theory, I invite them to visit the silent lumber mills of Oregon, the steel mills of Pennsylvania and Ohio, and the auto factories of Michigan and Indiana.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this rule, this supplemental appropriation, and more honest budget projections than we are learning to expect from this administration.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, I really did not think we were going to hear just about the problems in Michigan. Since we listened to the problems in Michigan, let me say that everybody who does not have his head in the sand realizes they have an unprecedented problem in Michigan, brought on by the particular problems in the automobile industry. We have automobile plants in Ohio and we can pick them out, those areas where we have high unemployment.

I wish the gentleman would have made that speech to Mr. Frazer before he walked away from the negotiating table. They know they have problems in Michigan, but now they are going to put them off until July. I think it is high time that the people in the State of Michigan and the people in the State of Ohio or any other area of the United States adversely affected by the shutdown in the auto industry, and I have three of the automobile companies represented in or near our district, urge a resumption of the stalled talks with GM.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

We are all affected because they are not sitting down and renegotiating. The American people know what the problem is. People walk into the showrooms and they look at the sticker price of an automobile and if they do not faint, they walk away.

Well, it is high time for them to realize in the automobile industry they have a product that is too high to sell. I do not care whether it is management, labor, or who is to blame. The fact is they are not selling the product, and as soon as they realize what the problem is, they are going to start selling again and put people back to work.

When they talk about cutting back $2,000 on an automobile that sells for $26,000 or $27,000, and I have reference to a product made by General Motors, the Seville, well, they are not attracting too many buyers. When they cut back $500 on an automobile that is selling for $9,000 or $10,000, they are not attracting too many buyers.

So I think it is high time that the people in Michigan and Ohio and throughout this country who are being adversely affected because labor and management are not right now—going back to that renegotiation table trying to resolve this problem should call for action. It is not going to be solved down here in the well of the House blaming this administration, which inherited 8 million unemployed and they seem to forget this when they come down here and make those political speeches; but the people back in my district know something about unemployment when they are laid off and they know something about what is causing it. They are not blaming this administration. They are blaming the high price of a product that they cannot sell.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LATTA. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding, because I think he makes an excellent point. It was reemphasized by a study done by E. F. Hutton just recently, and supposedly everyone listens to E. F. Hutton. E. F. Hutton pointed out that the present recession did not start even last July or particulary last October. This recession started in 1978.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

This recession started back in 1978 and we have been on a steady downward path ever since that with only a couple times when the economy has moved up just a little bit; so what this administration is trying to do is correct some major economic problems that it inherited and the kinds of political speeches that indicate that somehow our economic problems are a result of policies that really went into effect only a matter of a few weeks ago is just sheer political posturing. It has no basis in fact.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LATTA. I would be happy to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Well, if the gentleman believes this recession was started in 1978, I have a used car I would like to sell now.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LATTA. I would be happy to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. YATES. If, indeed, the recession started in 1978, when Mr. Weidenbaum in the hearing this morning, said it started in 1979 in an attempt to justify the same kind of rationale as the gentleman from Pennsylvania, if, indeed, it did start then, why did not the administration note it in the course of the year and take appropriate measures?

I will say to the gentleman that in hearings this morning with Mr. Stockman, I showed Mr. Stockman the error in the projections of the current project at $91.5 billion. That is wrong, and he conceded that was wrong later in his testimony.

□ 1330

Mr. LATTA. Let me say, before yielding to my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, if all of our big-spending friends around here would cut back on some of the high appropriation bills and stop some of that spending, we would not have all that deficit.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

If we were to cut back everything the administration wants to cut back, you would still have the deficits that are causing the high interest rates, and that contributes to the depression. It is not the cuts in the spending. We have to keep America strong, and the Government programs do that.

Mr. LATTA. What is the gentleman's answer—to spend more, borrow more?

Mr. YATES. The gentleman's answer is that the gentleman's Gramm-Latta bill did a great deal to hurt the economy of America last year.

Mr. LATTA. Come on, now. I would be happy to yield if you can explain that. What is your answer—to spend more, tax more; do the same thing that got us into this mess?

Mr. YATES. I would say to the gentleman that I, for one, would vote to defer the third year's tax bill for some months in order to provide the funds that are necessary to pay a part of the deficits that are now taking place. I thought the tax bill was improvident. I thought it went much too far.

Yes; I will vote to defer the effective date of that tax cut.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LATTA. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I think the point needs to be made that this administration did recognize we were headed for economic hard times. That is the reason why they said we ought to have a 10-percent tax cut beginning not this past January, but last January, January of 1981. They proposed a 10-percent tax cut then in order to try to get this economy growing again last year. It was the Democrats who came to this House and told us that that should not be done and are, as a result, at least partially responsible for the situation we not find ourselves in.

Economic growth is what is going to get us out of this present problem. The administration recognized that early on.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LATTA. I think that is a pretty good point at which to stop right there.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. LOTT).

Mr. LOTT. I thank the distinguished gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to turn to such mundane things as the discussion of the rule and the budget provision being waived here, but I would like to do that just momentarily.

Mr. Speaker, I think we need to look just a minute at what really is taking place here today with regard to these rules. The Budget Committee yesterday took action and transmitted to the House the current level of spending and revenues for fiscal year 1982. These levels of spending exceed the levels of ceilings provided in the second concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 1982.

Section 311(A) of the Budget Act prohibits the consideration of any bill or resolution which exceeds the ceilings set in the most recently passed concurrent resolution on the budget. The rule which we are now considering waives this section.

The Members need to be aware this waiver has only been granted five times in the past. While the Rules Committee has waived other sections of the Budget Act out of hand many times, this is rare thing that we are doing here today.

Without this restraint, and without Presidential impoundment authority, Federal spending will continue to run uncontrolled and unrestrained. Members should be aware that this waiver applies not only to this bill, but to any subsequent conference report as long as that conference does not exceed the level of budget authority or outlays contained in these resolutions. This, too, although not unprecedented, has budgetary consequences.

So I would just like to tell the Members simply that this action could be one of the few final steps left in obliterating any kind of budgetary restraint that we had on the Budget and Impoundment Act. I recognize that out of expediency we need to do it to get these urgent bills up. But I am concerned about what we are doing with this waiver of one final budgetary restraint.

Mr. LEVITAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. LEVITAS. I thank my colleague from Mississippi for yielding. I appreciate the gentleman addressing the substance of the rule.

Mr. Speaker, I have been listening to the excellent explanation by the chairman of the Rules Committee as to the expediency of the rule, but I am, too, concerned about this process. I, for one, will look very closely at any rule which takes this position, because otherwise we just open the floodgates.

I am also somewhat facetiously concerned about the process of debating these measures in the House rather than in the Committee of the Whole House, so they are not open for amendment, because just listening to the few minutes of interchange between the gentleman from Michigan, the gentleman from Ohio, the gentleman from Illinois, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, we could have, if not an illuminating, a very entertaining afternoon for the next few days as these positions are being taken.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to reclaim my time just to say I hope this does not become a routine waiver, and I, for one, will not support a continuation of waiver after waiver of 311(a) of the Budget Act.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague yield to me?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DANIELSON). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LATTA. I yield myself 15 seconds.

Mr. Speaker, let me just say hopefully we will have the third budget resolution up before we have another bill such as this. We will not have to waive it.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. MOTTL).

Mr. MOTTL. I certainly appreciate the gentleman from Ohio yielding 2 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this rule and needed legislation, House Joint Resolution 391, which takes a big step toward putting America back to work.

A salient provision of House Joint Resolution 391, is the inclusion of $210.5 million for operations of State employment agencies. This would restore employment at the State levels to 24,800 workers, as opposed to the 17,500 workers on the payroll today. I will address my comments to that provision.

I come armed for battle, if need be. I have received these petitions signed by 3,962 Greater Clevelanders urging the restoration of funds for operations of the Ohio Bureau of Employment Services. Petitions bearing another 5,000 names were placed in the mail to me on February 5.

Ohio's unemployment rate was 12.5 percent in December and it has yet to peak. The fine services provided by the Ohio Bureau of Employment Services should, if anything, be stepped up, not slowed down during such drastic times. Ditto for the unemployment bureaus in the other 49 States.

State employment services and their legion of professional interviewers should be put back to work to help others get back to work during this session.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank especially the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. NATCHER), the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. WHITTEN), and also the minority members on the Appropriations Committee for restoring the much needed funds.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 329, nays 72, not voting 33, as follows:

[Roll No. 2]

YEAS—329

Addabbo	Ertel	Leath
Akaka	Evans (DE)	LeBoutillier
Albosta	Evans (IA)	Lee
Alexander	Evans (IN)	Lehman
Anderson	Fary	Leland
Andrews	Fascell	Lent
Annunzio	Fazio	Livingston
Anthony	Fenwick	Loeffler
Applegate	Ferraro	Long (LA)
Aspin	Findley	Long (MD)
Atkinson	Fish	Lowry (WA)
AuCoin	Fithian	Luken
Bafalis	Flippo	Lundine
Bailey (PA)	Florio	Madigan
Barnard	Foglietta	Markey
Barnes	Foley	Marks
Beard	Ford (MI)	Marlenee
Bedell	Ford (TN)	Marriott
Beilenson	Forsythe	Martin (IL)
Benedict	Fountain	Martin (NC)
Benjamin	Fowler	Martin (NY)
Bennett	Frank	Matsui
Bereuter	Frenzel	Mattox
Bethune	Frost	Mavroules
Bevill	Fuqua	Mazzoli
Bingham	Garcia	McClory
Blanchard	Gaydos	McCurdy
Bolling	Gejdenson	McDade
Boner	Gephardt	McEwen
Bonior	Gilman	McGrath
Bonker	Gingrich	McHugh
Bouquard	Ginn	Mica
Bowen	Glickman	Michel
Brinkley	Gonzalez	Mikulski
Brodhead	Goodling	Miller (CA)
Brooks	Gore	Miller (OH)
Broomfield	Gradison	Mineta
Brown (CA)	Gray	Minish
Broyhill	Green	Mitchell (MD)
Burton, John	Guarini	Moakley
Burton, Phillip	Gunderson	Moffett
Byron	Hagedorn	Mollohan
Chappell	Hall (OH)	Montgomery
Chappie	Hall, Ralph	Morrison
Chisholm	Hall, Sam	Mottl
Clausen	Hamilton	Murphy
Clinger	Hammerschmidt	Murtha
Coelho	Hance	Myers
Coleman	Harkin	Napier
Collins (IL)	Hartnett	Natcher
Conable	Hatcher	Neal
Conte	Hawkins	Nelligan
Conyers	Heckler	Nelson
Corcoran	Hefner	Nichols
Coughlin	Hendon	Nowak
Courter	Hertel	O'Brien
Coyne, James	Hightower	Oakar
Coyne, William	Hillis	Oberstar
Craig	Holland	Obey
Crockett	Hollenbeck	Ottinger
D'Amours	Hopkins	Oxley
Danielson	Howard	Panetta
Daschle	Hoyer	Pashayan
Daub	Huckaby	Patman
de la Garza	Hughes	Patterson
Deckard	Hunter	Pease
Derrick	Hutto	Pepper
Dicks	Hyde	Perkins
Dingell	Ireland	Peyser
Dixon	Jacobs	Pickle
Donnelly	Jeffords	Porter
Dorgan	Jenkins	Price
Dougherty	Jones (NC)	Quillen
Dowdy	Jones (OK)	Rahall
Downey	Jones (TN)	Railsback
Duncan	Kastenmeier	Rangel
Dunn	Kazen	Ratchford
Dwyer	Kemp	Regula
Dyson	Kennelly	Reuss
Eckart	Kildee	Rhodes
Edgar	Kogovsek	Richmond
Edwards (AL)	LaFalce	Rinaldo
Edwards (CA)	Lagomarsino	Roberts (KS)
Emery	Lantos	Rodino
English	Latta	Roe
Erdahl	Leach	Roemer

Rogers	Smith (IA)	Watkins
Rose	Smith (NE)	Waxman
Rosenthal	Smith (NJ)	Weber (OH)
Rostenkowski	Smith (PA)	White
Roth	Snowe	Whitehurst
Roukema	Solarz	Whitley
Roybal	St Germain	Whittaker
Russo	Stanton	Whitten
Sabo	Stark	Williams (MT)
Savage	Staton	Williams (OH)
Sawyer	Stenholm	Wilson
Scheuer	Stokes	Wirth
Schneider	Stratton	Wolf
Schroeder	Studds	Wolpe
Schulze	Synar	Wortley
Schumer	Tauke	Wright
Seiberling	Tauzin	Wyden
Shamansky	Traxler	Yates
Shannon	Trible	Yatron
Sharp	Udall	Young (FL)
Shaw	Vander Jagt	Young (MO)
Shelby	Volkmer	Zablocki
Simon	Walgren	Zeferetti
Skelton	Washington

NAYS—72

Archer	Gregg	Pritchard
Badham	Grisham	Ritter
Bailey (MO)	Hansen (ID)	Roberts (SD)
Bliley	Hansen (UT)	Robinson
Brown (CO)	Holt	Rousselot
Burgener	Hubbard	Rudd
Butler	Johnston	Sensenbrenner
Carman	Kindness	Shumway
Carney	Kramer	Shuster
Clay	Levitas	Skeen
Collins (TX)	Lewis	Smith (AL)
Crane, Daniel	Lott	Smith (OR)
Crane, Philip	Lowery (CA)	Snyder
Daniel, Dan	Lujan	Solomon
Daniel, R. W.	Lungren	Stangeland
Dannemeyer	McCollum	Stump
Derwinski	McDonald	Taylor
Dreier	Mitchell (NY)	Thomas
Edwards (OK)	Molinari	Walker
Emerson	Moore	Weber (MN)
Evans (GA)	Moorhead	Weiss
Fiedler	Parris	Winn
Fields	Paul	Wylie
Gramm	Petri	Young (AK)

NOT VOTING—33

Ashbrook	DeNardis	Jeffries
Biaggi	Dickinson	McCloskey
Boggs	Dornan	McKinney
Boland	Dymally	Pursell
Breaux	Early	Santini
Brown (OH)	Erlenborn	Siljander
Campbell	Gibbons	Spence
Cheney	Goldwater	Swift
Coats	Heftel	Vento
Davis	Hiler	Wampler
Dellums	Horton	Weaver

□ 1345

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Mr. Biaggi with Mr. Ashbrook.
Mr. Boland with Mr. Pursell.
Mr. Dellums with Mr. Jeffries.
Mr. Weaver with Mr. McKinney.
Mr. Santini with Mr. Davis.
Mr. Vento with Mr. Dickinson.
Mr. Heftel with Mr. Coats.
Mrs. Boggs with Mr. Wampler.
Mr. Breaux with Mr. Goldwater.
Mr. Dymally with Mr. Horton.
Mr. Early with Mr. Campbell.
Mr. Swift with Mr. Brown of Ohio.
Mr. DeNardis with Mr. Cheney.
Mr. Siljander with Mr. Dornan of California.
Mr. McCloskey with Mr. Spence.
Mr. Erlenborn with Mr. Hiler.

Mr. STANGELAND and Mr. MOLINARI changed their votes from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. GILMAN changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 5118, SOUTHERN ARIZONA WATER RIGHTS SETTLEMENT ACT OF 1981

Mr. BOLLING, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 97-430) on the resolution (H. Res. 357) providing for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5118) to provide water to the Papago Tribe of Arizona and its members, to settle Papago Indian water rights claims in portions of the Papago Reservations, and for other purposes, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR THE CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 861, NATIONAL TRAILS SYSTEM ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. BOLLING, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 97-431) on the resolution (H. Res. 358) providing for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 861) to amend the National Trails System Act by designating additional national scenic and historic trails, and for other purposes, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 392, URGENT SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES, 1982

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 356 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 356

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider, section 311(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (Public Law 93-344) to the contrary notwithstanding, the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 392) making an urgent supplemental appropriation for the Department of Health and Human Services for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982. It shall be in order to consider, section 311(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 to the contrary notwithstanding, a conference report on said joint resolution if the report does not provide budget authority in excess of that provided by the joint resolution as reported to the House by the Committee on Appropriations, and if the report would not cause budget outlays to exceed the budget outlays which would be caused by the joint resolution as reported to the House by the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri (Mr. BOLLING) is recognized for 1 hour.

□ 1400

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to read a statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. LATTA) for purposes of debate only, and pending that I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am actually not going to take too much time because this is not as complicated a parliamentary situation as we had on the previous rule. It is a little complicated because the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. WHITTEN), the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, when he asked for consideration of this matter on February 5 or any day thereafter, provided that it be heard in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House. That provides for the matter to be read under the 5-minute rule for amendment, but it does provide that the manager of the bill has control of the floor by being able to move the previous question—not order the previous question; the House has to do that—on any amendment offered.

So in effect this is an open rule, unlike the other one, and it makes in order the consideration of a matter of considerable urgency, fuel assistance.

I know of no great controversy over the matter, although I know some Members are opposed to its being considered at this time. But it seems to me the rule is a reasonable one. It is largely tantamount to an open rule.

Mr. Speaker, the statement for which I requested permission follows.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 356 provides waivers of section 311(a) of the Budget Act to permit consideration of House Joint Resolution 392, making urgent supplemental appropriations for the Department of Health and Human Services.

Section 311(a) of the Budget Act prohibits the consideration of any bill, resolution, amendment or conference report providing additional new budget or spending authority that would result in the breach of the ceiling of total new budget authority or total budget outlays set forth in the most recently agreed to concurrent resolution on the budget for the current fiscal year.

The rule also waives section 311(a) so that the conference report on the joint resolution with the proviso that the conference report figures do not exceed the budget authority of or outlays resulting from the joint resolution as it was reported from the House Committee on Appropriations. The need for these waivers and the proviso was fully explained in my previous statement on the parliamentary situation regarding House Joint Resolutions 389 and 391 and does not need to be repeated at this time.

Mr. Speaker, as provided in the agreed upon unanimous-consent request of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the joint resolution will be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. This is not an extraordinary procedure for the consideration of supplemental or continuing appropriations bills.

When the joint resolution is called up it will be considered as pending and open for debate or amendment under the 5-minute rule. Any Member may be recognized for 5 minutes for purposes of debate or amendment. Under this procedure the floor manager has the option of moving the previous question at any time once consideration has commenced, and thus cutting off debate and the amendment process. The minority maintains the right to offer a germane motion to recommit.

Mr. Speaker, this procedure provides the necessary flexibility for the House to expeditiously work its will while insuring an opportunity for discussion and possible amendment of the controversial provisions of this legislation.

House Joint Resolution 392 appropriates $123 million for the low income energy assistance program and would bring the total fiscal year 1982 appropriations level to the $1.8 billion as authorized by the Omnibus Reconciliation Act. This winter has been the coldest on record in this century and it is expected that the States will exhaust the energy assistance funds before the close of the winter heating season.

Due to the urgency of the situation, I urge my colleagues to adopt House Resolution 356 so that we may consider this important legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LATTA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this rule waives points of order. Before getting into the problems with the legislation, however, there are one or two things about this rule Members should be aware of.

First, the rule waives points of order because the joint resolution before us violates the spending ceilings in the second budget resolution passed at the end of the last session. While the rule protects the joint resolution during the initial consideration, and also partially protects the conference report, it does not protect any amendments which may be offered during consideration in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. This means that any amendments which attempt to increase budget authority or outlays will be subject to a point of order for violating spending ceilings in the most recent budget resolution. Amendments to reduce budget authority or outlays will not be subject to a point of order.

The rule will also protect the conference report on this joint resolution, if the conference report does not contain budget authority or outlays in excess of the amounts reported to the House by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. Speaker, this urgent supplemental appropriation is not really so urgent as its supporters would like to have you believe. The supplemental funds are not needed at this time. States have been able to operate effective programs of energy assistance under the continuing resolution's annual rate of $1.752 billion in fiscal year 1982. To date only 25 percent of the amounts made available have been drawn by the States and tribes even though 90 percent have been made available.

Mr. Speaker, there have been many different methods used by the States in distributing this money and as a consequence, there have been many abuses of this program.

In 1980 recipients of SSI benefits received low-income energy assistance funds, even though in some cases three or four of them lived in the same house, and did not have individual heating costs.

In certain States, people who received food stamps or some other form of public assistance were automatically given low-income fuel assistance. Some of these people as it turns out live in public housing, and do not even pay their own fuel bills. Under the 1981 program many States had unused funds during the winter of 1980–81 and decided to make flat grants of nearly $100 million to prior beneficiaries of that year's program without any determination of need for such assistance.

Even after the grants, certain States had $39 million in excess low-income home energy assistance funds in 1981 which were reallocated to other States in the summer of 1981. As a matter of fact in 1981, $32.5 million of the amount in this program was spent for summertime air-conditioning.

If there are States that still cannot manage, there are other available resources. For example, States may transfer funds from the social services block grant and the community services block grant to their energy assistance block grant.

Finally, States may use emergency assistance authority under title IV–A of the Social Security Act to aid needy households in cases where they are experiencing severe crisis.

With all these various resources available to States, we should not now be forcing the expenditure of extra funds. This extra spending is opposed by the administration. And in light of the abuses which have gone on in this program in the past, we should at least spend more than 25 percent of the money in the existing program, before throwing additional dollars at the problem.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

URGENT SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRIULTURE, 1982

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr Speaker, pursuant to the order of the House on Thursday last, I call up the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 389) making an urgent supplemental appropriation for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982, for the Department of Agriculture, and ask for its consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

H.J. RES. 389

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sum is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982; namely:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

REIMBURSEMENT FOR NET REALIZED LOSSES

To reimburse the Commodity Credit Corporation for net realized losses sustained heretofore, but not previously reimbursed, pursuant to the Act of August 17, 1961 (15 U.S.C. 713a-11, 713a-12), $5,000,000,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. WHITTEN) is recognized for 1 hour.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the consideration of House Joint Resolution 389, and that I may include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes of my time to my colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE), for the purpose of debate only, and pending that, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker, we have here a real acute emergency. We have a law which requires the Commodity Credit Corporation to make certain payments in connection with agricultural commodities. The price for agricultural commodities in the marketplace is so low that practically all of the agricultural producers have turned to CCC loans because they are higher than the price they might receive in the marketplace.

As of today we have 233,000 agricultural producers who are entitled to payments at a time when they should start farming. These payments cannot be made until this bill passes.

If CCC makes these payments that is in violation of the law. If they fail to make the payments, that is also in violation of the law. So they are in trouble either way we wish to take it.

The Bureau of the Budget and the President sent down a request for $5 billion in supplemental appropriations.

Mr. Speaker, I hope I may have the attention of the Members and I hope I may have their support because this is an acute situation. The request to our committee was for an appropriation to increase borrowing authority by $5 billion. If we had gone along with that approach, this bill would have been open to any number of amendments. On the other side of the Capitol the number of amendments would have been unlimited because the temptation is there to have it end up as a Christmas tree. That could well delay greatly the payment of these moneys that are now due to these 233,000 agricultural producers.

So what we did, Mr. Speaker, in an effort to prevent the accumulation of a whole lot of amendments, which in turn might have prevented the payments that are due, we elected to restore $5 billion of capital impairment. The bill before us only restores capital impairment. That in turn leaves it where, in my opinion, it is not subject to amendment unless the amendment is germane to the restoration of capital impairment.

We propose to restore $252.6 million in unreimbursed fiscal year 1980 losses; $3,530.6 million in unreimbursed fiscal year 1981 losses; and losses for the first quarter and fiscal year 1982, $1,216.8 million; for a total of $5 billion.

So may I repeat again that we have the Commodity Credit Corporation charged on the one hand with making payments, and if they do not, they are in violation of the law, but if they make payments without the money, they are also in violation of the law. Therefore, their supplemental is absolutely urgent.

Now, there is a second benefit. This approach keeps us from having to face the increasing of the capital structure of the Corporation. But that is a secondary reason.

So I would say to the Members that I hope they will all go along with this because it does nothing except provide $5 billion for restoration of capital impairment. It does not increase the authority of the Corporation in any way. It does not in any way affect, or is it affected by, the Poland situation, which is the subject of some media controversy. That problem is not even touched but this bill, neither top nor bottom.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the Members will go along with us on getting this through in its present form. I know that all the Members were not on the floor when the rule was read, but if the Members heard the rule, they know the rule provides that in the event any amendment on the other side changes the amount in the bill, we would have to come back and get a new rule.

So I hope the Members will go along with the way we have written it and under the rule we have, because otherwise if it went to the Senate with any amendment, even though it be meaningless, that would mean this is a vehicle to which the other side could tie amendments. If we go to conference, we would have to go and get a rule all over again.

So, Mr. Speaker, I say that in many cases where farming is ready to get going, where the need is acute, and where the law says they are entitled to it and the Corporation wants to pay it, we owe it to ourselves to restore the capital impairment now and not let this go any longer.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, did I understand the gentleman to say there is absolutely no money in here that would affect the Polish situation?

Mr. WHITTEN. None whatsoever. An amendment could be worked up perhaps that would nonetheless say you could not do it, but you could not anyway under the terms of this bill. But if we took an amendment, then it would go to the other side where, under their rules, most anything could be tied to it. Should that happen we would be tied to that in conference and we would have to go to the Rules Committee and get a rule all over again, as I understand it.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I had understood that this is precisely the fund out of which we are now taking the money to help pay off the Polish debt. Is that not the case?

Mr. WHITTEN. We have a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture saying that is completely erroneous, and we have one from the State Department as well. That is a complete misunderstanding of this bill. I assure the gentleman that we have the letters saying that they cannot use the money in this bill for that purpose under any circumstances.

While an amendment might be written that would say you could not, it is unnecessary because under this bill you cannot. The danger in that is that it would go to the other side, and under their rules most any kind of amendment could be attached to it, and that would put us through this thing again and the delay could cause CCC to shut down the farm programs.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his explanation.

Are there copies of the letter available by any chance?

Mr. WHITTEN. We do not have copies, but we can give you the originals.

Mr. WALKER. That would be helpful, I think, for some of us on this side to address those kinds of concerns.

Mr. WHITTEN. We will get those originals to you.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the lovely gentlewoman from Nebraska (Mrs. SMITH), the ranking Republican on the Subcommittee on Agriculture of the Appropriations Committee.

Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, as my distinguished colleagues have already so eloquently explained, financing for our vitally needed farm-marketing programs through the Commodity Credit Corporation is, in fact, basically exhausted.

Government accountants at the U.S. Department of Agriculture today have let their superiors know that except for repayments flowing into local and regional offices, CCC is bankrupt to make any further price-support loans. Indeed, I have a letter, received today, from Secretary John Block stating that we need final approval of House Joint Resolution 389 by today, Tuesday, February 9. Although he stops short of saying so, CCC operations will enter preliminary stages of shutdown after today, and, indeed, may already be underway.

Nobody can predict grain prices, but it is clear that if CCC must stop receiving grain into its regular reserve and price-support loan programs, producers have almost no recourse but to dump grain on the markets if they are in dire need of cash. In my opinion, this could precipitate the kind of grain-market debacle that these Government programs were designed to prevent.

So we must have action to pass this supplemental request in the quickest possible time. I have taken part in the hearings on this matter, hearings held expeditiously as soon as could be arranged after the resumption of the 97th Congress. The testimony was clear and unequivocal—CCC would quickly run out of money.

I have told President Reagan, Secretary Block, and now I am telling my colleagues that there is a false, widespread notion that most Americans do not have to worry about having any farmers and about their disastrous economic plight as long as we have plenty of supermarkets.

I am telling the House that an economic depression so severe and so dangerous that I cannot remember anything comparable is gripping our food-producing sector. And while it sounds good right now in terms of helping hold down food prices, continued low prices to farmers for their products cannot long continue to subsidize the American consumer without grave consequences.

This bill providing $5 billion of additional financing for all farm programs must go through immediately or else the farm sector's already crashing economy will quite simply collapse. Discussions as we have here today by themselves tend to depress grain prices in a market that is drowning in corn and wheat.

I am offering in the RECORD a copy of Secretary of Agriculture Block's letter and a copy of Deputy Secretary Richard Lyng's testimony today before the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Foreign Operations.

I say that this is not the proper forum in which to contemplate serious limitations on the use of CCC funds, risking delay in approval of this desperately needed money. This is not the forum to make a decision on tying the President's hands on foreign policy. Therefore, I have recommended to my committee, and I suggest now, that one appropriate forum would be special hearings by the Appropriations Committee. I have requested that the chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi, and my ranking minority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts, consider holding such hearings as soon as possible.

The material referred to follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D.C. February 5, 1982.

Hon. JAMIE L. WHITTEN,
Chairman, Committee on Appropriations, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Yesterday, the House Appropriations Committee approved House Joint Resolution 389, making urgent appropriations to restore the net realized losses of the Commodity Credit Corporation (CCC). This action by the Committee was in response to the President's recent request. Approval of this resolution will help to assure that the Commodity Credit Corporation will have sufficient resources to carry out programs mandated by current law including the Agriculture and Food Act of 1981.

We appreciate the expeditious action of the Congress and especially of the House Appropriations Committee in dealing with this matter. It is truly an urgent situation. Unanticipated high levels of losses have endangered the continued operation of our farm programs at a time when farmers are particularly vulnerable and especially in need of these programs. We need final approval of this proposal by Tuesday, February 9, 1982.

As this resolution moves the rest of the way through the Congress, it is important that everyone have the clearest possible understanding of what it does. This resolution would restore the previously unreimbursed realized losses of the Corporation resulting primarily from programs which were operated during crop years 1980 and 1981. These losses total approximately $5 billion. They result primarily from costs associated with CCC price support inventories (such as the dairy program), disaster and deficiency payments to producers, emergency feed payment programs, and the expenses incurred in maintaining storage for the grain reserve. Under law, the Commodity Credit Corporation finances these operations initially by borrowing funds from the Treasury. These Treasury loans are repaid with interest when the necessary funds are appropriated by the Congress. House Joint Resolution 389 restores these losses, enables CCC to repay this debt to the Treasury, and thus helps to restore CCC's line of credit with the Treasury within the $20 billion overall limit prescribed by law.

Recent publicity has associated the question of CCC losses with issues related to Polish export credit. It should be clearly understood that no realized losses have been incurred by the Commodity Credit Corporation with respect to the making or guaranteeing of export credit to Poland. Therefore, none of the $5 billion provided in House Joint Resolution 389 is needed for such a purpose. At present, Poland owes $540 million to the United States Government in repayment of direct export credits which were extended during 1978-1980 and $1 billion to U.S. exporters and assignees for credit guaranteed during the period 1979-1981. Last summer decisions were made to permit rescheduling of $217 million in direct credit and $143 million in guaranteed credit for which payments were due in 1981. These actions were, of course, taken prior to the current crisis. With respect to the guaranteed credit, CCC made payment to the banks and assumed the account receivable for those rescheduled 1981 repayments. Recently further decisions were made with respect to payments by CCC on an additional $71 million of guaranteed credit for which repayment was due in January 1982. These decisions were, of course, made in accordance with existing law and on the basis of Administration policy with respect to Poland.

At present, all of the Polish debt for credit extended by the Commodity Credit Corporation or acquired by the Corporation under its guarantee programs are being maintained as accounts receivable. There are no current losses resulting from this debt.

We hope this information will be helpful to you. Again, we appreciate your quick action in dealing with this matter and we remain available to provide any information or assistance you may need.

Sincerely,

JOHN R. BLOCK,
Secretary.

STATEMENT OF RICHARD E. LYNG, DEPUTY SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the opportunity to appear before you to discuss the need to restore the Commodity Credit Corporation's (CCC) realized losses and the relationship of this action to the Polish debt situation.

Let me say at the outset that there is no connection between these two events.

The need for restoring the realized losses of the CCC is directly associated with the operation of commodity programs during crop years 1980 and 1981. These losses total approximately $5 billion. They result primarily from costs associated with CCC price support purchases (such as the dairy program), disaster and deficiency payments to producers, emergency feed payment programs, and the expenses incurred in operating the farmer-owned grain reserve program. Under law, the Commodity Credit Corporation finances these operations initially by borrowing funds from the Treasury. These Treasury loans are repaid with interest when the necessary funds are appropriated by the Congress. Restoring these losses would enable CCC to repay this debt to the Treasury, and thus help to restore CCC's line of credit with the Treasury within the $20 billion overall limit prescribed by law.

Recent publicity has associated the question of CCC losses with issues related to Polish export credit. It should be clearly understood that no realized losses have been incurred by the Commodity Credit Corporation with respect to the making or guaranteeing of export credit to Poland. Therefore, none of the $5 billion we are requesting is needed for such a purpose. All of the Polish debt for credit extended by the Commodity Credit Corporation or acquired by the Corporation under its guarantee programs is being maintained as accounts receivable. There are no current losses resulting from this debt.

The need to reimburse CCC for its losses is urgent. The record level of production for the 1981 crops and unprecedented demand for commodity loans together with income support (deficiency) payments, has contributed to the near depletion of the $20 billion in borrowing authority.

The reimbursement for losses that we are requesting will allow the Corporation to continue to operate the price and income support programs farmers depend upon. If the CCC losses are not reimbursed immediately it will be necessary to suspend all loan and payment operations until cash receipts are of sufficient volume to make the resumption of operations feasible. The Commodity Credit Corporation deals with millions of farmers and utilizes the services of thousands of banks, processors, carriers, exporters, handlers, warehousemen and others. Without funds to carry out CCC operations, the day-to-day business dealings of many segments of the economy would be adversely affected.

□ 1415

Mr. CONTE. I thank the gentlewoman from Nebraska (Mrs. SMITH.).

Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. ROBERTS).

Mr. ROBERTS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my concern over exactly what we are trying to accomplish. We are being asked to provide $5 billion in supplemental appropriations for the Commodity Credit Corporation. There is no doubt about the need for this supplemental appropriation.

The recent farm bill this body passed and signed by the President has two essential features: A "safety net" of price support loans and the expansion of worldwide export markets for the farmer's commodities.

Both of these features involve the use of commodity credit funds. For this reason, the additional appropriations for the CCC are of vital importance to the American farmer and the wheat producers that I represent in the big First District of Kansas.

Yet, today as we consider this needed supplemental appropriation, we also learn that the United States is considering using CCC funds to "bail out" banks holding loans to Poland. This raises serious and far-reaching questions—questions that need answers and investigation by this Congress.

Quite frankly, I am tired of seeing the American farmer used as a pawn, sacrificed once again in an international game of politics for foreign policy symbolism.

I am deeply concerned about the ominous and far-reaching implications of using agricultural products as a foreign policy weapon. We are now faced with a situation where we are using a policy of economic sanctions that for the most part singles out agriculture as a means of symbolism to register our protest for Soviet action in Poland.

On one hand, the farmer is told that his and our country's key to economic salvation is exports. To that end, we currently export nearly two-thirds of all the wheat grown in this Nation; 80 percent of what we ship to the Soviet Union is agricultural products. However, since martial law was declared in Poland, we have reacted by threatening to embargo future sales of grain to the Soviet Union. This de facto embargo already has knocked 40 cents off the price of 1 bushel of wheat in my hometown, Dodge City, Kans.

We have told the farmer he must do his share to balance the Federal budget and we have cut farm programs to the bone. We have assured the farmer we would work to expand foreign markets.

Yet, in the name of foreign policy, we erode those markets. Whether you spell it "sanctions" or "embargo," the farmer comes up losing.

And, now again in the name of foreign policy, we siphon away commodity credit funds to bail out big banks and meet obligations of the Polish military dictatorship. It is estimated that between $500 million and $1.5 billion in CCC money could be used for this purpose.

The U.S. and Western European banks have loaned Communist countries $70 billion in the last 10 years. In effect, the Soviet Union has been using our money to build up the Soviet military machine. And, the Soviets are being paid to do it with farm commodity credit money.

Congress must provide strong oversight in this whole area. Before passing this resolution, we should underscore the need for hearings regarding this entire area.

I would like to ask my colleague from Mississippi, chairman of the committee, I was under the impression that part of this money, $71 million, according to press reports and other reports, would be going to pay for incurred debts to banks through the CCC on debts that were owed them by Poland. Is this not correct?

Mr. WHITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTS of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTEN. May I say that the CCC is, as the gentleman knows, a corporation. It has lending authority and the payments it is authorized to make have resulted in certain losses which have depleted its capital. What we appropriate here is to replace capital that has already been spent. This restoration of capital to the Corporation will address the need right now is as I have described it.

So this money will restore that much capital impairment. It will restore the overall authority of the Corporation by reason of restoring this much of the expenditures or capital impairment that they have heretofore made. But it can be used only for that purpose.

The Corporation has no authority to make this payment with these funds. It can not be used for that purpose. We have a letter so stating from the Department of State and the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. ROBERTS of Kansas. I appreciate the chairman informing me of this policy. But what is going down out in my district and in my country, my 57 counties, is that we are using a portion of the CCC loan money to bail out banks when, it fact, the farmer has seen his price go off 40 cents by a de facto embargo. The farmer is asking me why are we using CCC loan funds to bail out banks at his expenses.

Mr. WHITTEN. Presumably because the legislation that passed directed them to. The money in this bill does not go to that purpose. This only restores the money that they have used in the past to carry out the farm program.

The Corporation has a charter which limits its authority and it acts under the action of the Congress through the farm bill. So if those uses are in that bill, or allowed under CCC charter, some of the money that the Corporation has, may have gone for that purpose. I have no way of knowing that. But this bill just restores the capital impairment that occurred heretofore and none of that was caused by the loans to Poland.

The reason for this is to meet the obligations to 233,000 farmers who are standing in line waiting for money from CCC that is overdue.

Mr. ROBERTS of Kansas. I full well understand my colleague's concern on that point and I share his concern. We desperately need these funds. I am rising in support of this resolution but, on the other hand, what is playing out in farm country is the continued use of agriculture as a foreign policy whipping boy.

Mr. WHITTEN. May I say that the gentleman may want to go before the Agriculture Committee or before the other committees and get the law changed. All we are doing here is restoring the impairment of a corporation's capital which is depleted in carrying out the purposes of the act. The act is not before us.

Mr. ROBERTS of Kansas. I appreciate the gentleman's comments.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. BEARD).

Mr. BEARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of my colleague from California's motion to recommit.

I was outraged, as I am sure most of my colleagues in this body were, when it was revealed last week that the State Department had worked behind the scenes to prevent declaring Poland's Communist dictatorship in default on its loans that are guaranteed by the Commodity Credit Corporation, even though that regime had failed to meet its obligations to its creditors.

The rules of the Commodity Credit Corporation, as I understand them, require that when a borrower of loans backed by the CCC fails to meet its obligations, the lendor must give a written notice of default for the record before the CCC will pay the missed obligation. But apparently our own State Department has decided to pressure the CCC into not enforcing the rules when it is the Polish Communist government that is in default.

Nothing has so infuriated my constituents than this news that our Government has bailed out the Communist regime in Poland with taxpayer money to the tune of tens of millions of dollars—and apparently intends to continue to do so.

Bailing out the Polish Government is a bailout of the Soviet Union, because the Polish economy, like the entire Eastern European Soviet bloc economy, is a captive of the Soviet Union. By propping up the Polish Communist regime, we are indirectly propping up the failing Soviet economy. And we are doing it at a time when the Soviet Union is engaged in genocide by the use of chemical and biological weapons against innocent people in Laos, Cambodia, and Afghanistan, and is sending increased military forces to Cuba, including the Mig-23, and is supporting directly Communist revolutionary forces in Central America. Yet in the face of worldwide Soviet criminal behavior, this administration asks us to agree to a bailout of a Soviet puppet government with American tax dollars.

I will not agree, Mr. Speaker, and I hope my colleagues in this body will signal their disagreement also by supporting this motion to recommit. Thank you.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 minutes.

May I say to my colleague from Tennessee (Mr. BEARD) and others, I agree with the gentleman's feelings. But I do not want to keep American farmers, 233,000 of them, standing in line for money owed them by CCC and deprive them of money they are entitled to, which the motion to recommit could do.

Let me explain. If the motion to recommit should carry it would go to the other body. Under the rules in the other body they could tie most anything to this and we would further delay the payment to these 233,000 farmers which they are due.

May I say to the gentleman, this is to restore capital impairment and has no connection whatsoever with the loans to Poland. But the motion to recommit could be a vehicle that could pick up a whole lot of barnacles on the other side and these farmers could be out of those payments for weeks.

Mr. BEARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BEARD. I understand what the gentleman says. But apparently he sees no fault then in the recommittal resolution?

Mr. WHITTEN. I see much fault. It could become a vehicle for barnacles to be picked up on the other side of the capital which could cause further delay. Under the rule, if any addition is made over there, we have to go back to the Rules Committee and that could cause a further delay.

Mr. BEARD. I am still not understanding exactly the gentleman's thrust.

Mr. WHITTEN. I am making it as plain as I know how. The gentleman's amendment, though perhaps harmless here, is awfully dangerous in the long run.

Mr. BEARD. In the USDA's justification for this supplemental it is stated that it should be also noted that loan guarantees and direct export credits issued Poland in the last 3 years will also tie up the Corporation's borrowing authority to the extent of any rescheduling of those obligations. Then it goes on in testimony of Secretary Block where the Secretary was asked a question regarding to what extent are Poland's debts involved in this request.

Mr. Block's testimony and statement was:

> Under the guarantee program CCC has made payments of $61 million in fiscal year 1981 and $97 million in fiscal year 1982 through December 31, totaling $158 million.

Yet we are to say to people that we are not using dollars out of this to bail out Poland? I cannot accept that.

Mr. WHITTEN. The gentleman will see that if he accepts this motion to recommit that we would have further delay. May I say we have a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture that this money will not be used in any way in connection with the loans to Poland.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. ALEXANDER), a member of the committee.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this legislation by my committee today to add a supplemental appropriation with which the Commodity Credit Corporation can continue its operation.

The rice farmers of America are facing the same depressed prices as all farmers. However, many are suffering even more because they are unable to participate in the Commodity Credit loan program or benefit from its traditional price support rule because of an unintended loophole in the current law by which only about 30 percent of the rice farmers in Arkansas can participate.

I have introduced a bill which will change this condition and allow all farmers to participate equally. It is H.R. 5399. And I have arranged for a meeting with the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Block, tomorrow in order to try to pursuade the administration to support this bill.

In essense what is happening is that because of low prices farmers have no market for their rice crop. In my State many of the rice farmers are forced to sell that crop in order to be provided enough capital with which to farm for the 1982 crop year.

For those farmers who are excluded from participation in the Commodity Credit Corporation loan program, they are forced to sell their crop far below the low market prices which are available through the program. In effect, they are forced into bankruptcy.

I would urge the committee, the Congress, and the Members who are concerned about fairness and equity in agriculture to support this bill which will eliminate this loophole in the law.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER).

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this urgent supplemental appropriation to enable the Commodity Credit Corporation to continue its vital lending activities.

Mr. Speaker, the economy of rural America is in a shambles. Commodity prices remain at depressed levels due to the lingering effects of the Soviet grain embargo and last year's bumper crops. As the farmer makes his plans to begin operations for this crop year, credit is scarce, and that which is available is extremely expensive. In increasing numbers, our producers have turned to the commodity loan and reserve programs of the CCC, rather than sell their crops at prices which are substantially below their cost of production. This action is required to obtain necessary operating funds for the coming year. The result has been an unprecedented demand upon the limited resources of the CCC. It is estimated that the borrowing authority of the CCC will be exhausted within the next few days, and thus it is vitally important to reimburse the Corporation for its past losses so that its activities can continue uninterrupted in this time of great need.

The resolution which is pending before the House does not raise the ceiling above $20 billion; rather, it reimburses the CCC for losses in 1980, 1981, and the first quarter of 1982. The question of an increase in the borrowing ceiling will be addressed in the context of the consideration of the 1983 agriculture appropriation measure later this year.

I cannot overemphasize the importance of these programs to the survival of the family farm in Nebraska and throughout the United States. The commodity loan program and the reserve program offer the producer an additional element of flexibility in making his marketing decisions. Although the loan levels which were provided in the farm bill which recently passed the House are inadequate to fully protect our producers, the heavy participation in even these modest programs attests to their importance in enabling farmers to weather the current down trend in commodity prices. Passage today of this resolution will permit the CCC to carry out its authorized function in assisting this most productive segment of our economy, and I strongly urge its adoption.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL).

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to House Joint Resolution 389 and in support of the recommital motion.

I see these kinds of programs as more the problem than the solution. I know many very good and well-intentioned individuals here would like to solve the problems the farmers face and attempt to do this by having programs like this. But programs like the Commodity Credit Corporation are really the problem because they cause the misdirection and the malinvestment of capital.

We now have $600 billion worth of guaranteed loans, the principal source of our inflation. The only thing they guarantee is that there will be a misdirection of capital, a malinvestment, and more inflation, overproduction of farm products, and depressed prices.

I am particularly interested, though, in the fact that it is through the Commodity Credit Corporation that the loans to Communist nations will be bailed out, as well as the liabilities of banks in, principally, New York. We know already that last week $71 million through this Corporation was granted to pay some of the interest due.

□ 1430

There is a figure that not too many people have referred to, but last year $158 million from the Commodity Credit Corporation were used to support these loans.

After the war, it was thought to be in our best interest to invest a lot of money in the countries that we wanted to rebuild; the democracies of Europe, and we put into those countries $15 billion. We have already put more than $80 billion into the Communist bloc from the Western nations. So here we are doing the Marshall plan in reverse. We are not helping our friends. We are literally subsidizing our enemies.

I get strong opposition in my district for programs like this. Most of the people feel it is a moral outrage to think that they are required to help banks who have made unwise loans and to also subsidize communism, and they feel that this type of lending is unconscionable.

I also have a personal belief and conviction that it is a mockery of our Constitution. Where is it written in the Constitution that gives us this authority to take from our people and give to our foreign enemies? There is no granting of this authority, and the whole program, in particular the subsidizing of those in Communist nations, is completely wrong and unjustified.

Also, I believe that this is an economic absurdity beyond all reality. Here we are in this country, with an inability for our people to buy houses and to buy cars, and we are, to the tune of billions of dollars, guaranteeing more inflation and bad investments and money going to our enemies. And every time we guarantee a loan like this, we guarantee that there will be more inflation because we are broke, in the literal sense. We have to add any expenditure to our deficit and it ends up being monetized.

Some would say, "Well, what would you do?"

Well, I would default on it. I would not go through with this so-called promise because I think it is an illegal, unconstitutional promise. The choice is not whether you default. The default will occur. You only have one of two choices, and that is: Are you going to default on the American people and give them more inflation and let them pay the penalty? Or are you going to default on the Communist enemies and let them pay the penalty.

I think the only choice that we can accept is that we guarantee that we will not break the backs of the American people with more taxes and more inflation by bailing out the banks who have made these loans unwisely in further subsidizing the Communist nations.

Some would say, "Well, the law of the land says we must guarantee this."

Well, the law of the land is sometimes in error and contradicts the Constitution. Under those conditions we have an obligation, a constitutional and legal and moral obligation to our people. And if we fail on that obligation our people are going to suffer the consequences. To me, the only question is, Who is to accept the penalty of the default, the American taxpayer or the bankers and their Communist cheats?

LET'S LET COMMUNISM GO BANKRUPT

The history of U.S. Government subsidies to our sworn and aggressive enemies in the Kremlin is a long and sad one.

The Soviets could not make MIRV'd missiles until an American company sold them machines to make precision ball bearings. The American taxpayer helped pay for these machines.

U.S. tax dollars also helped the Soviets buy the intricate computer network that controls Moscow's air defenses.

The largest truck plant in the world is on the Kama River in the U.S.S.R. This gigantic facility manufactured many of the trucks and armored vehicles used to invade Afghanistan. The Kama River truck plant was built by an American car company, and U.S. tax dollars paid part of the bill.

In fact, the broad highway used by the Soviet motorized divisions as they roared into Afghanistan was built in the 1960's by the U.S. Corps of Engineers. It cost over $100 million (in current dollars) and the hard-earned tax dollars of American citizens helped pay for it.

Finally, the U.S. grain shipments which help the unproductive Soviet system survive from year to year have been subsidized until recently by American tax dollars, which have been used to pay half the shipping costs.

The magnitude of the Western commitment to bolstering the Communist world cannot easily be exaggerated. At the peak of the Marshall plan the United States had extended about $15 billion in cheap loans to the democracies of Western Europe. But even that massive sum is dwarfed by comparison with the line of credit which the West has extended to Communist regimes: An incredible $80 billion at present. Let us make no mistake, this enormous line of credit constitutes Western aid to the most oppressive, inhumane, and unproductive political system ever known to mankind. Without this line of credit, communism would collapse from within of its own weight.

The Polish regime alone presently has $27 billion in loans from the West, and last year it defaulted on a total of $1.8 billion in repayments. Poland is, in fact, already in default, already bankrupt, though there has been no official declaration of the fact. But Poland is not unique among Communist states: Romania, another big borrower, is on the brink of bankruptcy; Bulgaria and East Germany are not far behind. It is always assumed that the Soviet Union itself would pay off the debts of its satellites rather than let them default, but Russia itself is a big borrower: It already owes Western banks over $19 billion. All of this credit, and any additional loans, not only perpetuate a system that oppresses millions, and not only subsidize the Soviet war machine which threatens our own security, but they also are simply bad risks. Western banks should not be absolved of the consequences of foolhardy lending policies.

At present, our Government is pursuing the worst possible strategy. We are paying off the Polish loans without declaring default, and thereby, we leave open the door for more loan guarantees and credits, which will ultimately be paid for by American taxpayers. Without a declaration of default, Poland remains a candidate for membership in the International Monetary Fund, a whole new source of U.S. tax dollars.

Some have argued that a subtle form of pressure can be brought to bear on the Communist regime in Poland by not declaring default. By simply encouraging Poland to eventually repay, by holding out the prospect of more loans, and even by encouraging their membership in the IMF, it is argued that the discipline of Western banking will help moderate the behavior of the Communist regimes in Warsaw and Moscow. But surely, events in Poland have shown otherwise. Only the governments of the West, in their excessive concern with foolish bankers, have modified their behavior. It is we in the West who find that our governments are held hostage by the threat of default. The bankers hold sway only over our governments, they have not made General Jaruzelski any less a tyrant.

It is quite true that the Soviet Union might pay off the debts of its Eastern European satellites rather that see the credit rating of the whole Communist world threatened. I say emphatically: now is the time to find out. Let us extend no more guarantees and credits to enable Poland to pay off its old debts. Let us send no more good money after the bad. But present U.S. Government policies will prevent the issue from ever coming to a head. The Communists are being quietly relieved of their burden, the Commodity Credit Corporation and the U.S Treasury are quietly shifting this debt onto the shoulders of the American taxpayers, and the big banks are silently nodding in approval.

The recent $71 million U.S. Government payment on the overdue Polish debt caught the headlines, but in 1981 the Commodity Credit Corporation quietly paid $158 million to American banks for delinquent Polish loans. There was no declaration of default, there was no announcement that the Government of Poland was bankrupt. The U.S. Government quietly picked up the tab left behind by the Polish regime, and the bureaucrats and the bankers who make a living off these deals just hoped that business would go on as usual.

Of course, the bankers do not care—so long as business goes on and commissions can be made from handling the loans, they can always count on Uncle Sam to pick up the bill. And of course, the bureaucrats do not care—its not their money which is used to pay for the bad loans. No, the bureaucrats and the bankers prosper, it is the American taxpayer who is left to pick up the tab.

Has this not gone on long enough? Is it not it time we in the Congress remembered that our responsibility is to the people who pay the bills, not the bankers and bureaucrats, little less the regime in Poland? Is it not it time we paused to consider just how much Communist debt we will foist onto the shoulders of our overburdened taxpayers before we declare once and for all, enough is enough?

All told, the amount of loan guarantees and credits which our Government has granted for the benefit of foreign countries comes to a staggering $58 billion. In my opinion, it is absolutely immoral, unconstitutional, and uneconomical for the Federal Government to extend credits or loan guarantees for the benefit of foreign countries.

Certainly, I have as much sympathy as anyone for the plight of the Polish people, it is horrible to see them suffer, critically short of all life's necessities, and deprived of their liberty and dignity. But we must recognize that until they cast off this system which has enslaved them, freedom, dignity, and prosperity will elude them. For our Government to continue extending loan guarantees and credits to Communist tyrants is nothing short of direct complicity in their evil deeds. It is time to stop propping up communism and the Soviet war machine which threatens our own security.

Let us stand firm at this crucial juncture and declare that no new credits or loan guarantees from the U.S. Government will aid the completion of the Yamal natural gas pipeline in the U.S.S.R. Let us insure that the advanced American technology needed to complete this project is never made available. Let us also immediately declare Poland in default, and see to it that our Government never again provides a subsidy, or a loan guarantee, or a credit, for tyranny.

Finally, at a time when small businesses in America cannot secure loans at reasonable rates, and when most Americans cannot afford the cost of borrowing to buy a car or a home, how can we, in good conscience, redirect investment funds abroad, to any country? We cannot justify, either morally, economically, or constitutionally, providing loan guarantees or credits for the benefit of any foreign country, company, or individual.

Therefore, I urge the support of this House for a resolution I will soon introduce to end immediately the practice of granting loan guarantees or direct credits by the U.S. Government for the benefit of foreign countries. Those who choose to invest in Communist countries should do so solely at their own initiative, and at their own risk.

I also believe that the Congress should have to specifically authorize, by recorded vote, every expenditure of tax dollars required by the terms of past loan guarantees and credits to foreign countries. It is time we assumed our full responsibilities as guardians of the public treasury, the American people have a right to expect nothing less.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. LEWIS).

Mr. LEWIS. I thank my colleague for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, first, it is my intention to speak for the 3 minutes to address myself to some of the farm questions that have been raised. At the time of placing a motion to recommit, I would hope to address the issue that is involved here today.

First, let me apologize to my distinguished chairman and my ranking minority Member for taking the time of the House at a moment like this. I first would like the Members to know that I am on the Subcommittee on Agriculture almost entirely because agriculture is California's No. 1 industry. I am on the Farm Subcommittee because agriculture is the No. 1 industry in my own district. It is critical to my people that programs like this go forward, go forward with credibility, and are handled by the Department in a fashion that assures their future success.

Now, having said that, I think it is important to point to the fact that the chairman has done a magnificent job with this measure. I frankly doubt that there is a Member in the House who would question our chairman's ability to move this bill expeditiously to the Senate, take care of whatever problems might arise, and make sure it gets to the President's desk before we recess. I have been totally astonished at his capability in handling very important measures much more complicated than this one.

Having said that, my amendment has been described as symbolic. And indeed it is symbolic in this sense: It is the only amendment that could have been germane to this very tightly constructed bill, which provides the flow of $5 billion of new credit availability to the CCC. But all of us know that money is fungible. We recognize that, while this is restricted in its use, other moneys within the flow of the CCC obviously will have pressure relieved, and it is that money which will go to the benefit of Poland. It is very, very important that by our actions today we do not send a signal out there that would suggest that we approve of this misuse by the Department of the Commodity Credit Corporation. Indeed, if we do not raise our voices, then somewhere down the line we may have participated in undermining that very viable program.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. PEYSER).

Mr. PEYSER. I thank the chairman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I am speaking on one phase of the Commodity Credit Corporation bill. I support the concept and the idea of the Commodity Credit Corporation, and I support the needs that they have today for the $5 billion. The question I am raising—and I would have raised on an amendment if it had been possible—is the fact that most Members in this House, as I did, assumed that when loans were made for commodities to the agricultural community that interest would be paid on these loans because the Commodity Credit Corporation states that interest must be paid at the current rate. In fact, what happens is that if a crop or a commodity, be it dairy or any other product that comes under this, is forfeited, then the practice now is that no interest would be paid. The Commodity Credit Corporation clearly shows in its statement to the Appropriations Committee that they lost in 1981 $1,578,000,000 in unpaid interest because the Commodity Credit Corporation must pay interest to this money to the Treasury Department from which they borrowed. So they end up in a situation that no user of the money is paying interest in this particular factor.

Now, you have to realize that we are talking about appropriating more money today than the Department of Energy gets, the entire Department of Energy, the Justice Department, more money for the B-1 bomber, the MX missile, military construction, any of these items I am mentioning, all of them get less money than we are appropriating today for the Commodity Credit Corporation. This gets into community development block grants, urban development, rural development programs, Economic Development Administration, and an endless list.

It seems to me that, when an agriculture commodity is placed in loan, if that loan is forfeited, at least 9-percent interest should be paid at the end of the period. And I use 9 percent because that is the amount of money that is paid by a guaranteed student loan. A student in college must pay that 9 percent.

Now, I would still leave the Secretary of Agriculture the right of discretion of charging the additional what today would be 5 percent, bringing it up to the 14-percent level.

Now, that is the situation that we have in front of us. We have the Commodity Credit lending money out, as against when they take crops in, and at the end of a period, if there is a forfeiture, we keep the crops, which is a loss to us at that point, and no interest is paid on the loan whatsoever.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. REUSS).

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Mississippi for yielding, and I rise in strong support of his resolution and in strong opposition to the proposed Republican motion to recommit.

That motion in effect says that we here on the House floor this afternoon should declare the Polish loan in default. If we do that, I can tell you what will happen tomorrow. American bankers will be forced, in order to protect themselves, to replevin, to get their hands on every Polish asset they can find.

Now, it is said in favor of the motion to recommit that it shows that the recommitters are tough on communism. Well, I suggest that it shows just the opposite. The people it will be tough on will be the children of Poland and the mothers and fathers this winter who are not going to get enough food if this recommittal motion is passed, or enough medicine or enough else of the needs of life, and the disgusting Communist government of Poland, should the Lewis motion prevail, would then have a marvelous out. They could say that the miseries of Poland are the work of the American Congress and not of the Soviet and the Polish Governments.

Second, we have an alliance in Europe, a mighty alliance, that we have preserved for 30 years. I can think of nothing better calculated to fracture that alliance than to sneak around now and seem to give American banks a chance to get ahead of their German and their Italian and their French and their Dutch and their British colleague banks in these large and disastrous loans to Poland.

If we try to jump the gun, to get in ahead of other creditors, what would such an action do to the willingness of the German public to support the strengthening of NATO that we rightly ask for? Who can say what traps we may be setting ourselves a few years hence when the Germans may find themselves in a similar position, say, with respect to American bank loans, to, let us say, Brazil. The shoe may then well be on the other foot.

Third, while I do not know much about the Commodity Credit Corporation, I know a little about history. I can remember that 52 years ago the world was plunged into a depression, and the Hitler movement got a great start, and World War II had its genesis, in the failure of the Credit Anstalt, the biggest bank in Vienna. The failure spread, and helped lead to the world depression.

There are at least two German banks, who, if default is declared, will be in mortal trouble. Anybody who thinks we should play fast and loose with the future of the world by declaring a default this afternoon just has not read history.

So I suggest that if you want to give communism a few secret cards, and if you want to show your meanness of spirit to the Polish people, if you want to tell the Atlantic Alliance that we are attempting a cheap-shot special advantage over our tried and true allies, and, finally, if you want to take the risk of precipitating a world crisis, just vote "aye" on the motion to recommit. I hope it will be overwhelmingly defeated.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to my good friend, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. HAGEDORN).

Mr. HAGEDORN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I am torn between two concerns. I think, first of all, that there is a very definite and immediate need that Commodity Credit Corporation receive the additional $5 billion in order that it can meet the urgent demand that farmers are facing on that important source of financing; and, on the other hand, I am concerned about denying our President flexibility in the conduct of foreign policy, which I think we are doing, but at the same time it appears to be a contradiction because, at best, we are circumventing what the law clearly says, or else we are outright breaking the law. I think that that is a law that we have passed in this institution in which CCC is supposed to function under, and it seems to me that it leaves those of us who have examined that very closely little opportunity other than to vote for the recommittal motion and, hopefully, that we can bring this situation to a resolution.

I do not think that there is any doubt that Poland is bankrupt, however much longer we string it along with additional loans and in the conduct of foreign policy. It appears that ultimately the American taxpayers will be the real losers, and that to aid and abet the deteriorating situation any longer that exists there is not in our national interest.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

□ 1445

Mr. Speaker, this is a very difficult issue for me. I am not amoured by the CCC. I am in accord with what the gentleman from New York (Mr. PEYSER) said. However, it is needed and I know what my chairman has been telling me about the predicament of the farmers in this country and now added to this whole thing I have this problem of my good friend from California (Mr. LEWIS), whom I have the highest regard for.

I had offered him the motion to recommit, if the chairman will recall, when he was going to object to the unanimous consent to take this bill up, so we made this accommodation.

So that is the predicament that I find myself in here.

Let me ask the chairman, has the gentleman read the letter from the State Department as yet?

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTEN. Could I say to my colleague that we all get in predicaments from time to time. I appreciate his. I have read the letter and I do have an assurance from the other side that if we send them a clean bill they will act on it this afternoon. The Secretary says he needs this money today.

Mr. CONTE. I will submit those two letters.

Mr. WHITTEN. If the gentleman will continue to yield, I would like to say to my friend from California that he does not owe me any apology. It is a pleasure to work with him. Nobody could work harder for his district. When a man differs with me, I presume he does what he thinks is right. It suits me whatever he may do. I feel that way toward him.

I do feel when he makes a speech that he is opposed to, his folks will believe him. I do not think he wants to run the risk of having things tied up.

Mr. CONTE. I thank the gentleman for that short statement.

Finishing out what I said, I always tell a new Member who comes in here that one of the things that I feel is most important in life here in the Congress, this body that I love so much, is one's word, and once one gives one's word, you stick by your word, and sometimes you can get caught in a very embarrassing position. I am in that position today. The gentleman from California (Mr. LEWIS) will have the motion to recommit but I will oppose it. I must inform my colleagues, we have a letter from the Secretary of State.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the letter be placed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Allow me to mention also that even though I oppose the motion to recommit this bill, I want the people of Poland to know that our hearts go out to them in their current crises. We have as a nation of caring, supporting Americans, always provided a helping hand to needy nations like Poland and will continue to care for oppressed peoples everywhere. Our prayers and hopes for a peaceful and freedom-based resolution of Poland's crises go out to the Polish people.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, this is what the letter says:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, D.C., February 8, 1982.

HON. JAMIE WHITTEN,
Chairman, Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am writing to convey the concerns of the State Department regarding possible legislation, specifically with reference to Poland's debts, that could adversely affect our policy of putting maximum Western pressure on the Polish and Soviet governments to end repression in Poland. The Department understands that language may be offered to the supplemental appropriations bill (H.J. Res. 389) for the Commodity Credit Corporation (CCC), which could have the effect of requiring American banks to declare formal defaults against the government of Poland.

As you know, we and our allies have implemented common measures against Poland, and are considering others. The U.S. has taken additional unilateral measures against Poland and the Soviet Union; our allies have taken or will take measures which parallel and support ours.

In this context, our assessment is that, for the present, the best way of keeping maximum pressure on the Polish government—and indirectly on the Soviets—is to insist it service its debt to the West. Our allies are firmly in accord with this assessment; among the measures taken jointly is to suspend consideration of negotiations on a 1982 debt rescheduling. This allows Western creditors to pursue the collection of these debts. Clearly, declaring an official default remains an option that can be used if circumstances warrant. However, our assessment is that declaration of default might be used by the Polish government to relieve itself of its obligation to make repayments. In addition, it would be a sanction difficult to reverse if the Polish situation improved. Our allies have expressed strong concern about the impact of a formal default; thus a unilateral and/or uncoordinated default would also undermine our efforts to work with our allies in maintaining pressure against the Polish and Soviet governments. Actions which risk an unplanned and unmanaged default run counter to this strategy.

The Administration decision that CCC should honor its obligations toward U.S. banks which have payments coming due under CCC guaranteed credits to Poland in a fashion similar to 1981 is fully consistent with this policy. As in 1981 CCC has offered to purchase the rights to payments owed the banks, as the payments come due. This preserves default as an option, rather than threatening to foreclose it. It does not bail out the banks, but rather allows the CCC to honor legal U.S. Government obligations to the banks in a way supportive of present policy. It in no way frees the Poles from their responsibilities; their obligations are owed to the U.S. Government instead of the banks, and we will do everything possible to collect. The CCC action does not prevent the banks from declaring a default; they are owed on unguaranteed credits to Poland and could declare default at any time they wish; it does avoid forcing them to declare default. It does not represent a de facto rescheduling as maturities and terms remain the same.

The President has indicated on recent occasions that if the situation in Poland continues to deteriorate then other measures will be considered. Default remains an option open to us in this context.

Because there has been a great deal of exaggerated reporting on this issue, the Department of State would prefer active consultations or hearings with concerned Members of Congress before any legislative action is undertaken which could produce results harmful to our overall interests.

With cordial regards,

Sincerely,

POWELL A. MOORE,
Assistant Secretary for Congressional Relations.

Mr. Speaker, this is from the State Department and I concur, it is a very difficult decision, but I think that it is the better part of wisdom that the House of Representatives today defeat the motion to recommit.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The one problem I am having here is that I now have copies of both of these letters. I have looked at them and I thank the gentleman for reading the one from the State Department. It does help clarify their position. It says up top, the gentleman read this—

The Department understands that language may be offered to the supplemental appropriations bill for the Commodity Credit Corporation which could have the effect of requiring American banks to declare formal defaults against the Government of Poland.

That does not seem to jell with the letter that we have from the Department of Agriculture which indicates that there is no money from the Commodity Credit Corporation going into the Polish debt situation.

I think we have got two different opinions from the administration here that seem in direct conflict with each other.

Which Department are we to believe?

Mr. CONTE. I do not have the Department of Agriculture letter. If I may, I will be glad to look at it and I will ask unanimous consent that that letter be made part of the RECORD along with the letter from the State Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONTE. The letter says here:

Recent publicity has associated the question of CCC losses with issues related to Polish export credit.

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman will yield further, the operative paragraph is on the next page.

Mr. CONTE [reading]:

It should be clearly understood that no realized losses have been incurred by the Commodity Credit Corporation with respect to the making or guaranteeing of export credit to Poland. Therefore, none of the $5 billion provided in House Joint Resolution 389 is needed for such a purpose.

Does that clarify it?

Mr. WALKER. The operative paragraph though is on the next page. It says:

At present, all of the Polish debt for credit extended by the Commodity Credit Corporation or acquired by the Corporation under its guarantee programs are being maintained as accounts receivable. There are no current losses resulting from this debt.

That would seem to be in conflict with what the State Department is telling us, that by adopting the amendment proposed by the gentleman from California that we will somehow be declaring formal default.

What I am saying is the interpretation of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee earlier was that the Department of Agriculture has said that there is no liability on the part of the CCC and now the State Department tells us if we pass this amendment we are going to declare formal default.

Mr. CONTE. I think where the confusion comes in is that what the State Department is saying is that they are not paying the debt of Poland, they are paying to the banks the loans that they made to the American farmer, and I see my good friend who is an expert on this, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. REUSS) agrees with me.

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. REUSS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I am not an expert on this cycle pathology of the Reagan administration and I do not know which Department is not telling the truth; but I think the gentleman from Massachusetts stated it exactly.

This motion to recommit would be a mistake. Maybe the Secretary of Agriculture is in error. If so, that makes doubly important what the State Department has to say.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. MYERS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I urge the Members not to support this motion to recommit. I do not think anybody here is in sympathy with what is going on in Poland. We certainly are not in sympathy with what is going on there. We do not want to aid and abet Russia or anyone who is doing this. If we do this we are really muddying the water. We are involving ourselves in a diplomacy which we know very little about. We ought to leave that to the professionals, if there are any, and second, we would be hurting the American farmers because they are the ones with their backs to the wall, and what the chairman has said and everyone else, this would not only slow down this very badly needed money, but it would also send a bad signal to the rest of the world, again the U.S. word is not good. Farmers have enough problems.

Someone mentioned a moment ago not to involve agriculture with foreign diplomacy. That is exactly what we would be doing by voting for the motion to recommit. For our farmers' sake and for what is happening over there, do not vote for the motion to recommit. It is well intended, I know, but it is misguided.

Mr. CONTE. I want to clarify this letter. I think this letter from Agriculture is absolutely consistent with the letter from the Department of State. On page 2, it says:

> With respect to the guaranteed credits, CCC made payments to the banks and assumed the accounts receivable for those rescheduled 1981 repayments.

That is exactly what the State Department said.

The letter follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D.C., February 5, 1982.

Hon. JAMIE L. WHITTEN,
Chairman, Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Yesterday, the House Appropriations Committee approved House Joint Resolution 389, making urgent appropriations to restore the net realized losses of the Commodity Credit Corporation (CCC). This action by the Committee was in response to the President's recent request. Approval of this resolution will help to assure that the Commodity Credit Corporation will have sufficient resources to carry out programs mandated by current law including the Agriculture and Food Act of 1981.

We appreciate the expeditious action of the Congress and especially of the House Appropriations Committee in dealing with this matter. It is truly an urgent situation. Unanticipated high levels of losses have endangered the continued operation of our farm programs at a time when farmers are particularly vulnerable and especially in need of these programs. We need final approval of this proposal by Tuesday, February 9, 1982.

As this resolution moves the rest of the way through the Congress, it is important that everyone have the clearest possible understanding of what it does. This resolution would restore the previously unreimbursed realized losses of the Corporation resulting primarily from programs which were operated during crop years 1980 and 1981. These losses total approximately $5 billion. They result primarily from costs associated with CCC price support inventories (such as the dairy program), disaster and deficiency payments to producers, emergency feed payment programs, and the expenses incurred in maintaining storage for the grain reserve. Under law, the Commodity Credit Corporation finances these operations initially by borrowing funds from the Treasury. These Treasury loans are repaid with interest when the necessary funds are appropriated by the Congress. House Joint Resolution 389 restores these losses, enables CCC to repay this debt to the Treasury, and thus helps to restore CCC's line of credit with the Treasury within the $20 billion overall limit prescribed by law.

Recent publicity has associated the question of CCC losses with issues related to Polish export credit. It should be clearly understood that no realized losses have been incurred by the Commodity Credit Corporation with respect to the making or guaranteeing of export credit to Poland. Therefore, none of the $5 billion provided in House Joint Resolution 389 is needed for such a purpose. At present, Poland owes $540 million to the United States Government in repayment of direct export credits which were extended during 1978-1980 and $1 billion to U.S. exporters and assignees for credit guaranteed during the period 1979-1981. Last summer decisions were made to permit rescheduling of $217 million in direct credit and $143 million in guaranteed credit for which payments were due in 1981. These actions were, of course, taken prior to the current crisis. With respect to the guaranteed credit, CCC made payment to the banks and assumed the account receivable for those rescheduled 1981 repayments. Recently further decisions were made with respect to payments by CCC on an additional $71 million of guaranteed credit for which repayment was due in January 1982. These decisions were, of course, made in accordance with existing law and on the basis of Administration policy with respect to Poland.

At present, all of the Polish debt for credit extended by the Commodity Credit Corporation or acquired by the Corporation under its guarantee programs are being maintained as accounts receivable. There are no current losses resulting from this debt.

We hope this information will be helpful to you. Again, we appreciate your quick action in dealing with this matter and we remain available to provide any information or assistance you may need.

Sincerely,

JOHN R. BLOCK,
Secretary.

Mr. BEARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BEARD. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would like to say, in response to my colleague from Indiana (Mr. MYERS), we are not experts.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. GLICKMAN).

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to first of all indicate my support for this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the Appropriations Committee for acting expeditiously to insure continued, adequate funding for the Commodity Credit Corporation. The CCC is the very foundation of the Nation's farm support system. It also facilitates financing for our vital agricultural exports. With less than 4 percent of its $20 billion of authority remaining, the seriousness of rapid action on this bill can not be underestimated.

There is another issue relating to CCC that I hope the committee will take up when its consideration of the routine fiscal year 1982 supplemental appropriation and the fiscal year 1983 appropriation come up; that is, making an appropriation for the agricultural export credit revolving fund. The fund would make available short-term credit to finance sales of U.S. agricultural commodities to develop export markets or to expand existing ones. It would insure that the levels of our farm exports do not diminish and will, hopefully, expand them. Over the years, sales of agricultural products have consistently helped offset our huge imbalance of trade caused by oil imports. Other agricultural exporting nations are becoming increasingly competitive through offering generous credit terms to their buyers. This practice threatens our trade position.

The fund would provide commercial rate loans financed through the CCC. Principal and interest payments from loans made would be returned to the fund for future loans. The authorizing legislation includes responsible oversight of the fund in that the Appropriations Committee must determine annually the amount of loans to be made.

Once again, I urge rapid passage of the CCC emergency appropriation and hope that the Appropriations Committee sees fit to make funding available for the revolving fund during its regular appropriations process.

I realize that funding that revolving credit fund will be required, and I realize this is not the appropriate vehicle for doing that. But this revolving credit fund may be one of the few creative ways that we can compete with the European Economic Community, the Argentines, the Canadians, and others who sell grain all over the world, and I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether his committee is going to explore, when either another supplemental come up, or when the full appropriations come up, some sort of funding for a revolving export credit fund.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLICKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTEN. May I say to the gentleman we have just gotten started on our hearings on the fiscal year 1983 bill and any item that he calls to our attention or anything that the budget does will certainly have our attention. I have not studied the farm bill to the same degree that the gentleman has, but it becomes our duty to do so this year and we will do it.

We have a lot of fine people on our committee and sometimes they are independent.

Mr. GLICKMAN. I thank the chairman. I would hope that both the chairman and the ranking member would realize that funding the revolving export credit fund may be one of the few creative thngs we can do to actually enhance our farm exports.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. ALBOSTA).

Mr. ALBOSTA. Mr. Speaker, I think I understand as well as anybody here what is going on. I would hope that the gentleman from California would choose not to offer his motion to recommit.

Let me state that I would think that most of my friends over on the other side that have farmers in their districts would not want to see those farmers blaming them for those lineups when there is not any money and they are all going over to the ASC office trying to overcome what has happened by this administration involving foreign policy and agricultural commodity sales.

We would not need this supplemental appropriation today if this administration had not sent out all these signals that they are about to put some kind of embargo on agricultural commodities forcing these prices down.

□ 1500

Farmers would be selling through the normal channels, and all this money is going to do is try to create some orderly marketing out there in the farming communities so that we can get by for this short period of time until the administration sees the light and quits sending out the wrong signals and agricultural commodities will come back up. They can then pay off their loans and pay the interest on it also.

I know that my good friend, the gentleman from New York, made the statement that there was a billion some dollars involved in losses of money to the U.S. taxpayers through the Commodity Credit Corporation. That may very well be so; but I believe that money is not lost through those loans to farmers for commodities that we are exporting to other nations. It is probably lost through those deals that are made directly with surplus commodities that the Commodity Corporation has on its hands and other areas.

So I say to you on the other side, particularly, I would hope that you would not support this motion to recommit and that you would support House Joint Resolution 38, because if you do not do that, you are going to get the blame and I am sure you know the politics of it, those farmers are certainly going to find themselves without money. I know that they are going to be looking back at this Congress to find out who it was that stopped this particular piece of legislation.

I want to also say those farmers in my area that are borrowing any money from the Commodity Credit Corporation now are paying 14-percent interest. I do not think they see that as any giveaway. It is probably a percentage point better than they could do at one of the loaning agencies, such as PCA or the local bank. More than 50 percent of the business that is being done at the Federal Land Bank today is refinancing farms so that they can pay their bank loans off.

I think all of us have to recognize here today that there is a problem out there and we cannot solve it until we take some action here.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California (Mr. PATTERSON).

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

I am in support of the bill and am opposed to the motion to recommit.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the resolution and against recommital. I strongly support the Commodity Credit Corporation and the vital role it plays in agriculture, serving the farmer and the consumer.

First, Mr. Speaker, this resolution is good farm policy, and good farm policy, is good consumer policy. The CCC is out of money—unless we enact this legislation, the Government cannot carry out its legal responsibilities to farmers and, ultimately, to consumers. Unprecedented loan demand along with deficiency payments have reduced borrowing authority available to CCC and the Corporation's borrowing authority will soon be exhausted. Farm programs will come to an abrupt halt if this resolution is not adopted immediately.

We should not attach controversial provisions to a supplemental appropriations bill vital to American agriculture, because we should not risk slowing the bill's progress or allowing it to become a repository for amendments in the other body. This is emergency legislation as the chairman has well documented. So, regardless of the foreign policy statements with which some Members would seek to encumber this bill, let us remember that it is farm legislation and it is American farmers who will suffer if we fail to pass it.

Second, Mr. Speaker, I believe that this bill is good foreign policy. I can think of no more welcome present that we could give the military rulers of Poland than to declare them free of all legal obligations to repay their agricultural borrowing. I don't want to see Poland declared to be in default. I want to see Poland pay off its debts. It surely hurts the Polish military government more to continue to press for payment.

Further, under the cross-default clauses of many Polish loans, declaring Poland in default of its loans will produce disastrous results for Western banks, particularly in West Germany. The CCC is chartered to prevent U.S. bank losses in situations such at this. Let us remember, too, that any losses could lead to even higher domestic interest rates. Banks were encouraged by the administration to loan to Poland to support the liberalizations and beginning of a free-market economy and it is certainly not appropriate now to determine that the CCC should not act to protect them.

I urge my colleagues to oppose recommittal and to vote for this urgent and needed legislation.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, again I repeat, I hope our friends can realize that this is not the best time or place to declare their independence or to fool around with this.

We do have an agreement on the other side that we send them a clean bill. I think the record will clearly show the feelings of all the Members who have spoken.

I respectfully urge our friends to think twice before they insist on adding this risk to what appears to be a certain action if we go ahead.

● Mr. WAMPLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Joint Resolution 389, urgent Commodity Credit Corporation supplemental appropriation. This resolution provides for a supplemental appropriation in fiscal year

1982 of $5 billion for reimbursement of net realized CCC losses.

Due to record 1981 crops and low market prices, there has been unexpectedly high demand for price support loans—both conventional and farmer-held reserve loans. Additionally, low commodity prices have already triggered deficiency payments for wheat and barley, with rice and cotton, deficiency payments to be made in early February. Without this supplemental appropriation, Commodity Credit Corporation funds will be depleted and loan and payment operations will have to be suspended. This suspension would be a catastrophe in a period when farmers are suffering from a severe cash-flow problem.

One issue which I feel should be raised at this time, however, relates to recent reports of the Commodity Credit Corporation's role in indirectly providing financial assistance to Poland. Indications are that based on a recommendation from the State Department, the Commodity Credit Corporation has been making payments to banks as guarantor on certain loans that certain banks have been unable to collect on loans to Poland. The Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act requires that only after written notice of default from creditors should the CCC make payments on guaranteed loans. I question the legality of such payments to banks, based on such reports as the editorial appearing in the Wall Street Journal today. I also have grave concerns about the State Department making policy decisions that impact on USDA operations and policies.

This Polish issue demands congressional attention, but I do not believe that the supplemental appropriation should be held up to the detriment of the American farmer. I urge my colleagues to support this resolution. The editorial follows:

DE-FAULTY LOGIC ON POLAND

The Reagan administration is resorting to twisted logic to defend its financial bailout of Poland's military dictators. Assistant Treasury Secretary Marc Leland said last Friday that declaring Poland in default of its loans would give its leaders an excuse to ignore its financial obligations. "The President has decided that maximum pressure can be put on Poland by insisting on repayment rather than declaring a default now," Mr. Leland said.

"Maximum pressure," we take it, consists for example of having U.S. taxpayers foot the bill for Poland's loans under the Agriculture Department's Commodity Credit Corp. The administration plans to pay $71 million to U.S. banks for Polish CCC loans that are already overdue. The U.S. government last year paid U.S. banks $158 million in guarantees on rescheduled Polish debt. Poland still has over $1.6 billion in outstanding CCC loans, some $300 million of which is due this year.

It now turns out that the administration's CCC decision is also of doubtful legality. The Capital Legal Foundation has developed a brief that the decision to repay the loans without a formal declaration of default violates the CCC's own rules and regulations. The rule required banks to first give notice of nonpayment, which might trigger the cross-default provisions in other loan agreements, and then for the government to confirm the finding before any government payment.

These rules were not followed in the case of Poland. Nor did the administration follow the established procedures for changing the rules, which provide that it must either publish the changes in the Federal Register and allow time for public comment, or specifically declare an emergency and explain why. The CCC of course defends its interpretation of the law, but the banks themselves are pondering the legality of the unorthodox arrangement, as well as certain CCC changes in interest provisions, before deciding whether to accept the money. They have until Feb. 13 to decide.

Contrary to putting "maximum pressure" on the dictators in Warsaw and Moscow, the administration's actions permit the Communist bloc to escape—for at least a time—the harsh financial consequences of Poland's de facto default. A declaration of default would put intense financial and political pressure on the Communist bloc. Polish trade would probably come to a standstill, at least until a strict repayment plan was agreed on. Bankers would be forced to look more skeptically at all East bloc loans, depriving the Soviet economy, and indirectly its military machine, of the kind of infusion of credit it has enjoyed the last decade.

While the Reagan administration is reluctant to take such a strong step, several members of Congress are not. Senator Patrick Moynihan yesterday introduced a bill to declare Poland in default of all of its loan obligations to the U.S. Today Sen. Moynihan and Rep. Jerry Lewis plan to introduce floor amendments to a $5 billion supplemental appropriation for the CCC requiring the agency to abide by its own rules and to receive default notices before any payments are made on Poland's debt.

Thus Congress will have its chance to be heard. Perhaps it will have the courage of Mr. Reagan's convictions.●

● Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Speaker, in its present form I must oppose House Joint Resolution 389, the Commodity Credit Corporation supplemental appropriation, primarily because of the recent Agriculture Department decision to cover the debt installment owed by Poland to U.S. banks. Therefore, I will vote for the motion to recommit, and if that fails, I will vote against the resolution.

There is no good reason why the U.S. Government should take the pressure off the martial law regime in Poland by altering the normal loan guarantee requirements of the Commodity Credit Corporation. When Poland's debt installment of $70 million to U.S. banks came due recently and Poland could not pay, the banks to whom the debt was owed should have, as the CCC requires, aggressively sought payment from Poland. Instead, the Agriculture Department paid the bill.

The administration has expressed its shock and dismay at the December military coup in Poland. It has, rightly condemned the Polish Government's "war against its own people." After the imposition of martial law in Poland, the U.S. Government invoked sanctions against the military junta and against the Soviet overlords of Poland.

We are working assiduously to obtain the support of our friends and allies. To give the military regime in Poland special lenient treatment flies in the face of the program of sanctions.

I cannot support this contradictory policy. It gives conflicting signals to the countries of the West, to the generals in Warsaw, and to the Communist tyrants in Moscow.

This administration overall has done a good job of leading the free world, but it has been plagued by contradictory decisions especially relating to the Soviet Union and now to Poland with the shortsightedness of the Agriculture Department.●

● Mrs. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to vote against passage of House Joint Resolution 389, titled "Urgent Commodity Credit Corporation Supplemental Appropriation." It is my understanding that among its losses for the past 2 years, the CCC has reported more than $2.5 billion in unpaid interest on loans. This is largely due to the fact that many of those who default on loans are not required to pay interest.

It is my belief that the CCC ought to more actively seek payment of interest on such loans. In opposing this bill, it is my hope that it will be reported back with language to this effect.●

● Mr. EVANS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, agricultural producers in this country are currently facing a cost-price squeeze on farm commodities that is having a serious adverse effect on farm income. It commands our attention as we seek out ways to alleviate the plight of these individuals and the farm sector as a whole. It is vital that the sagging farm economy be bolstered in every way possible consistent with sound agricultural and economic policy. Expanded exports of agricultural commodities offer the greatest promise of providing upward pressure on farm prices. With this goal I am introducing legislation aimed at encouraging the expanded use of international barter by both the Commodities Credit Corporation (CCC) and the private sector in cooperation with the CCC.

One goal of this legislation is to expand exports of agricultural products while receiving in return strategic materials and petroleum products that are needed by this country for our national stockpiles. While the CCC used similar authority extensively in the 1960's in acquiring strategic materials under the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954, the use of barter came to an end during the 1970's as Government inventories of grains dwindled. With surpluses now back in abundance, this legislation is designed to encourage exploration of new foreign markets for agricultural products in areas where strategic materials or petroleum products exist—traditionally in major parts of Africa and Asia. While there are obvious needs for additional foodstuffs in a large number of these countries, a lack of currency or credit to purchase agricultural commodities has often been detrimental to trade.

This legislation will allow a U.S. exporter of agricultural commodities to obtain a letter of commitment from the CCC to accept an agreed-upon quantity of a needed material of specified quality and of a specified price when delivered to port in the United States. This firm commitment by the CCC gives the exporter flexibility to search out markets which otherwise might not be served. The CCC, upon receipt of the foreign materials, is then authorized to sell the acquired materials to our national stockpiles.

Another goal of this legislation is to encourage and expedite use of barter by commercial interests here and abroad when such barter will expand our grain export markets. Barter agreements have always been much more difficult to arrange than ordinary export contracts because they involve price uncertainties in two commodities rather than one. This legislation permits the CCC to expedite and simplify the process of arriving at barter agreements by serving as a clearinghouse for commercial offers to buy a variety of materials produced overseas and needed in this country, and by insuring that these offers are made known on a continuing basis to commercial grain export companies. The ready availability and exchange of such information should substantially increase interest in pursuing barter contracts.

This bill encourages an alternative selling arrangement for U.S. agricultural products, while at the same time increasing supplies of materials in short supply in this country.

At a time when we need all possible tools to expand our agricultural exports, this bill would provide one such tool, and I offer it for consideration by my colleagues.●

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time and I move the previous question on the joint resolution to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT OFFERED BY MR. LEWIS

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the joint resolution?

Mr. LEWIS. I am opposed to the joint resolution, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LEWIS moves to recommit the resolution (H.J. Res. 389) to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report the same back forthwith with the following: Page 2, after line 7, add the following new language: "None of the funds provided in this Act shall be paid by the Commodity Credit Corporation for payment on guaranteed loans to Poland.".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California (Mr. LEWIS) is recognized for 5 minutes in support of his motion to recommit.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, I address myself first to my chairman.

To say the least, I am a bit uncomfortable being in this position. Serving on both the Subcommittee on Foreign Operations, as well as Agriculture, joins the issues here in a very interesting way.

Let me say to my colleagues that during the years that it was my privilege to serve with then Governor Reagan in California, I learned that from time to time that great Governor, while busy with other matters, had his position or direction somewhat distorted by some of the help who had not really thought through a specific issue. I learned that from time to time it was not a bad thing for those of us who were friends of the administration to be willing to raise a question when we had a doubt or a question of principle was involved or perhaps even when questions of logic were involved. Because of that experience, I have been moved to come to this position today. At the very time that our President was urging our NATO allies to use credits to put pressure upon that military regime that is suppressing the people of Poland some were suggesting that we back off.

I was astonished, my colleagues, I was astonished to find that the third level of our State Department, the soft underbelly that has always been there—Democrat President or Republican President—was talking with the Department of Agriculture, asking them to move their rules around urging USDA to take actions that fly in the face of a basic policy controlling the use of Commodity Credit Corporation funds; indeed, taking actions that could very well undermine the credibility of the Commodity Credit Corporation, undermine the very program that my friends from Agriculture are expressing great concern about today.

Now, let me share with you what I have learned. I must say that it is difficult to get a handle on the actual statistics involved, because nobody seems to really know what has been happening at USDA, in spite of a clear policy on the part of Congress.

First, I have learned that while the data is not totally clear, USDA put the total figure at approximately $1.62 billion of money commitments from CCC guaranteeing loans to Poland, broken down as follows:

There is $47.3 million owed under Public Law 480.

There is $540.3 million owed under the GSM-5, export sales program.

There is $876.1 million guaranteed under the GSM-101 and 102 export guarantee programs. This includes a principal of $805 million and interest of $71.1 million; $158 million has been paid to banks as a result of Poland's rescheduling last year of guaranteed loans.

Now, what that means is that throughout 1981 USDA has been pushing around the regulations a bit and paid out $158 million of money owed to banks and now that money through rescheduling is essentially owed by the Government.

As of January, going into the 1982 year, the first step has been $71 million. Almost $53 million is due in February; $53 million in March and so forth.

The point is this. Literally something in excess of three-quarters of a billion dollars could very well be transferred from the banks to our debit line, thereby perhaps undermining CCC and the Congress would not even have known about it if some way, somehow, as the President was urging our NATO allies to put pressure on, we learned that people in the State Department were asking the USDA to help them take the pressure off.

The purpose of this amendment is to do two things. The first is to bring to the light of day the fact that the rules have been fudged and that fudging could dramatically affect CCC.

The second is the reality that Western credits are being used to hold up the economies of the Eastern bloc and some people on extremes would suggest that those very economies might fall otherwise and, indeed, they suggest it holds back the need for Russia to do more and some even suggest that that reduced pressure on Russia allows them to continue to build their military machine. All of those items are involved.

One of the things that this amendment does not do, it does not put in jeopardy CCC. Indeed in terms of actual meaning this amendment only places a symbol out front on behalf of those who would have our country use every faction of its will in support of the people of Poland. Western credit markets should be used to put pressure on the oppressors of Poland.

They should be used to extend opportunity and hope. They should not be used in support of Eastern bloc economics but rather on behalf of freedom.

I thank my colleagues for their patience and their support.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to recommit.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5 of rule XV, the Chair announces that he will reduce to a minimum of 5 minutes the period of time within which a vote by electronic device, if ordered, will be taken on the question of the passage of the joint resolution.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 152, nays 256, not voting 26, as follows:

[Roll No. 3]

YEAS—152

Anderson	Flippo	Murtha
Archer	Fountain	Napier
Ashbrook	Fowler	Neal
AuCoin	Frost	Nelligan
Badham	Fuqua	Nelson
Bafalis	Gephardt	Nichols
Bailey (MO)	Gilman	Ottinger
Beard	Gingrich	Parris
Benedict	Gramm	Pashayan
Benjamin	Grisham	Patman
Bennett	Hagedorn	Paul
Bethune	Hall (OH)	Pease
Bevill	Hall, Ralph	Petri
Bliley	Hall, Sam	Ritter
Bouquard	Hance	Roemer
Brinkley	Hansen (ID)	Roth
Brodhead	Hartnett	Rousselot
Brown (CO)	Hefner	Rudd
Broyhill	Hendon	Russo
Burton, John	Hertel	Scheuer
Carman	Hightower	Schroeder
Carney	Hopkins	Schulze
Chappie	Hubbard	Sensenbrenner
Clausen	Hunter	Sharp
Coleman	Hyde	Shelby
Collins (TX)	Jenkins	Shumway
Corcoran	Johnston	Shuster
Courter	Jones (OK)	Skelton
Coyne, James	Kemp	Smith (AL)
Craig	Kramer	Smith (NJ)
Crane, Daniel	Leath	Smith (OR)
Crane, Philip	LeBoutillier	Snowe
D'Amours	Lee	Snyder
Dannemeyer	Lent	Solomon
Davis	Levitas	Stangeland
Deckard	Lewis	Stenholm
Derrick	Livingston	Stump
Derwinski	Long (MD)	Tauke
Dorgan	Lujan	Taylor
Dreier	Lungren	Thomas
Duncan	Martin (NC)	Volkmer
Eckart	Mazzoli	Walgren
Edwards (OK)	McCollum	Walker
Emerson	McCurdy	Watkins
Emery	McDonald	Weber (MN)
English	McEwen	Whitley
Erdahl	McGrath	Wilson
Fenwick	Miller (OH)	Wolf
Fiedler	Molinari	Yatron
Fields	Moorhead	Young (AK)
Fithian	Mottl

NAYS—256

Addabbo	Goodling	Panetta
Akaka	Gore	Patterson
Albosta	Gradison	Pepper
Alexander	Gray	Perkins
Andrews	Green	Peyser
Annunzio	Gregg	Pickle
Anthony	Guarini	Porter
Aspin	Gunderson	Price
Atkinson	Hamilton	Pritchard
Bailey (PA)	Hammerschmidt	Quillen
Barnard	Hansen (UT)	Rahall
Barnes	Harkin	Railsback
Bedell	Hatcher	Rangel
Beilenson	Hawkins	Ratchford
Bereuter	Heckler	Regula
Bingham	Heftel	Reuss
Blanchard	Hillis	Rhodes
Boggs	Holland	Richmond
Boland	Hollenbeck	Rinaldo
Bolling	Holt	Roberts (KS)
Boner	Howard	Roberts (SD)
Bonior	Hoyer	Robinson
Bonker	Huckaby	Rodino
Bowen	Hughes	Roe
Brooks	Hutto	Rogers
Broomfield	Ireland	Rose
Burgener	Jacobs	Rosenthal
Burton, Phillip	Jeffords	Rostenkowski
Butler	Jones (NC)	Roukema
Byron	Jones (TN)	Roybal
Chisholm	Kastenmeier	Sabo
Clay	Kazen	Savage
Clinger	Kennelly	Sawyer
Coelho	Kildee	Schneider
Collins (IL)	Kindness	Schumer
Conable	Kogovsek	Seiberling
Conte	LaFalce	Shamansky
Conyers	Lagomarsino	Shannon
Coughlin	Lantos	Shaw
Coyne, William	Latta	Siljander
Crockett	Leach	Simon
Daniel, Dan	Lehman	Skeen
Daniel, R. W.	Leland	Smith (IA)
Danielson	Loeffler	Smith (NE)
Daschle	Long (LA)	Smith (PA)
Daub	Lott	Solarz
de la Garza	Lowery (CA)	Spence
Dellums	Lowry (WA)	St Germain
Dicks	Luken	Stanton
Dingell	Lundine	Stark
Dixon	Madigan	Staton
Donnelly	Markey	Stokes
Dougherty	Marks	Stratton
Dowdy	Marlenee	Studds
Downey	Marriott	Swift
Dunn	Martin (IL)	Synar
Dwyer	Martin (NY)	Tauzin
Dyson	Matsui	Traxler
Edgar	Mattox	Trible
Edwards (AL)	Mavroules	Udall
Edwards (CA)	McClory	Vander Jagt
Ertel	McDade	Vento
Evans (DE)	McHugh	Washington
Evans (GA)	Mica	Waxman
Evans (IA)	Michel	Weber (OH)
Evans (IN)	Mikulski	Weiss
Fary	Miller (CA)	White
Fascell	Mineta	Whitehurst
Fazio	Minish	Whittaker
Ferraro	Mitchell (MD)	Whitten
Findley	Mitchell (NY)	Williams (MT)
Fish	Moakley	Williams (OH)
Florio	Moffett	Winn
Foglietta	Mollohan	Wirth
Foley	Montgomery	Wolpe
Ford (MI)	Moore	Wortley
Ford (TN)	Morrison	Wright
Forsythe	Murphy	Wyden
Frank	Myers	Wylie
Frenzel	Natcher	Yates
Garcia	Nowak	Young (FL)
Gaydos	O'Brien	Young (MO)
Gejdenson	Oakar	Zablocki
Ginn	Oberstar	Zeferetti
Glickman	Obey
Gonzalez	Oxley

NOT VOTING—26

Applegate	DeNardis	Horton
Biaggi	Dickinson	Jeffries
Breaux	Dornan	McCloskey
Brown (CA)	Dymally	McKinney
Brown (OH)	Early	Pursell
Campbell	Erlenborn	Santini
Chappell	Gibbons	Wampler
Cheney	Goldwater	Weaver
Coats	Hiler

□ 1530

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Mr. Biaggi with Mr. Wampler.
Mr. Chappell with Mr. McKinney.
Mr. Weaver with Mr. Goldwater.
Mr. Breaux with Mr. Campbell.
Mr. Applegate with Mr. Dickinson.
Mr. Early with Mr. Brown of Ohio.
Mr. Santini with Mr. Pursell.
Mr. Dymally with Mr. Erlenborn.
Mr. Brown of California with Mr. McCloskey.
Mr. DeNardis with Mr. Cheney.
Mr. Hiler with Mr. Coats.
Mr. Jeffries with Mr. Horton.

Messrs. WILLIAMS of Montana, ROSTENKOWSKI, ANNUNZIO, and Mrs. SCHROEDER changed their votes from "yea" to "nay."

Mrs. FENWICK, Messrs. WILSON, PASHAYAN, ASHBROOK, SKELTON, CRAIG, SMITH of New Jersey, and MURTHA, Ms. MIKULSKI, Messrs. FROST, YATRON, NICHOLS, HEFNER, FUQUA, HANCE, HUBBARD, and EDWARDS of Oklahoma, Mrs. SCHROEDER, and Messrs. STENHOLM, HIGHTOWER, HERTEL, and BAFALIS, changed their votes from "nay" to "yea."

Ms. MIKULSKI changed her vote from "yea" to "nay."

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the joint resolution.

The question was taken: and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Speaker, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the previous announcement of the Chair, this recorded vote will be limited to 5 minutes.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 320, noes 86, not voting 28, as follows.

[Roll No. 4]

AYES—320

Addabbo	Bingham	Conte
Akaka	Blanchard	Corcoran
Albosta	Boggs	Coughlin
Alexander	Boland	Courter
Andrews	Bolling	Coyne, William
Annunzio	Boner	D'Amours
Anthony	Bonior	Daniel, R. W.
Applegate	Bonker	Danielson
Aspin	Bouquard	Daschle
Atkinson	Bowen	Daub
AuCoin	Brinkley	Davis
Badham	Brooks	de la Garza
Bafalis	Broomfield	Deckard
Bailey (MO)	Burgener	Derrick
Bailey (PA)	Burton, John	Dicks
Barnard	Burton, Phillip	Dingell
Barnes	Butler	Dixon
Beard	Byron	Donnelly
Bedell	Chappie	Dorgan
Beilenson	Chisholm	Dougherty
Benedict	Clausen	Dowdy
Benjamin	Clinger	Downey
Bereuter	Coelho	Duncan
Bethune	Coleman	Dunn
Bevill	Conable	Dwyer

Dyson	Kazen	Richmond
Eckart	Kennelly	Roberts (KS)
Edgar	Kildee	Roberts (SD)
Edwards (AL)	Kindness	Robinson
Edwards (CA)	Kogovsek	Rodino
Edwards (OK)	LaFalce	Roe
Emerson	Lagomarsino	Rogers
Emery	Lantos	Rose
English	Latta	Rostenkowski
Erdahl	Leach	Roukema
Ertel	Leath	Roybal
Evans (DE)	Lehman	Rudd
Evans (GA)	Leland	Sabo
Evans (IA)	Lewis	Sawyer
Evans (IN)	Livingston	Scheuer
Fary	Loeffler	Schroeder
Fascell	Long (LA)	Schumer
Fazio	Lott	Seiberling
Ferraro	Lowery (CA)	Shamansky
Fields	Lowry (WA)	Shannon
Findley	Luken	Sharp
Fish	Lundine	Shaw
Fithian	Madigan	Shuster
Flippo	Markey	Siljander
Florio	Marks	Simon
Foglietta	Marlenee	Skeen
Foley	Marriott	Skelton
Ford (MI)	Martin (IL)	Smith (IA)
Forsythe	Martin (NC)	Smith (NE)
Fountain	Martin (NY)	Smith (NJ)
Frenzel	Matsui	Smith (PA)
Frost	Mattox	Snowe
Fuqua	Mavroules	Solarz
Garcia	Mazzoli	Spence
Gaydos	McClory	St Germain
Gejdenson	McCurdy	Stangeland
Gephardt	McDade	Stanton
Gingrich	McEwen	Stark
Ginn	McHugh	Staton
Glickman	Mica	Stenholm
Gonzalez	Michel	Stratton
Gore	Mikulski	Studds
Gray	Miller (CA)	Stump
Green	Mineta	Swift
Gregg	Minish	Synar
Guarini	Mitchell (NY)	Tauke
Gunderson	Moakley	Tauzin
Hagedorn	Moffett	Taylor
Hall (OH)	Molinari	Thomas
Hall, Ralph	Mollohan	Traxler
Hall, Sam	Montgomery	Trible
Hamilton	Moore	Udall
Hammerschmidt	Morrison	Vander Jagt
Hance	Murtha	Vento
Hansen (UT)	Myers	Volkmer
Harkin	Napier	Watkins
Hartnett	Natcher	Waxman
Hatcher	Neal	Weber (MN)
Hawkins	Nelligan	Weber (OH)
Hefner	Nelson	White
Heftel	Nichols	Whitehurst
Hightower	Nowak	Whitley
Hillis	Oakar	Whittaker
Holland	Oberstar	Whitten
Hollenbeck	Obey	Williams (MT)
Holt	Ottinger	Williams (OH)
Hopkins	Oxley	Wilson
Howard	Panetta	Winn
Hoyer	Pashayan	Wirth
Hubbard	Patterson	Wolf
Huckaby	Pease	Wolpe
Hunter	Pepper	Wortley
Hutto	Petri	Wright
Hyde	Pickle	Wyden
Ireland	Price	Yates
Jacobs	Pritchard	Yatron
Jeffords	Quillen	Young (AK)
Jenkins	Rahall	Young (FL)
Jones (NC)	Ratchford	Young (MO)
Jones (OK)	Regula	Zablocki
Jones (TN)	Reuss	Zeferetti
Kastenmeier	Rhodes

NOES—86

Anderson	Collins (IL)	Dreier
Archer	Collins (TX)	Fenwick
Ashbrook	Conyers	Fiedler
Bennett	Coyne, James	Ford (TN)
Bliley	Craig	Fowler
Brodhead	Crane, Daniel	Frank
Brown (CO)	Crane, Philip	Gilman
Broyhill	Crockett	Goodling
Carman	Dannemeyer	Gradison
Carney	Dellums	Gramm
Clay	Derwinski	Grisham
Hansen (ID)	Miller (OH)	Russo
Heckler	Mitchell (MD)	Savage
Hendon	Moorhead	Schneider
Hertel	Mottl	Schulze
Hughes	Murphy	Sensenbrenner
Johnston	O'Brien	Shelby
Kemp	Parris	Shumway
Kramer	Patman	Smith (AL)
LeBoutillier	Paul	Smith (OR)
Lee	Peyser	Snyder
Lent	Porter	Solomon
Levitas	Rangel	Stokes
Long (MD)	Rinaldo	Walgren
Lujan	Ritter	Walker
Lungren	Roemer	Washington
McCollum	Rosenthal	Weiss
McDonald	Roth	Wylie
McGrath	Rousselot

NOT VOTING—28

Biaggi	Dickinson	McCloskey
Breaux	Dornan	McKinney
Brown (CA)	Dymally	Perkins
Brown (OH)	Early	Pursell
Campbell	Erlenborn	Railsback
Chappell	Gibbons	Santini
Cheney	Goldwater	Wampler
Coats	Hiler	Weaver
Daniel, Dan	Horton
DeNardis	Jeffries

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Mr. Biaggi with Mr. Wampler.
Mr. Chappell with Mr. McKinney.
Mr. Weaver with Mr. Goldwater.
Mr. Breaux with Mr. Campbell.
Mr. Early with Mr. Brown of Ohio.
Mr. Santini with Mr. Pursell.
Mr. Dymally with Mr. Erlenborn.
Mr. Brown of California with Mr. McCloskey.
Mr. Dan Daniel with Mr. Railsback.
Mr. DeNardis with Mr. Cheney.
Mr. Hiler with Mr. Coats.
Mr. Jeffries with Mr. Horton.
Mr. Perkins with Mr. Dickinson.

Messrs. CONYERS, KRAMER, HERTEL, and MILLER of California, Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois, and Mr. GILMAN, changed their votes from "aye" to "no."

Messrs. SILJANDER and MILLER of California changed their votes from "no" to "aye."

So the joint resolution was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

□ 1545

URGENT SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES, 1982

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the order of the House of Thursday last, I call up the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 392) making an urgent supplemental appropriation for the Department of Health and Human Services for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982, and ask for its consideration in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

H.J. RES. 392

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sum is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982, namely:

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES

SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

LOW INCOME ENERGY ASSISTANCE

For an additional amount for "Low Income Energy Assistance", $123,000,000.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the joint resolution under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, at the request of numerous members, I introduced this joint resolution, due to the acute situation existing in many of the major cities and elsewhere throughout the country because of the extremely cold weather. In this situation of extremely cold weather, there is a shortage of funds for assistance to the low-income groups in connection with energy. I strongly support this legislation, and at this time I would be glad to hear from the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. NATCHER), chairman of the subcommittee which handles this bill.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution just called up by my chairman, House Joint Resolution 392, provides for an additional sum of $123 million for the low-income energy assistance program.

For fiscal year 1981 we had the sum of $1,850 million for this program. The authorization for fiscal year 1982 is $1,875 million. This authorization, as the Members of the House know, is contained in the Omnibus Reconciliation Act that was enacted last year.

In the regular bill from the Appropriations Committee for the Department of Labor, for the Department of Health and Human Services, and for the Department of Education for fiscal year 1982 we had the sum of $1,850 million. The continuing resolution contains the sum of $1,752 million. When we take the $123 million in this urgent House joint resolution and add it to the amount contained in the continuing resolution, we have the sum of $1,875 million, the total amount authorized for the low-income energy assistance program.

Mr. Speaker, in January of 1982 we had the coldest month in the 20th century, throughout most of the 50 States. Temperatures ranged from 6° below normal to almost 20° below normal. There were a great many people in this country who suffered by virtue of the cold weather during the month of January. As the Members of the House know, we expect to have more cold weather during the month of February and probably on into the month of March.

Fuel and utility prices have increased 14.8 percent over the last year. Unemployment at the present time is 8.8 percent. So what do we have, Mr. Speaker? Energy use is higher, prices are higher, the number of people who must rely upon the assistance in this program is higher. But, there is less money this year for this program.

Our Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services and Education tried to determine how many States were out of energy assistance money. the people from the Department of Health and Human Services, when they appeared to testify on this joint resolution, informed us that they did not know—that OMB would not give them permission to make this type of a study or a survey. But we did, Mr. Speaker, obtain certain information from one of the outside groups which did a telephone poll on January 28 and 29, 1982, of each State energy assistance office.

As a result, Mr. Speaker, we discovered as an example that the State of Oregon needs more money at the present time; it will be out of funds by mid-February. In the State of Massachusetts, the State has exhausted most of its funds and the funds will be exhausted by mid-March. For the State of Maine, the State of Maine is currently out of money. In New Hampshire they are out of funds as of the first day of the present month. New York State has obligated all of its funds. South Carolina has also obligated all of its funds, and no additional applications are being accepted. Nevada has a high backlog of applications; the State will not accept applications after the first day of this month.

The State of Iowa is out of funds, and they have received a record number of applications. Colorado has all of its funds obligated. In the State of Kentucky, the State is expected to run out of funds by the middle of this month.

Mr. Speaker, those are a few of the States and the conditions that exist now throughout the United States.

From time to time we hear inquiries that are made as to why it is, Mr. Speaker, that some of the currently available funds have not been drawn down. Based on the facts I have just described, Mr. Speaker, I am certain that every dollar that will be in this entire program during 1982, the amount of $1,875 million, will be necessary. Every dollar of it will be used.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. NATCHER) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. NATCHER was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, during the winter of last year, which was not a cold winter, only $29 million was turned back. In the present winter, one of the bitterest winters in the history of this country, not a dollar of this money will be turned back.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that every Member of this House votes for this joint resolution.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Appropriations Committee comes before the House today to support this critical supplemental for the low-income energy assistance program.

It is a credit to our good chairman, Mr. WHITTEN and to our subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky, BILL NATCHER, that they have moved rapidly to make these additional funds available.

The $123 million sought here would bring the funds available for this program up to the authorization level set in reconciliation last spring of $1.875 billion. Essentially that means the program will be level funded with fiscal 1981.

Under the third continuing resolution passed on December 10, 1981, the Congress appropriated $1.752 billion for the low income energy assistance program.

Believe it or not, there were some good quick responses to the Congress stated intention of moving these funds quickly through the bureaucracy and to the States. By December 30, 1981, 80 percent of the funds had been apportioned among the States. By January 14, 90 percent of the funds were apportioned and are now available for drawdown.

I am informed that by the first of March it is the hope of the Department of Health and Human Services, with assistance from OMB, that the remaining 10 percent will be out in the pipeline. Frankly, I am hopeful that they will be able to move the funds much quicker than that and get them out in the next 2 weeks.

In any event, the $1.752 billion that we already appropriated will not be sufficient to meet the needs of needy people in this country.

First of all let us look at the basic facts:

This is the coldest winter of this century; 46 States have experienced a harsher winter than any time in the last 80 years including temperatures ranging from 6 to 20 degrees below normal.

During the most recent reporting period—January 10-24, 1982—demand for heating energy as estimated by the Department of Commerce was 11 percent above normal.

Energy prices in general increased 12.7 percent between October 1980 and October 1981.

And, the Bureau of Labor Statistics study shows that the average price of heating oil increased 15.7 percent during the same period. Natural gas by nearly 20 percent.

Unemployment is at 8.9 percent and more than 9 million Americans are out of work. That means that there are at least 9 million Americans that have an extra burden to face this winter in addition to their heating bills.

Some people argue that there is not a need for the additional funds. That just is not true. Let us look at some other facts:

The Department of Health and Human Services estimates that there are 21 million eligible households in this country that should receive assistance under this program.

It is estimated, also by the Department of Health and Human Services, that fewer than 8.5 million households will actually be served due to insufficient funds.

That means that individual States, depending on their State plan, are serving between 25 and 40 percent of the needy eligible households.

Let us just take Pennsylvania as an example. In Pennsylvania there are 1.4 million eligible households. There are also 690,000 families below 125 percent of the poverty level. And yet, the Pennsylvania share of available funds calls for serving 375,000 families, or only 27 percent of those eligible.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Speaker, will my friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts, yield?

Mr. CONTE. I am glad to yield to my good friend, the gentleman from Pennslyvania.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Speaker, I want to underline what my colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE), has said and congratulate him on his efforts in this direction.

I have checked with my own State people. I know from my own experience that in my own district there are people out there who are having to make decisions sometimes on whether to heat their homes or whether to eat, it is that bad.

I want my friend to know that I am fully in support of him and congratulate him on his efforts. I hope the House will overwhelmingly adopt this initiative, and I commend the gentleman and the other members of the committee for the work they are doing in this direction.

□ 1600

Mr. CONTE. I want to thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. McDADE. JOE McDADE has been a great supporter of this program and I know, serving with him for 20 years in this House, that he certainly has the compassion and the milk of human kindness in his veins.

Mr. Speaker, a number of people argue that the States have not been using the energy assistance money that we have already appropriated. That is not accurate either and to understand the situation we must have some knowledge about the operation of the program.

First of all, there are 50 State plans all approved by the Department of Health and Human Services, but each one has its own unique features in order to allow an individual State to meet the priority needs of its population. Therefore it is understandable that circumstances in the States vary from State to State.

For those that claim that the States have drawn down only 25 to 30 percent of the funds already appropriated it should be noted that even HHS has often commented that the drawn down amount is not a decent indicator of need for the program.

States, through establishing vendor lines of credit and delayed billing procedures and voucher systems, have successfully tried to get the program moving quickly this year without necessarily having to have a lot of cash on hand.

The net result is that through these vendor lines of credit, through delayed billings, and through voucher systems the State programs managed to advance their assistance without having to put up a lot of cash early on.

Now, that cash is needed and is in the process of being drawn down. Many, many States have obligated or committed all of their shares of these funds as of this date.

Speaking of States having committed their funds, let us look at a few examples:

Alabama: 80 percent of funds already obligated; benefits have been reduced by two-thirds since last year in order to try and help more households.

Arkansas: 100 percent of funds obligated; reduced eligibility pool in order to maintain average benefit level of $75 per household.

A lot of people think it is warm out there in Arkansas, but they have some cold spells. I know.

California: reduced average benefit from $137 per eligible family to $86 per family when costs have gone up 15.7 percent.

Delaware: will be out of funds by February 28. Benefits have been reduced by 20 percent since last year.

Georgia: 50 percent of counties were out by January 10; 90,000 households served and no funds now available.

Idaho: had obligated 75 percent as of January 22; benefits reduced from $245 per eligible family last year to $140 per eligible family this year. That is a 42-percent reduction.

Some persons charge that the States can transfer funds from the social services block grant and the community services block grant into the low income assistance program.

Yes, they can do that, but let's face the realities there also. Those block grants have already been reduced by 25 percent. That is 25 percent being taken away from vital human services like child care. States cannot cut those services anymore.

We should not be forcing the States or our people to make choices between proper nutrition or child care and heating their homes this winter.

Another fact that should be mentioned is that due to the tightness of funds this year in the program, many States put early deadlines on applications for the fuel assistance programs. Americans are a proud people and many try to make their own ends meet for as long as possible before seeking necessary assistance. In some States the December 31 deadline and in other the January 31 deadline means that persons who in February and March will be unable to pay their bills will have no recourse for assistance.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to submit a U.S. News & World Report February 1, 1982, article into the RECORD entitled "Winter's Heavy Toll," and commend all of my colleagues to read this. They will realize the need for this.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The article follows:

WINTER'S HEAVY TOLL

The frigid season is only weeks old, but already snow and subzero temperatures are disrupting lives, threatening to deepen the recession.

The coldest winter of the century is blowing an ill wind over the already chilled economy.

Arctic temperatures struck states from the Atlantic to the Rockies, and even reached into parts of California. If winter's wrath continues, experts predict that it will deepen the recession, increase unemployment and impede progress against inflation.

Soaring fuel bills hit family and business checkbooks. Cities spent millions on snow removal, pinching their already tight budgets. Stores emptied. Crops were nipped. Plants and offices went on short hours.

So sharp was the impact that Bob Schultz of the Illinois Insurance Information Service calculated that the insured winter damage in 26 states already had reached 123 million dollars, with the season only a month old.

"If the cold spell is prolonged," asserts Tom Robinson of Merrill Lynch Economics in New York, "we could have a much weaker economy in the first quarter" than had been expected.

Robinson estimates that continued bad weather could worsen the nation's falling output of goods and services by as much as one half of 1 percentage point annually in this quarter.

Lawrence Chimerine, chief economist of Chase Econometrics in Bala-Cynwyd, Pa., agrees: "The weak economy will be weakened further if the cold winter lasts beyond one month."

Adds Allen Sinai of Data Resources, Inc., in Lexington, Mass.: A continued cold wave also "could raise inflation a little higher" by injuring fruit and vegetable crops and, thereby, hiking prices.

Even if the nation's total production escapes severe damage, notes Robert Ortner, chief economist for the Commerce Department, "individual sectors—department stores, autos, construction—could be hard hit."

The outlook is darkened by the fact that more stormy weather—which already has claimed at least 300 lives and hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of property damage—is predicted.

The National Weather Service forecasts below-normal temperatures for the eastern two thirds of the nation over the next 30 days. "The Siberian Express is just temporarily derailed," warns Harold Gibson, the service's chief meteorologist in Manhattan, where a recording of zero degrees Fahrenheit on January 18 was the lowest for that date in 107 years.

Not only did the storms bring the coldest temperatures of the century, but they were unique in another respect: They struck virtually every state east of the Rockies, including those in the normally sunny South.

Temperatures plunged to record lows in cities as far apart as Chicago, minus-26 degrees, and Tallahassee, Fla., plus-16 degrees. The Baltimore-Washington area shivered under its coldest weather since 1934. Birmingham Ala., suffered subzero temperatures for only the fifth time since 1885. Jackson, Miss., piled up the most snow in its history.

PEACH LOSS, TOO

The upper Midwest was blanketed under 18 inches of snow, and storms tormented the Plains states. Illinois alone suffered 11.7 million dollars of damage, losing its peach crop worth some 4 million dollars.

But the heavy snows were just one outburst in this winter's freakish behavior. Earthquakes shook buildings and rattled windows in seven northeastern states and eastern Canada. Hurricane-force winds whipped parts of Colorado. Record rainfalls caused mud slides and 200 million dollars of damage in the San Francisco area.

Winter's binge convinced shoppers to stay at home, slicing into retail sales in many parts of the country. A spokesman for the Sibley, Lindsay & Curr department-store chain noted that sales are "off substantially" in its stores in 14 Upstate New York cities.

R. Bruce Campbell, of Higbee's Department Stores in northeastern Ohio, says: "The weather really killed our business for two-to-three day periods around the last two weekends."

People also stopped going out for entertainment. "When it got down to a minus-60 wind chill for two weekends, the tendency was for everyone to get as close to the fireplace as possible," notes Larry Shuman, general manager of an Indianapolis shopping complex. "It hurt both the retail and restaurant business." In Chicago, the Hawthorne Race Track canceled its harness-racing program for Sunday, January 17.

Ailing auto dealers felt the cold's numbing effect, too. "Have we ever!" exclaims Bob Nelson, sales manager for Kennedy Chrysler Plymouth in Milwaukee. "The first 17 days of January were snowing or way below freezing. It brought business to a screeching halt, except for service."

The staggering construction industry took still another blow. "Not much construction work has gone on in the last couple of weeks," reports Al Hinton, spokesman for the Association of General Contractors of St. Louis.

A major problem: Worker absenteeism. Jim Reeves, of the J. S. Alberici Constuction Company, Inc., says the absentee rate reached 30 percent January 18 on the plant his firm is building for General Motors in Wentzville, Mo.

In the South, Florida's citrus growers reeled under a loss that may rival 1977's calamity, which cost them some 500 million dollars. Experts estimate that as much as one quarter of this season's orange and grapefruit crops may succumb to the cold. This could raise retail juice prices by 3 to 5 cents for a small can of concentrate.

The Southern winter-vegetable crop also is suffering. Half of Florida's sweetcorn crop is lost. Five or more Louisiana parishes may be declared disaster areas. "It's already clear that losses will run well into the millions of dollars," reports Bob Odom, the Louisiana agriculture commissioner. The toll will mount considerably, he adds, if sugarcane roots have been injured.

The growers' plight is pushing up grocery-store prices. Manny Costa owner of Costa Fruit & Produce Company in Charlestown, Mass., says the prices he pays for lettuce from California and tomatoes from Florida have about doubled, increases he'll have to pass along to consumers. "It's the worst market ever," he declares.

Rising prices and falling temperatures are inflating the bills of homeowners who heat with natural gas. In Chicago, the cost of heating a six-room house with gas is 40 percent above a year ago.

THE BRIGHT SIDE

Not all the news is bad, though. A glut in the supply of fuel oil is keeping retail prices stable despite the sharp increase in consumption.

Some businesses are benefiting, too. Utilities reported record demand for gas. Repair companies, such as the Lincoln Furnace Service of Chicago, were swamped with calls from harried homeowners. "Busted boilers, busted baseboards and busted pipes," explains a company spokesman.

Farmers in drought-plagued sections of the South and Midwest welcomed the moisture the snows bring, raising prospects for better crops this summer.

The public won on another score, too. Police across the country reported a drop in crime. As Police Lt. Gary Wheary of Asbury Pary, N.J., put it: "There are fewer people out on the street, both good guys and bad guys."

INTERVIEW WITH DOUGLAS PAINE, ASSOCIATE PROFESSOR OF ATMOSPHERIC SCIENCE, CORNELL UNIVERSITY

WEATHER OUTLOOK: WORSE TO COME

An expert sees abnormally cold conditions—not only this year but in 1983 and 1984 as well.

Q. Professor Paine, what will the weather be like for the rest of the winter?

A. Arctic cold is thoroughly entrenched across the full length of Canada. This suggests that more intrusions of cold air are likely over the next month or so. It remains to be seen where the north-to-south trajectory of air will set up. Right now, there's some indication that it may be more in the West and central Plains area.

This suggests that the Southeast, which has been hit hard this winter, may experience near-normal or even above-normal temperatures for the balance of the winter.

Q. Are there any indications of what spring and summer will be like?

A. On balance, seasonal average temperatures being recorded in the East in the last decade have been running cooler than at any previous time in this century. That is not necessarily a forecast for this spring and summer, but—especially in the northeastern United States—the trend has been for all seasons of the year to be somewhat below normal.

Q. What's causing the severe winter?

A. The often heard explanation is the jet-stream location. It has tended this winter to bring cold air from Siberia, across the North Pole and through Canada into the U.S. This makes sense in the short term.

What we're trying to do here at Cornell is explore the possibility that the reason the jet stream set up in that pattern may be related to solar variability, or sunspots. We are testing the possibility that solar variability helps dictate where the jet stream and the coldest pools of air are located in the winter season.

Q. You're saying sunspots may be playing a role in our severe winters?

A. Yes. We've found that if you take the last 20 winter seasons combined, it appears the cooling rate is modulated by the sunspot cycle. We've come off a strong sunspot maximum in 1980, and we're heading toward a minimum around 1986 or 1987. This is the kind of period in these 20-year averages of winter temperatures that the cooling rate tends to accelerate.

Q. Are more tough winters in store?

A. Yes. The Cornell technique suggests that for the next two winters we're going to have more very severe cold in parts of the United States, especially in the East and Southeast.

Departures as large as 10 degrees below the 30-year mean may occur over parts of the East during the next winter. These are right up with the all-time largest departures observed in the last century.

Q. Are there other views on the possible cause of the severe winter?

A. Yes. The National Weather Service predicts winter temperatures by taking the fall air-circulation pattern over a 90-day period and finding a comparison in previous weather records. The pattern it found this past fall looked most like the fall of '69. Therefore, the Weather Service suggested that this winter would look most like the winter of '69-70. That was a very stormy December and led to a biterly cold January. So far that idea certainly has some merit.

A competing idea comes from Scripps Institute and Rutgers University and is based on sea-surface-temperature changes in the North Atlantic and North Pacific. They also called for frigid weather this particular winter, and again, of course, the idea has merit.

Q. Your sunspot theory anticipates a warm-up late in this decade?

A. Yes. Around 1986 and through the rest of the decade, close-to-normal and even a couple of above-normal winters are forecast for major parts of the United States.

Q. Is there a link between variability of the sun's radiation and the hot, dry summers we've had in recent years?

A. I am concerned with the possibility that in the '80s in the East we may incur sizable deficits of precipitation. Unusually cold winters in the East, like those in the 1960's, tend to have a northwesterly flow of air from Canada that is drier than normal. Taking the 20-year average again, data suggest that the '80s will come out 10 to 20 percent drier than normal.

Q. Will science ever be able to forecast weather with a high percentage of accuracy six months or even 12 months ahead?

A. I think it may always be elusive to predict now, for instance, what the weather will be on a Tuesday in late August. But in terms of overall patterns of temperature or precipitation, I'm much more optimistic than many of my colleagues. I think that when man recognizes the need for something, he sometimes surprises himself and finds that he can master that need relatively quickly.

Q. Are accurate long-range weather forecasts going to require some major breakthrough or just a refinement of current knowledge?

A. I think I would classify it, quite frankly, as a major breakthrough.

Q. Do the activities of man—for instance, pumping carbon dioxide into the atmosphere—affect the weather?

A. The carbon-dioxide increase has been well documented. We're burning fossil fuels at an ever increasing rate. My own view is that this will be more of an important factor in world climate in the next century. The general concern is that, with a buildup of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere, there could be a general warming which could cause polar ice to melt.

Q. Are we heading for another ice age?

A. The cooling trend I've been talking about in no way presents the threat of any immediate onset of an ice age. It has been some 18,000 years since the last start of a major ice age, and such conditions seem to recur about every 19,000 years. According to that time frame, we don't have to worry for a few centuries yet.

BONE-CHILL INDEX

	Coldest day this winter	Avg. low that day
Amarillo, Tex.	2	22
Atlanta	−5	33
Boston	−2	22
Buffalo	−16	17
Burlington, Vt	−17	8
Charleston, S.C.	9	42
Chicago	−26	17
Cincinnati	−14	24
Des Moines	−22	11
Fairbanks, Alaska	−43	−23
Great Falls, Mont.	−29	12
Jackson, Miss.	3	35
Kansas City	−17	19
Los Angeles	37	47
Minneapolis	−26	3
New York City	0	26
Oklahoma City	0	25
Orlando	24	49
Rapid City, S. Dak.	−26	9
Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.	−36	7
Washington, D.C.	−5	23

Note: Figures are Fahrenheit as of Jan. 22.

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. COLEMAN).

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman has made a very good argument for this bill and I support the bill.

Mr. Speaker, the harsh, bitter weather of this winter has brought us together today to seek assistance for those hardest hit by falling temperatures and rising fuel costs.

First of all, let me say that I strongly support House Joint Resolution 392, which provides help for low-income people to pay their heating bills.

But, even more, I rise today to voice my strong objections to the rumored acceleration of natural gas deregulation as has been suggested by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. My constituents in north Missouri have been shocked by the rapid escalation of their home heating bills this winter. Certainly, part of the increase is due to the 34-percent colder weather we had last month than in January of 1981.

People throughout the country do not want a speedup of the deregulation process. They have their hands full meeting current gas bills. The fixed-income elderly are particularly vulnerable because they must generally keep their homes warmer than younger, working people. No matter how conservation conscious people may be, this extreme cold forces them to use more energy.

I want to put FERC on notice right now that I will vigorously fight any effort to accelerate the deregulation process. The American people have borne too many burdens in recent months—and nobly, I might add—to be forced into accepting astronomical heating bills in these hard economic times.

Mr. Speaker, this is the time for us to help those who have been hardest hit by this disastrous winter. That is why I support the additional $123 million energy assistance program called for in H.R. 392. But, let us not stop there. By our actions today, let us make it clear that we will not tolerate any actions by FERC to accelerate natural gas price decontrols.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE) has again expired.

(On request of Mr. COLEMAN and by unanimous consent, Mr. CONTE was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. CONTE. I want to thank the gentleman for his very valuable contribution.

Mrs. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I am glad to yield to my good friend from Maine, Mrs. SNOWE.

Mrs. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this supplemental appropriation for the low-income energy assistance program. Coming from one of the coldest States in the country, I can personally attest to the need for additional energy assistance funds.

The low-income energy assistance program in Maine, as in other States, especially serves the low-income elderly and handicapped population. Many of these elderly or handicapped individuals live on fixed incomes, and are unable to contend with the ever-increasing cost of home energy. It is for these individuals that this supplemental appropriation is necessary.

In Maine the low-income energy assistance program served about 52,000 households in 1981. An additional 13,000 households could not be served because of insufficient funding. During the last fiscal year Maine was able to pay eligible households a maximum payment of $600. This year, because of program changes, the overall reduction in funding, and the delay in OMB apportionment of funds, the maximum benefit check in Maine has been reduced to about $350. This represents just a small portion of the estimated $1,400 in home heating costs for a Maine family, second highest in the country.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud of the progress that Maine residents have made in the conservation of energy. Maine has reduced its overall energy consumption by about 8 percent in each of the last 2 years and has lowered the use of imported oil from 90 percent to about 67 percent. This conservation, however, does not reduce the minimum level of energy that must be used by low-income families. It is because their needs continue, no matter how great the overall level of conservation, that these additional funds for energy assistance payments are necessary.

I also must point out the valuable contribution the low income energy assistance program has made in home weatherization. In the current fiscal year 15 percent of the total funds allocated to a State for low-income energy assistance are available for weatherization. Maine takes full advantage of this provision, and with the addition of State funds will be able to weatherize about 5,700 homes this year. This is an extremely valuable achievement, as it prevents the future wasteful use of energy assistance funds being used to heat poorly insulated homes.

I am very dismayed, Mr. Speaker, that the President has elected to recommend an appropriation of only $1.3 billion for low-income energy assistance for the next fiscal year. This is not the time to debate that funding cutback, but I would urge the House to approve this supplemental appropriation so that the needy, the elderly, and the handicapped are provided with a minimal level of home energy assistance during the rest of this winter.

Mr. CONTE. I want to thank the gentlewoman from Maine. As usual, she is right on target.

I told them the other day in full committee that it has been so cold up in Maine and western Massachusetts that the dogs will not even go out.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Speaker, the supplemental funding bills before us today which pertain to sewer construction grants, to unemployment insurance and employment services, and to home heating assistance for low-income families are all needed and all have my support.

The circumstances are somewhat different for each of these programs, however.

We have always recognized that supplemental funding for sewer grants would be necessary this year to continue assistance to communities throughout the country that are committed to projects to correct existing water quality problems. We have projects that will soon be ready to begin construction and others already under construction, with final costs likely to exceed initial engineering estimates. Congress and the President previously agreed that the supplemental funding provided by House Joint Resolution 390 in the amount of $2.4 billion would be necessary.

With regard to Federal funding for employment services, the increase in unemployment nationwide to 8.9 percent in December put strains on State employment service agencies and State unemployment funds that were not anticipated. The fiscal year 1982 budget level was based on an estimated 7.5-percent unemployment rate.

State employment agencies have had to cut back on staff, in many cases closing offices in key locations entirely or for certain days of the week. In northeastern Pennsylvania this has been a problem, as our unemployment level is excessive. I have worked closely with the State agency to get them to stretch their available personnel to keep offices in higher unemployment areas open.

Additional funds provided by House Joint Resolution 391 will cover 7,300 more staff positions in State employment agencies throughout the country. It will also provide $1.9 billion to be allocated to the States as repayable loans to replenish their unemployment funds and enable them to pay all mandatory benefits.

The need for the $123 million in supplemental funding for low-income energy assistance provided in House Joint Resolution 392 arises from the fact that we are in the midst of an unusually harsh winter. Furthermore, fuel prices have gone up faster than expected. If this supplemental appropriation is not approved, many States, including my own State of Pennsylvania, are in danger of exhausting their energy assistance funds before winter is finally over.

In my district alone we are receiving from 15 to 20 emergency inquiries a day from people who do not have money to pay for heat and cannot get credit. In past years most applicants for help have been elderly, female heads of households, and disabled persons unable to work. This year there are more middle-income wage earners who have lost their jobs.

Several typical examples include a construction worker, out of work, and unable to draw unemployment because he is self-employed, with a wife who makes only $50 a week. Their monthly fuel bill averages over $250—leaving a mere $50 for food, and other essential expenses.

Another example is a 60-year-old woman who receives welfare payments of $150 a month. Her monthly fuel bills exceed her total monthly income. If this elderly lady were to have enough money to pay for food, she would be forced to live in an apartment without heat.

A final example is of a man and woman in their eighties, both disabled, whose total income is $300 a month. With fuel bills of over $250 a month, there is a mere $50 left to provide these two people the necessities required to survive.

In most cases, home heating assistance goes to workers who lose their jobs or suffer extended layoffs. Savings, unemployment benefits, and creidt can be stretched for a while, but excessively cold weather and inflated fuel prices bring them to the point where some help is needed to get through the winter.

Home heating assistance is essential because, in this period of economic distress, it provides the extra bit of help that can prevent illness and even death.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike the last word. I rise in opposition to this joint resolution.

I realize that this is an emotional issue. I reluctantly rise in opposition to this proposal because based on the testimony by the representatives of the Department of HHS, the people who have appeared before our committee, the facts, as they represented them, tended to contradict what we have learned so far in this Chamber.

So on the basis of the testimony, let me simply present the opposing viewpoints and some of the facts on the contrary side of this issue.

I have no illusions as to the outcome of this bill. I know that this bill will be passed. But I am concerned that we are taking $123 million of taxpayer money—it is not Government money—taxpayers' dollars and simply sending them to areas that do not necessarily need them.

In the first place, Mr. Speaker, the Omnibus Reconciliation Budget Act provides that States are allowed to transfer a certain percentage of funds between various block grants. For instance, this means if they so desire, States are allowed to transfer up to 10 percent of their special services block grants and up to 5 percent of their community service block grants to their energy block or other blocks under their jurisdiction.

□ 1610

This means, simply, that if they run out of funds, they can transfer a great deal of money, up to $200 million, out of these other blocks into this particular block, if they so need.

Conversely, States can also transfer up to 10 percent of their energy block moneys to other block grants. And, Mr. Speaker, I take specific note of that provision because if we supply this extra $123 million, the facts will reveal that when we look back on what has happened over these few months, maybe a year or so from now, the facts are going to reveal that this $123 million, by and large, got diverted to other programs that perhaps States had a higher priority for. That is my prediction. It will not necessarily come true, but I believe that it will come true.

The point is that $200 million out of other block grants are available in the event that the States need them for this program. And no State has told HHS that it needs additional funds.

Now, let us go a little bit further. Preliminary plans submitted to the Department of HHS indicate that 16 States now actually intend to transfer funds out of their energy block grant program to other block grants. I list among them the State of Arkansas, which was earlier spoken of. The Department of HHS tells us that the State of Arkansas is planning on transferring funds out of its energy block grants into other block grants. The State of Idaho, the State of Kansas, the States of Kentucky, Missouri, New York, North Dakota, South Dakota, Washington, Wisconsin, Wyoming, New Jersey, mostly Northern States, mostly very cold States, and yet the records available to the Department of HHS indicate that they not only do not need this extra $123 million, Mr. Speaker, they are taking money out of the current program and planning to divert it to other programs.

I might add, on that point, that while 16 States, perhaps 17 States, are planning on diverting money from the energy block grant to other programs, no State, as of the last 5 days, the time the representatives of the Department of HHS testified before our committee, no single State had contacted the Department of HHS to tell them that they needed more money. Not a single State had contacted the representatives of the Department of HHS to tell them they had insufficient funds.

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BROYHILL. Is it a fact that a number of States have surpluses in their programs as of last year?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Well, I was going to point that out. As a matter of fact, despite the fact that many, many thousands, in fact hundreds of thousands, or millions of people were helped last year, and despite the fact that some $1.8 billion was expended last year for this meaningful program, $29 million came back to the Federal Government because they had a surplus and they did not need and could not use all the funds available to them last year.

Mr. BROYHILL. I would like to check one other figure out with the gentleman, because he does seem to be very well informed on this subject. I am told there may be as much as $175 million that remains unobligated and unexpended by the States, as of January 31 of this year.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. LIVINGSTON) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. LIVINGSTON was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Let me amplify the gentleman's statement. Figures are not available for what the States actually have committed as of this date under the energy block grants, but as of the end of January, HHS reported that only 26 percent of the funds made available by OMB have actually been drawn down by all the States for their energy income assistance programs; and, as of this last week, OMB has released 90 percent of the $1.75 billion that has already been made available by previous appropriations by this body.

Now last year, by the end of January 1981, even though 7.2 million households had received an average of $225 per household, States had drawn down already 45 percent of their total funds for low-income energy assistance, and they finished fiscal year 1981 with a $29 million surplus which was unused by the States that year. This was despite the reallotment of funds between States with lesser need to those of greater need; in other words, some States that did not need as much transferred these funds to those States who needed it more. This was also despite the fact that 25 States had operated their programs in such a way that in 1981 they were able to make supplemental heating payments after the heating season. In fact, 13 States actually made assistance payments in 1981 after June 1 last year. Now, this program is for helping people to heat their homes, yet after June 1 funds were still expended. Somewhere along the line the good intentions of this House have gotten diverted. Why were payments, I might ask anyone in this body, why in the world were payments made after June 1? Something has to be done about this program.

Do the Members realize that in 1978, the year this program was devised and appropriated, the sum of $300 million was expended? Today, of course, it is over $1.75 billion.

Now, we talk about runaway Government. I think this is a perfect example.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I would like to go back and reemphasize a point that the gentleman made earlier. I am not certain that everyone completely understood. The gentleman, I think, stated earlier that some States are already planning to take money that is presently allocated in the low-income energy assistance program and transfer it for other purposes; is that not correct?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The gentleman is absolutely right. Sixteen States, many of which are in the coldest parts of the United States, including South Dakota and North Dakota and New York State.

Mr. WALKER. And New York State. And Wisconsin, I see on here. And States like Kansas, States that had some experience with really cold winters are planning on taking money that is presently supposed to go for low-income heating assistance and go to some other program; is that correct?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is absolutely right.

Mr. WALKER. I think I am also correct on this, that if they did have a problem—and I think that is the way the gentleman stated it—if they did have a problem with this, there is also money they could transfer into this program; in other words, the $123 million that we are talking about, actually you could transfer almost twice that amount of money or more than twice that amount of money out of other accounts presently available to the States if they in fact do have an emergency, that there is really not a need for this money on an emergency basis; is that not correct?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is right. Up to $200 million. They can take $200 million out of other block grants and transfer it into this program if they have insufficient funds.

I would like to add that we have heard a lot of talk about how cold this winter has been. There is no doubt that it has been a cold winter. But when you add up the number of cold days and aggregate the heating degree days, we really only had a winter that is 0.4 percent colder than last year, as of January 24 of this year. We have had cold days. They have been real cold days. But when you put your heat on, you only have heat for 1 day. So those cold days that the gentleman was talking about definitely stayed inside their houses over the last month, but the point is you can only use so much fuel. And I am just concerned that we are going to take a program that is well-intentioned, that is necessary to help people of low-income pay for a little bit extra toward their heating bills, and we are throwing money at them whether they can absorb it or not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. LIVINGSTON) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. LIVINGSTON was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

□ 1620

Mr. LIVINGSTON. We are taking this extra $123 million and throwing money at States that have already indicated they probably do not need the money anyway.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONTE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

First of all, the gentleman will agree with me that we appropriated $1.8 billion last year.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is correct.

Mr. CONTE. And by the gentleman's own statement in the well of the House, $29 million was returned by some Southern States last year?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The $29 million was returned to the Federal Government.

Mr. CONTE. The Federal Government—which has reallocated to some of the other States. So under the gentleman's own last admission this is a colder winter than last winter. Fuel has gone up by 12.7 percent. Natural gas has gone up by 20 percent over last year. The price of oil has increased by 15.7 percent over the last year.

Now, will the gentleman tell me what magician can come out with a figure less than $1.8 billion? That is all we are saying. Actually it should be $2 billion. That is what it should be.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The gentleman makes a very good point, he has defended this program and I think justifiably so. I am simply standing here attempting to keep us from wasting any money in this program and I think there is waste. I think when we consider the fact that North Dakota, South Dakota, Kentucky, Missouri, and New York have indicated to the Department of Health and Human Services that they intend to return money or divert some money to other programs, I think this is the key. I think we have $123 million that is not going to get to people who have a hard time heating their home. I think this $123 million is going to go to other programs that were cut back in last year's budget cuts.

Mr. CONTE. As I understand it, the Broyhill amendment will prevent these transfers to the southern programs and we will get to that later.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I have studied the gentleman's amendment and I certainly do favor it. I think some safeguards on this well-intentioned program need to be applied.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. LIVINGSTON) has expired.

(At the request of Mr. WALKER and by unanimous consent Mr. LIVINGSTON was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Was it this program or another program, when we start talking about these figures, that paid all of the money last year to persons who had no heating expenses but were in nursing homes and had money given to them even though they did not have any heating bills to pay?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I think it was, and I might add at the same time this program was going on we spent $1.2 billion for human development services, $7.2 billion for aid to dependent children, and $17.6 billion for medicaid. We are not a heartless Nation.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONTE. Of course, what the gentleman is saying is absolutely true. That was 2 years ago. We built in safeguards and we worked hard on this program. We worked on safeguards to prevent this from happening.

When the gentleman mentioned that this program started——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. In 1978, at $300 million.

Mr. CONTE. The price of oil at that time was only $42 a barrel.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. As the gentleman well knows, the President deregulated oil and the price of oil has gone down and that proves the President was right.

Mr. CONTE. I might point out that I was reading here where the southern winter vegetable crop is also suffering. Half of Florida's sweet corn crop is lost. Five or more Louisiana parishes may be declared disaster areas.

Nobody in my area can afford a head of lettuce from Louisiana. So give us a break and help us out with our heat.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. JEFFORDS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

All this talk is nice but my State is out of money right now for their people in this program and we need it.

Mr. Speaker, today we are voting on an emergency appropriation that would restore funding for the low-income energy assistance program (LIEAP). If House Joint Resolution 392 passes, the total outlay for LIEAP will reach the 1981 level of $1.875 billion. This money is crucial to those Northern States that are enduring a particularly cold winter, a winter that has increased the demand for energy assistance funds.

In Vermont, this problem of a shortage of funds is of utmost importance. At the end of February, it is estimated that all the LIEAP funds for the States will be depleted if House Joint Resolution 392 does not pass. Not only is Vermont experiencing a bitterly cold winter, but there has been an increase in the number of eligible recipients due to worsening economic conditions.

At this time, I would also like to express my deep concern for the President's budget request for the low-income energy program in 1983. The figure that he requested is a mere $1.3 billion. In lieu of the rapidly rising energy costs and the increase in the number of people who qualify for assistance, it seems irresponsible and unrealistic to propose such a low-funding level for this important program in 1983.

In closing, I would urge my colleagues to vote in favor of House Joint Resolution 392, and to work to restore funding for this program for 1983.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I might point out to the gentleman that under the current law the State of Vermont can transfer approximately $200 million from other block grants available to it.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Louisiana makes an excellent advocate for a bad case.

I think we have to understand what the numbers are. The windfall profit tax legislation made a commitment that we would make available for emergency fuel assistance $2.4 billion to provide some money for poor people who were hit the hardest by decontrol of oil prices.

As the gentleman from Massachusetts has indicated, in fiscal year 1981 we made available around $1.85 billion. In fiscal year 1982, in the continuing resolution, we have about $1.75 billion.

This bill is simply asking the House to go up to the Gramm-Latta figures to $1.875 billion. This does not bust Gramm-Latta, it takes us up to Gramm-Latta and no further.

Why is the bill here? The bill is here for a number of reasons.

First of all, it has been, as the gentleman from Kentucky indicated, the coldest year on record.

Second, it has been a bad year for unemployment. We also have larger numbers of elderly people eligible for the program this year.

When we have more old people, and when we have more poor people, we wind up with more cold people. That is why the bill is here—to take care of those cold people.

The problem, No. 1, is that in contrast to what the gentleman from Louisiana indicated, the head of NOAA testified that in degree day terms, this winter is 6-percent colder than it was last year.

No. 2, as I said, there are more eligible people for the program this year. We have approximately 10 percent more people in the country who are eligible by income for this program.

Problem No. 3 is, as the gentleman from Massachusetts has indicated, fuel prices are up. If you go from October to October comparisons, up 22 percent for natural gas, up 21 percent for fuel oil, up 16 percent for electric heat.

The gentleman from Louisiana has said that States can take money out of their block grants, out of their social service and community block grants, to pay for additional fuel assistance if they want.

Let me remind my colleagues the reason they are not going to do that and the reason that they have in fact been shifting some money the other way is because the programs now grouped under those block grants were cut from $2.9 billion last year to $2.4 billion this year.

Let me tell my colleagues what some of those programs are that the gentleman from Louisiana is suggesting we cut in order to pay for additional fuel assistance.

Food assistance for kids. Food assistance and nutrition assistance for senior citizens. Foster care programs. Child abuse program. Home health assistance programs to pay for home health care to prevent people from having to move into nursing homes. It costs us far more if they move into the nursing homes rather than take care of themselves in their own homes.

Does anybody on this floor really believe that we ought to cut further into programs like that? Do they really believe that?

I would suggest that is not a compassionate or sensible way to go about facing up to the duties of the National Government.

I would like to read some numbers because I think they are very revealing. If one takes the average household cost for fuel consumption per month, for January and February, and compares it to the maximum SSI payment for elderly people living alone, we have some very interesting numbers.

In the State of Minnesota, for instance, the average household expense for fuel is $288 a month for January and February. The maximum SSI payment for a single person is $272. That leaves nothing for January and February for people in those positions to pay for anything but fuel.

If we take Indiana, $240 per month for heating expenditure, $238 maximum SSI. That leaves them with nothing.

If we take New York, $300 for their coldest month expenditure for fuel, $301 maximum SSI payment, that leaves you $1 to live on.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. OBEY was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. OBEY. If we take Oregon, there is a little different picture, $181 is the average payment for fuel per month, $250 maximum SSI payment. That gives us a nice fat $17 a week to live on for the rest of the household expenses if you are unfortunate enough to fall into the income category that makes you eligible for this program.

I would suggest that we really can afford to do a little better than that. We have 10 percent more eligibles this year than last. Fuel prices are up 20 percent on average this year over last. We have 6-percent higher heating consumption this year over last. If you take those three numbers and divide them by the number of eligible people, we ought to have in this proposal $2.6 billion, not the $1.875 bill we have today. I would suggest those from States who do not have it quite so cold have some problems too and they are going to want the Congress to take a national view on those problems.

I would urge my colleagues to take a national view on ours as well.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to insert a chart into the record at this point comparing energy costs with maximum SSI payments and indicating the amount left over for living expenses.

ESTIMATED AVERAGE COLDEST-MONTH EXPENDITURE FOR ENERGY USED IN THE HOME BY HOUSEHOLDS UNDER 125 PERCENT OF POVERTY COMPARED TO MONTHLY MAXIMUM SSI PAYMENT FOR SINGLE ELDERLY

State	Coldest-month expenditure	Maximum monthly SSI payment (single elderly living independently)	Amount remaining for other necessities (per week)
Alabama	$90	$238	<$38
Arizona	86	238	<38
Arkansas	88	238	<38
California	70	402	<83
Colorado	86	293	<52
Connecticut	300	340	<10
Delaware	240	238	Nothing
Florida	110	238	<32
Georgia	90	238	<38
Idaho	240	312	<18
Illinois	283	Varies	Varies
Indiana	240	238	Nothing
Iowa	113	238	<31
Kansas	105	238	<33
Kentucky	120	238	<30
Louisiana	89	238	<38
Maine	285	248	Nothing
Maryland	240	238	Nothing

ESTIMATED AVERAGE COLDEST-MONTH EXPENDITURE FOR ENERGY USED IN THE HOME BY HOUSEHOLDS UNDER 125 PERCENT OF POVERTY COMPARED TO MONTHLY MAXIMUM SSI PAYMENT FOR SINGLE ELDERLY—Continued

State	Coldest-month expenditure	Maximum monthly SSI payment (single elderly living independently)	Amount remaining for other necessities (per week)
Massachusetts	300	375	<19
Michigan	263	262	Nothing
Minnesota	288	272	Nothing
Mississippi	90	238	38
Missouri	103	238	<34
Montana	86	238	<38
Nebraska	109	313	<51
Nevada	102	285	<46
New Hampshire	285	284	Nothing
New Jersey	265	261	Nothing
New Mexico	99	238	<35
New York	300	301	<1
North Carolina	91	238	<37
North Dakota	262	238	Nothing
Ohio	105	238	<33
Oklahoma	88	317	<57
Oregon	181	250	<17
Pennsylvania	232	270	<10
Rhode Island	300	280	Nothing
South Carolina	90	238	<38
South Dakota	272	253	Nothing
Tennessee	93	238	<36
Texas	90	238	<37
Utah	88	248	<40
Vermont	290	279	Nothing
Virginia	93	238	<36
Washington	181	281	<25
West Virginia	121	238	<30
Wisconsin	280	338	<15
Wyoming	85	258	<43
District of Columbia	159	253	<24

Mrs. BYRON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBEY. I yield to the gentlewoman from Maryland.

Mrs. BYRON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would like to agree with the gentleman, and I do come from a State that has been extremely cold this year.

I would like to commend the Appropriations Committee for acting expeditiously in reporting this resolution to the floor and also the one that is going to be accompanying it on the unemployment insurance this year, which I think is equally important.

I think both of these measures address the urgent nature of the problems that we are facing and they should both be enacted as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly support the low-income home energy assistance program. The value of this program has been demonstrated again this winter, when many sections of the country have suffered from the effects of severe weather and an unfavorable economic climate. The combined effects of inflation and unemployment have eliminated the ability of many family budgets to absorb higher home heating costs. Compounding this problem is the fact that January 1982 will probably be recorded as the coldest January of the century, once all of the statistics have been compiled. Demand for heating energy is expected to be approximately 10 percent above normal for the winter, with heating oil up 15.7 percent.

It is expected that the State of Maryland will receive $1.9 million of the $123 million appropriated by this bill. I have recently completed a district tour of central and western Maryland and many constituents spoke of the importance of the fuel assistance program in meeting critical heating needs. This bill should be passed in order to appropriate the full amount authorized for this program.

Mr. Speaker, I am deeply concerned about the effects of unemployment. I have recently traveled to all portions of Maryland's Sixth Congressional District, which is currently suffering from an unacceptable high jobless rate. Major industrial employers have had prolonged periods of reduced operations and the layoffs their employees have suffered have adversely affected the economy of the entire region.

I was extremely distressed recently when I met with employees of the Maryland Unemployment Office who were about to be laid off themselves. It is clearly unwise to cut back on the ability of the unemployment offices to process claims for benefits swiftly and efficiently at a time when unprecedented demands for services will be presented to the unemployment offices.

I am therefore strongly in favor of the enactment of House Joint Resolution 391, which will allocate additional funds to the States to continue the operations of the unemployment insurance service offices. This bill will also give the States the ability to use these funds to improve the operations of employment services. This flexibility will help the States provide the correct balance of unemployment compensation for those in need of income maintenance and employment services to help people return to the labor force and minimize the number of people who need unemployment compensation. I look forward to the early enactment of this legislation.

□ 1630

Mr. OBEY. I thank the gentlewoman.

I also want to emphasize what the gentleman from Massachusetts indicated. This law no longer allows the diversion of these funds for persons who are in nursing homes and therefore would not be legitimately expending those funds. The law has taken care of that. We are straight on it. We are trying to deal with the problems of people who are at the lowest end of the totem pole and I urge you to respond.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include at this point in the RECORD a number of charts to which I referred in my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Speaker, I know that there are good objectives by the people who are sponsoring the bill today. My friend, the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. NATCHER) and my friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE), their motives are good; but by the same token, I think that we should look at some of the problems within this bill.

Now, a few minutes ago the gentleman from Louisiana asked why heating bills would be paid in June. Well, over at HHS this is known as the heating and the cooling bill.

I think since we are paying for air-conditioning, but hear about people freezing, and under this bill the energy used for air-conditioning can be paid for as well as for heating, perhaps we should take a lesson from the squirrels and save some of the nuts for the cold weather.

We are right now attempting to pass emergency legislation of $123 million that can carry over to help people in the summer pay for the energy to air-condition their residences.

Now, as I understand it, Mr. Speaker, at least $2½ million was paid out to the tropical islands last year in the summertime under this bill; apparently it would have been for air-conditioning. I would not know why heating money would go to the tropical islands. We are talking about Guam. We are talking about the Virgin Islands. And others.

We are also talking about States such as Hawaii. I am not sure why they would need money in order to pay their heating bill in Hawaii. They seem to be quite comfortable and we have the same thing as far as Puerto Rico is concerned. They are receiving funds under this bill.

I believe that there is a problem here, and we need to realize it. There may be a lesson here about how we have come to have over a trillion dollar national debt. There is merit to the program, but we go overboard so quickly. Within 2 or 3 years, we are clear out of proportion to where we should be.

Now, I have a question, and perhaps our ranking minority member or the chairman could answer this. Is it possible to transfer 10 percent of the amount that a State receives out of this energy assistance bill for other purposes?

Would the chairman be able to answer that question as to whether it is possible to transfer 10 percent of the funds that a State would receive out of this particular energy assistance program into other programs?

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. NATCHER. Under the existing law, that could take place.

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. Does the gentleman have an idea as to how many dollars were transferred in this past year?

Mr. NATCHER. I would like to say to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, that was not permitted last year. When the changes were made in this legislation, it was permitted. Last year it was not permitted.

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. Last year it was not permitted?

Mr. NATCHER. Not permitted.

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. So this year we will have another problem on our hands, where that 10 percent can be transferred as of this year.

Mr. NATCHER. Under the existing law, it can be transferred.

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. Does that mean that perhaps the figure in the bill, instead of being $123 million, should be $99 million?

Mr. NATCHER. Well, let me say to the gentleman, I believe the $123 million in its entirety is needed and will be consumed. The winter weather that we have had up to this time and the weather that is predicted from now to the 15th day of March, in my opinion, will consume all this money.

Knowing the gentleman as I do, and I am one of the admirers of the gentleman, he is an outstanding member of the Committee on Appropriations, I know the section of Ohio that the gentleman is from. I went to law school at Ohio State, Mr. Speaker, and the gentleman comes from a right cold section.

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. That is correct, Mr. Speaker. It is cold. It is cold, indeed; but by the same token, the people are not concerned about air-conditioning. They are concerned about that cold weather, and they want to be protected.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee and the ranking minority member for the speed with which they brought this particular bill to the floor. This matter is important to a great number of people throughout the United States.

Second, Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) for stating precisely what would happen if transfers from block grants were made into this program. As has been said here, it is possible to transfer some $200 million from the block grant programs into fuel assistance programs. But, as the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) has detailed, these particular transfers would come out of social services and community services. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that few Members of this House would want that kind of a transfer in view of the cuts that have already been made in those particular services.

As we are all aware, Mr. Speaker, the winter weather which the United States experienced in January was the most severe in this century. This, of course, has produced a substantial strain on the resources of the energy assistance program which is designed to provide cash and in-kind assistance to the poor and the elderly. As detailed by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY), without the fuel assistance program some of the poor and elderly would have to use a sizable part of their SSS payment for energy costs. These people could end up with fewer dollars to sustain themselves for a particular month.

These are the people, Mr. Speaker, who I think are struggling to meet the higher costs associated with keeping warm weather as have been detailed by my colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE).

In December, the Congress acceded to the administration's desire for budget reductions by providing in the continuing resolution $1.75 billion for the energy assistance program. This amount represented a reduction of $98 million from the amount provided in fiscal year 1981 and a reduction of $123 million from the amount authorized for fiscal year 1982. It has become clear that those reductions have to be reversed if we are to insure the States will have enough money to sustain the program for the remainder of the winter. The record cold, coupled with increased energy costs, has made it especially difficult for thousands of poor Americans to meet their heating bills. For many of these people, Mr. Speaker, the energy assistance program offers the only realistic alternative to needless suffering. It is, therefore, imperative that the program be given the funds necessary to operate until the weather moderates.

I do not think anyone in this House, anyone in this committee, or anyone in the Congress of the United States, would say that there are no problems with the energy assistance program. I might very well support the amendment that will be offered by the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. BROYHILL). I think perhaps it offers to the membership of the House an opportunity to correct some of the problems with which this program has faced in the past years. Some of those problems might very well be taken care of by the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. BROYHILL).

There is no question about the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the arguments advanced by the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee clearly indicate the necessity for the $123 million, and I hope that this House goes along with that recommendation.

□ 1640

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BROYHILL

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BROYHILL: Page 2, after line 6, add the following new section:

SEC. 2. (a) Funds appropriated under this joint resolution shall remain available only until May 1, 1982.

(b) None of the funds appropriated under this joint resolution shall be used, obligated, or expended for the purposes of sections 2604(f), 2605(k), 2607(b)(1), or 2607(b)(2) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981; or for the purpose of making supplemental payments after May 1, 1982 to households or home heating suppliers for reimbursement of heating costs.

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to offer an unprinted amendment to House Joint Resolution 392. My waste, fraud, and abuse amendment would minimize the impact of this bill on the $98 billion fiscal year 1982 budget deficit.

My amendment would insure these $123 million in extra heating assistance funds are not transferred by HHS or the States to ineligible persons or nonenergy programs and are not distributed as summertime surplus payments beyond May 1, 1982.

Several States may be in a bind and need extra fuel assistance funds before the severe winter weather ends, as my distinguished colleagues on the Appropriations Committee have ably determined. My amendment would in no way affect those States. In addition, my amendment would not affect allotments for cooling assistance programs in Sunbelt States.

However, my amendment would insure this $123 million is targeted to all those States with genuine shortages. For example, as of January 31, 1982, a surplus of $175 million in Federal fuel assistance funds remained unobligated and unexpended by the States. And under the Reconciliation Act, States already may add $257 million from other block grants to fund their fuel assistance shortages.

Finally, the fiscal year 1981 fuel assistance program had a $139 million surplus, and 26 States made more than $100 million in summertime surplus heating payments unrelated to crisis need. Maryland, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey alone handed out $48 million in summertime surplus boondoggles.

In order to minimize the budget impact and insure these funds go only to the needy, my amendment would prohibit summertime surplus heating assistance payments and distribution of these funds for purposes unrelated to heating needs.

This $123 million supplemental busts President Reagan's fiscal year 1982 budget and is opposed by the administration.

My waste, fraud, and abuse amendment would minimize the budget impact and insure these funds are made available quickly to those in need—and not to those who request summertime surpluses or funds for nonheating purposes.

I urge my colleagues to vote for my waste, fraud, and abuse amendment.

Mr. Speaker, what my amendment is intended to do is to address some of these concerns that have been expressed during the debate here. No. 1, whether or not the funds would be available after the heating season; that is, funds being expended in the summertime for so-called energy assistance or heating assistance. What this amendment would do would be to close that loophole.

Also, there has been a concern expressed here that States might transfer these funds—funds which are intended to be for energy assistance—transfer these to other purposes. So my amendment would also close that loophole, and require that the States expend these funds for their advertised purpose—for energy assistance.

My amendment is prompted by several concerns that have been brought to my attention as well as to the attention of other Members. For example, last year the Washington Post and other media reported that as many as 26 States had surpluses in their fiscal year 1981 heating assistance programs, and some States distributed as much as $48 million in surplus heating payments in the middle of the summer. In my own State of North Carolina, a constituent reported to me that the State was making college students who were living in their dormitories eligible for the program.

I might point out that after an investigation was started the State did rescind and changed its rule in that respect.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROYHILL. I would be glad to yield to the chairman.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the gentleman's amendment, it is his intention that no part of the $123 million that is before the House today can be used for air-conditioning after May 1. Is that correct?

Mr. BROYHILL. That is correct.

Mr. NATCHER. Also that no part of this $123 million can be transferred to any of the other block grant programs.

Mr. BROYHILL. That would be correct also. That would not prohibit any transfer of the moneys already appropriated. But since this program is a supplemental intended to be for energy assistance, it would seem to me it would be our intent that it would be used for that purpose and not for these other purposes.

Mr. NATCHER. Further, Mr. Speaker, as I understand the gentleman's amendment, no part of the $123 million would carry over into the next fiscal year. Is that correct?

Mr. BROYHILL. That is correct.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman ask unanimous consent to change the date from May 1 to May 31? If he does, I would recommend to my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE), the ranking minority member, that the amendment be adopted.

Mr. BROYHILL. If we get a statement from over here, maybe we have a deal.

Mr. CONTE. I thought we did have a deal. I was going to move to make the date May 31.

I agree with the gentleman. I think there should be hearings by the authorization committees, and I think that we should have some oversight hearings.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the date be changed from May 1 to May 31.

Mr. BROYHILL. I would have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the modification to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. BROYHILL).

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BROYHILL: Strike "May 1, 1982," and insert "May 31, 1982," in both instances where it appears.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will inquire, were there two dates involved?

Mr. CONTE. Both dates; that is right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE) that the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. BROYHILL) be modified, as reported?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOFFETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROYHILL. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MOFFETT. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's effort to try to attack some of the problems that could prevent this bill from passing, but I wonder, and perhaps my friend from Massachusetts can help on this, would this in any way put up an obstacle to the current situation and the situation we have seen in the Northern States where fuel oil dealers with huge accounts receivable are paid throughout the summer, just as the paperwork catches up, and as people snowed under with bills get out from under those?

We have had people who have received assistance in June and July to pay past bills. In other words that whole negotiating process does go on throughout the summer. The language would seem to me to conceivably prevent that from happening.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. BROYHILL) has expired.

(On request of Mr. MOFFETT and by unanimous consent, Mr. BROYHILL was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. BROYHILL. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman. The intent of this amendment is to do precisely what we did, I believe it was, 2 fiscal years ago, and the intent at that time was to encourage the States to design their program so that the assistance was given during the heating season, and that the programs were brought to a close in a timely way and not extended throughout the year. That is the intent here, and I would hope that the States would be on notice and would not have a program such as to have money being expended throughout the summer season.

Mr. MOFFETT. If the gentleman would yield further, I have no desire to belabor this point, except I think it might be important, because I do not think the gentleman wants to encourage a rash of spending on the last 2 or 3 days before the date that the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. BROYHILL. I might point out that whatever date you pick, you have that particular problem, May 1, which I had in the original amendment, or April 1, or whatnot.

I think what really all of this points out is the need for the authorizing committee to do some work on this program. We cannot answer all these questions in an amendment on appropriations.

Mr. MOFFETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield just 1 second further?

Mr. BROYHILL. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MOFFETT. I think that is a very important point, but I am still concerned. I hope that the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE) will get involved in this discussion. Our districts are adjoining; similar situations.

My impression is that our people go through that whole process and that business throughout the summer. I would not want to see us pass this and cut off that process.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROYHILL. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONTE. Two things: This amendment only applies to the $123 million. It does not apply to the $1,752 million that has already passed the House. In discussing this with the gentleman from North Carolina, I raised that point; that I was very, very concerned about bills from energy vendors coming in the very last couple of months, and people may get them in June. That is why we wanted that to go to May 31.

So on the great bulk of it we are going to be all right anyway.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROYHILL. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I want to point out that following the adoption of an amendment like this 2 years ago there was a heat wave in Dallas, and more people died in 2 weeks in Dallas than ever froze to death in the history of the United States. That is one reason that language has not been in there since.

I think the authorizing committee has looked at this. We should also be concerned about heat problems. Heat stroke and dehydration is a very serious thing people cannot get away from as easy as putting on coats, and this $123 million we are providing is because the amount of money provided in the substitute that was adopted in December was not sufficient and the people are going to have heat problems next summer. They have increases in their bills, too.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. BROYHILL) has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Speaker, people with cooling bills have problems because they were cut back in the same substitute that cut back the people that are having heating bill problems. So what this amendment would do is take this $123 million, use it only for people who have heating problems, and then when summer comes we will not have any of that money available to those who were cut back by the substitute with their cooling bills. So why should this be limited to those who have heating bills instead of spreading it across the board, unless we are going to come back with another supplemental in the summer to take care of the cooling problem. The same energy costs that went up for those with heat problems, it has also gone up—electric bills have gone up 16 percent—they are going to have trouble.

□ 1650

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I yield.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman is correct in the history that he recites. I think as a practical matter, on the floor today, that the gentleman's amendment does no great harm because it does assure Members that there will be none of these funds which will move into the other programs, and so we will not have, in essence, a back door replenishment of some of the programs even though some of us might think that would be useful.

So, the gentleman is correct on his point. I think the other sections of the amendment make it advisable to adopt it.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. In essence, it changes the distribution between heating and cooling. That is in the authorizing legislation. Members ought to be aware of what they are doing.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr Speaker, I move to strike the appropriate number of words, and I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. LIVINGSTON).

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank my distinguished chairman for yielding to me.

If I could, I would like to engage the gentleman from North Carolina in just a tiny bit of colloquy, and ask him about his amendment.

With respect to the approximate 17 States which the Department of HHS has indicated to us have already registered their intent to transfer funds out of this program which has already been appropriated, is there anything in the gentleman's amendment which would prohibit them from transferring up to $200 million out of the energy block grant and allot them to other programs, and then draw on the $123 million that is being appropriated here?

Mr. NATCHER. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BROYHILL. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the possibility would still exist that the States could transfer out of this moneys that have been heretofore appropriated and then use this money?

Well, that is still a possibility, but there is no way that I can get at that kind of loophole in this particular bill.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I agree with the gentleman. I thank him for his answer.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts (Mrs. HECKLER).

Mrs. HECKLER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I also wish to commend the committee, the gentleman from Kentucky, and my colleague from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE) for their leadership on this issue. But, I wish also to point out to the House that there is an available supply of collected funds which could be diverted to finance low-income energy assistance.

The GAO in its report commented on the Department of Energy and the need to resolve the billions of dollars in alleged oil pricing violations. At the present time, there is $500 million in an escrow account which cannot be paid to aggrieved customers because they cannot be identified. These funds are in escrow and could be diverted to low-income energy assistance, as I have proposed in H.R. 5290, which I introduced last November.

I support the legislation today, but I think that if we are going to collect these funds, they should be available to the United States, that we should not only look to overpayments in social security or food stamps or misdirections and transfers in low-income energy, but recapature the funds of the major oil producers who have not repaid the Government for their overcharges and violations.

I would hope that the authorizing committee would schedule hearings on that issue so that funds that could be made available this minute, sitting in the Treasury, without mandate of the Congress, could be diverted to the problems we are confronting on this floor.

I urge my colleagues to support the passage of House Joint Resolution 392, the urgent supplemental appropriation for the Department of Health and Human Services, and I ask them to support my legislation, H.R. 5290, the Low-Income Energy Trust Fund Act, which would finance, at no cost to the Government or the taxpayer, low-income energy assistance and weatherization for years to come.

Following this vote, we will be asked to approve House Joint Resolution 391, a second urgent supplement appropriation for the Labor Department to support State unemployment offices and services. In my home State of Massachusetts, the State division of employment security has announced plans to lay off 515 employees and close, or consolidate, offices in 11 communities—including Fall River—because of a shortage of funds. Ironically, the need to keep these offices open, and to retain the services of the job placement and training personnel who work in them, has rarely been more urgent.

The unemployed cannot pay their bills and during this unusually severe winter heating bills must be paid or people will freeze. But the unemployed will have increasing difficulties finding new jobs if we, in the Congress, allow State employment agencies across this country to lay off job counselors or to close their doors because of lack of funds.

These emergency appropriations are needed now so that the unemployed have trained, professional help for finding jobs and receiving benefits while they search for new employment.

We have not the time and we cannot afford to become bogged down in budgetary disputes when thousands of truly needy families face the prospect of no heat the rest of this winter.

I intend to vote for both of these emergency funding resolutions and I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting both of these measures.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NATCHER. I yield.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I think one thing ought to be clear. The gentleman from Louisiana stated that there are 17 States that have filed plans to transfer some of this money. I want to point out for the record that those 17 States filed those plans immediately after reconciliation, long before the winter or anything else. They did it because they wanted to protect themselves. If it was a very mild winter, they could use the money. They did use the money for home heating. Of course, we all know what happened this winter.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. BROYHILL), as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

Mr. MOFFETT. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will inform the gentleman that the objection is not timely,

Mr. MOFFETT. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike the last word, and I rise in support of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by addressing my remarks to the gentleman from Louisiana, and if he is here, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. MILLER). I really think that in a way we must be dealing with two different worlds here, because I know my friends who spoke against this bill are sincere in their efforts to try and cut out wasteful spending.

But where we come from, at least, there is enormous hardship. I certainly cannot defend every single aspect of this program, but I can tell the Members that when people in need turn for help, be it from this or the health bills, or whatever, they find very little of it, and I certainly do not find a great deal of cheating and fraud and abuse in this particular type of program.

I think if we are going to focus on and attack this kind of program, we ought to realize that we are talking about chickenfeed compared to the enormity of the tax cut and the enormity of the defense increase. You know, it is nice to separate those things out and pretend they are extremely separate and they are not part of the same budget, but the $800 billion or so of tax cuts over 5 years is a form of spending, as we all know; as is the $1.5 trillion on defense.

It is unfortunate, when we turn our sights on cutting spending, we focus, it seems to me, so frequently on a program like this. Should we improve it? Of course, but as Mr. CONTE has said so eloquently, and as our great chairman, Mr. NATCHER, pointed out, there is a documented need in at least most of the country for this money.

Now, again I think it is important to note that we are only bringing these funds up to last year's figures and the level provided for in last year's reconciliation bill. We are not doing anything extraordinary. This does not represent any great new spending, and in many cases, we are really talking about the difference between life and death.

It might seem melodramatic, but we are in fact talking about the difference between life and death. Our country has not done a great deal in the way of studying hypothermia, but the British have, and we are beginning to learn how to measure and analyze hypothermia, and we are finding out that it can occur below 70° F. At least, preliminary analyses show that it has been occurring this winter to a great extent and it represents a very serious problem for the elderly.

The subcommittee that I am privileged to chair just held a hearing in Philadelphia and found that there were at least 6,600 families that are without heat, totally unable to pay their fuel bills. Who testified to that? The president of the local gas utility. The president of the Philadelphia Gas Works in most eloquent testimony said that their unpaid bills in that company rose from $5 million last year to $15 million this year, and they know that there are thousands of families who are unable to pay their bills.

As we look to the future, we begin to realize that this is a drop in the bucket compared to the problem that confronts us. The President's program, just released, would cut fuel assistance by 30 percent, and I ask my colleagues on this side of the aisle who have spoken in support of this bill to use their influence, fleeting though it may be, to attempt to change the President's program.

In addition to that, the Northeast-Midwest Institute's analysis shows that food stamp recipients would lose $5.25 for every $10 received in energy assistance, over $200 million a year if the President's program goes through.

□ 1700

So I think it is time to put this whole fuel assistance thing into perspective.

I recall, I say to my friend from Louisiana (Mr. LIVINGSTON), that no great analysis went into the $12 billion in oil tax breaks that were voted, that will benefit certainly the State of Louisiana and others much more than they will States like mine. I do not recall the kind of scrutiny going into those oil tax breaks of $12 billion when we voted them not too long ago. I wish we had that kind of scrutiny.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOFFETT. I yield to my friend from New York.

Mr. DOWNEY. The gentleman, of course, is making an important statement. I just want to read for the gentleman that public assistance, social services, AFDC, SSI, title 20, the earned income tax credit, low-income energy assistance in child welfare programs in 1981 accounted for 3.3 percent of the budget. Of that amount, low-income energy assistance was a fraction.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has again expired.

(At the request of Mr. DOWNEY and by unanimous consent, Mr. MOFFETT was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. DOWNEY. If the gentleman will continue to yield, we spend an enormous amount of time listening to the welfare mother on the line who may or may not have abused food stamps, of the few college students who may or may not have gotten these benefits when they deserved them, and we spend absolutely no time, as the gentleman pointed out, dealing with the fact that there are people who are cold in this country and have no place else to go but the Federal Government for relief. That is the issue here, and the preposterousness with which we address this issue, and the amount of scrutiny is totally out of proportion to the size and the costs of this program vis-a-vis other programs. I want to thank the gentleman.

Mr. MOFFETT. I thank the gentleman. You would think that some of our friends, for public relations reasons, would do that, given the fact that the polls show overwhelming majorities of Americans think the President's program favors only the rich and does nothing for the rest of the people, and that they would seize upon this.

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOFFETT. I yield to my colleague from Connecticut.

Mrs. KENNELLY. I thank the gentleman. I would just like to take a moment to say that I am very much in support of the supplemental low-income fuel program. I would say also to my colleague, coming from Connecticut this morning, realizing and campaigning in that State, it is necessary and it is needed to alleviate undue hardship for older people, of which we have many more each year.

Mr. Speaker, last year Congress appropriated $123 million less than was authorized in the Budget Reconciliation Act for the low-income energy assistance program. However, the unexpectedly cold winter led many States to use up their funds at a faster rate than anticipated. This action of the House is designed to meet the potential problem of States running out of money before the end of the winter heating season.

The Commerce Department reports that this winter has been the coldest in this century. As a result, the demand for energy to heat homes has been running about 7 percent above an average winter.

Connecticut will receive $36.2 million from the Federal Government to assist low-income individuals with their heating bills. The action taken today will free another $2.5 million for use by Connecticut citizens.

To date 30,000 households in Connecticut have been served by the program; $10 million has been spent to serve these households. The State expects 75,000 of an eligible population of 130,000 to apply for aid.

Given the severity of the weather, I am pleased to see the House move so early in the session to meet the heating problems our citizens will face this year.

This action is necessary. This action is needed. It will eliminate unnecessary suffering by our growing number of older citizens.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOFFETT. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. SHANNON. I want to thank the gentleman for yielding and thank him for his remarks.

I would like to remind our colleagues that in the past this program has been dealt with on a bipartisan basis in this body. Once again, I am very proud of the leadership of my colleague from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE) and my other colleague from Massachusetts (Mr. BOLAND) and, of course, Chairman NATCHER. We have to remember this a program that was an integral part of the national energy policy. The point was that as oil prices went up, and as windfall profit taxes went up, this program would be there because the problems that were going to result from those energy price increases were really a national responsibility.

I think this problem of poverty is a national responsibility. I really do respect the position of the gentleman from Louisiana and the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has again expired.

(At the request of Mr. SHANNON and by unanimous consent, Mr. MOFFETT was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. SHANNON. If the gentleman will continue to yield, my colleagues from Pennsylvania and Louisiana have been perfectly consistent in their views on this. I respect those views and we all want these programs to work efficiently and work well, and we will work with you to see to it that they do work efficiently.

But we are the body that is supposed to be closest to the people. The message we are getting from the people that we represent, whether we be Democrats or Republicans, is that this is an important program to help our constituents make these transitions, and they are still undergoing transitions to higher energy costs.

The needs are very great. While we are going to be focusing much in this session of the Congress on budget figures and deficits, and big, large numbers, I think that it is appropriate for us to sit back and say: Is this program appropriate? Is it working? If we ask ourselves those questions, at least from our perspective, I think it is working and it is one that is worthy of our support, all of our support.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOFFETT. I would be happy to yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I appreciate the gentleman yielding. I want to say that all of the gentlemen who have spoken, all of the past speakers have made some excellent points, and particularly the gentleman from Massachusetts. In fact, he has I think enlightened us all on the purpose of this program. I do not disagree with anything he said.

I would simply add that it is also the purpose of all of us here in this body not to unnecessarily waste taxpayer dollars. I think the gentleman would concede that point. My purpose is not to take heat away from the people who are truly in need, but simply to make sure that a program is functioning and functioning efficiently.

Mr. MOFFETT. I thank the gentleman for his comments, and I know that he is convinced that his position would not result in money being taken away from people who need heat. But I think it would, and I am sure he does not intend that.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOFFETT. I yield to my friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARKEY. I would like to say to the gentleman from Louisiana that I think he raises a very legitimate concern, and that is why I think it appropriate for us to adopt the suggestions of the gentleman from North Carolina, because none of us want to see an indiscriminate expenditure of public moneys for any purposes if they are not justified. I think the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina improves the bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has again expired.

(At the request of Mr. NATCHER and by unanimous consent, Mr. MOFFETT was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MOFFETT. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the Members of the House, as I understand now we have probably two speakers left, before moving the previous question, certainly we want to hear from these Members. Then, Mr. Speaker, we will go to the next bill, the emergency bill on employment services, and finish it by 6 o'clock. We should finish the next bill by 6 o'clock. I have no unanimous consent request. I just wanted to call that to the attention of the Members.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Speaker, I have no particular illusions about the passage of this measure. But I do want to say it is not going to pass with my vote.

I do want to focus some attention on why I take that position, because it is not because I do not understand the problem, and I do not think other people who have opposed it oppose it because they do not understand the problem. In fact, just a few weeks ago I got together with a number of social service agencies in my district that are responsible for administering this program in my area, and they were concerned about the fact that there might not be enough funds to get by in the winter. We sat down and came up with a combination of funds through this program and a combination of local funds, and we now believe, in my area anyhow, that we are going to have sufficient money to get through the winter. In other words, we put together a program to meet the particular problem, and I think that is needed around the country.

I think I can have concern for the problem and yet question this program. Why do I question the program? Because in reality the real arguments here are in large part economic. This is the case of Congress spending money that this administration says it does not need.

Is the administration being hardhearted or coldhearted by making that statement? Absolutely not. The administration has not had one State that has told them that their share of the $1.752 billion is not going to be sufficient to meet the needs under this program. Nobody has said that it is not going to be enough money at this point. Therefore, they have to assume that there will be enough money with just what has already been appropriated.

Also, I think we have to take a look at this whole subject from the standpoint of all the things we have been hearing in the last few days about massive deficits in Government. We have all heard the cry of the blues from both sides of the aisle about the fact that we have these massive deficits coming up and we do not understand how it ever came about. It must be the administration's fault because we have huge deficits facing us.

Here is a case where the administration is telling us that the money is not needed, they do not need to spend this money, and yet we are going to shove $123 million down their throats. It just seems to me that it is time to start taking a look at the issue and be counted right here on this issue about those big deficits. Here is a program that in the 4 years it has been in existence, 4 fiscal years that it has been in existence, the cost of the programs have gone up by 484 percent. That is a 120-percent increase a year.

We have heard a lot of percentages used here today. We have heard how much the price of oil has gone up, what percentage has gone up on the number of recipients and so on, but nobody has contended that anything in the inflationary factors or in the cost factors have gone up by 484 percent in the course of 4 years.

□ 1710

And yet that is what the increases in this program have been. That is Federal spending out of control. That is what produces massive deficits. I think it is high time that we recognize it when it faces us. When you have got a situation where the administration is telling us that they do not need the money, that no one has requested this money, then I think it becomes very, very problematical for this Congress to step in and say, "Well, take it anyway; we are going to spend it anyway regardless of whether or not you need it."

We cannot afford to go on with massive increases in Federal spending and not recognize that those are going to produce huge deficits. That is precisely what has happened. That is precisely what is going to continue to happen so long as we come to this floor and foist upon administrations money that they say they do not really need.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARKEY. I hope that the gentleman is able to harness some of that indignation and anger that he has for the increase in this program for the defense budget when that program comes to the floor, because I think that the argument that the gentleman has just made could be applied to a program which will increase by just about the same magnitude in just about the same timeframe, over the next 4 or 5 years, and we will be looking to him to give to us the same kinds of arguments that perhaps we can use in a close scrutiny of that program because its impact is about 100 times the one that this one is upon the overall economy of our country.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for his statement, and certainly I intend to scrutinize the defense budget. I do think that some of the defense spending that is being proposed is a little too high, given the fact that we have these kinds of deficits. I will be very glad to scrutinize it.

But I will say to the gentleman that at the time when many of these programs we are talking about, this program being a part of it, that 484 percent, at a time when those programs were increasing over a 25-year period by 1,500 percent, the defense budget during that same period of time rose by about 200 percent. So there is a considerable difference in the amount of increases that have gone over a 25-year period in particular areas of spending. So it seems to me that we do need to focus on some of these programs that have been rising the fastest.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WALKER) has expired.

(On request of Mr. MARKEY and by unanimous consent, Mr. WALKER was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. MARKEY. If the gentleman will yield further, there are some intervening historical factors, though, that have had a considerable effect upon the price of oil and gas, and that includes the situation in Iran, the oil decontrol bill, the natural gas deregulation bill, all these bills that came through Congress since the inception of this program. And to discount those measures and to almost allocate them to conditions that are beyond the control of this Congress is really unrealistic.

I mean the people out there who are in these low-income categories, are completely subject to economic realities that are beyond their control in the world economy and to decisions that are made by the U.S. Congress, and a very large proportion of these increases which are now being tried to be accounted for, the increase in the budget allocation in this area, are just natural consequences of those decisions that we made here in Congress, decisions that were made in Abu Dhabi. I do not think it is a fair criticism to be made of the program that there have been indiscriminate increases.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WALKER) has again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. WALKER was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. WALKER. I will take my 1 additional minute to reply to the gentleman. I would say to the gentleman that I will reverse his argument on him. I would say that some of those same factors exist in the defense budget, that there are massive increases in Soviet spending for defense armaments, and so on, and some of the reasons why we have to increase the defense budget are also related to factors that are outside of this body to make a determination.

So insofar as the gentleman makes that argument for the program he is talking about, I would ask him to look at the defense budget in light of some of the realities around the world.

I would also make the point that regardless of some of these outside factors, we are still talking about a massive increase when you talk about Federal spending going up by 484 percent in one program alone, and I still would contend that that contributes to the massive budget deficits that we are now faced with. It is high time that we get this economy in order.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike the last word, and I rise in support of the supplemental appropriation.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the supplemental appropriations for low-income energy assistance.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the severe cold weather and the dramatic increase in gas and fuel oil costs have made this particular legislation necessary.

In fact, last year with the same appropriation that will be attained with this supplemental, nearly all the funds, save $29 million, were used for fuel assistance and that was one of the warmest in the last 100 years.

This year, our actions have set an authorization that is nearly $372 million below the previous $2.247 billion commitment level under the windfall profit tax program.

This year the degree days of heating are 20 percent above the average.

And gas and oil cost increases are 20 to 30 percent higher than last year.

When we passed the windfall profits tax we made a commitment to people that some of the funds, in fact a substantially greater amount, should have been made available to ease the impact. Now last summer's reconciliation process leveled that program at 1.875—I feel inappropriately and unfairly. Congress compounded that when the December continuing resolution was underfunded by $123 million. Today some advocates would have us deny the level of support they supported last summer in light of the coldest winter in 100 years.

Commonsense would seem to dictate adequate support for this vital program.

Mr. Speaker, opponents of this measure have suggested that States take money from other block grants to support fuel assistance—that type of logic is ironic because many of these same programs that were block granted were cut by over 20 percent when they were passed to the States.

Is this the New Federalism that we have been hearing about, that less dollars and Federal support is really more? This type of logic strips away the type of fraud that can be perpetrated on the States with block grants and New Federalism.

Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the fact that Minnesota has new income limits and more careful management of this program have resulted in a misleading payout in some areas.

The fact of the matter is that in Minnesota as a whole we have money remaining, but in St. Paul, an urban area of nearly a half million people, the CAP agency will run out of funds in March and will not be able to meet the applications.

In addition, let me remind my colleagues that the weather has been so severe to preclude people from travel and no doubt has given the misleading impression of less need. When the large bills come due in the near future, I can assure you that even this increase will be woefully inadequate to meet real need.

When the windfall profit tax was cut under the outrageous special interest 1981 tax measure some thought should have been given to the commitments made to the low-income people in our Nation.

I think a far better remedy would be to correct the hemorrhage of dollars in that tax measure rather than placing the burden of these special interest tax cuts on the low income and poor of this Nation whom I feel strongly deserve our support.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Speaker, House Joint Resolution 392, the supplemental appropriation for more funding for energy assistance, is another of our well-intentioned Federal programs. I have no quarrel with the original purpose.

But, when it started it was to be a temporary program to give needy Americans some assistance to pay fuel bills after the large price increases of the oil shocks.

The temporary program has claimed immortality. As usual, needs have arisen to claim available benefits. A perpetual constituency has been created. As soon as we put up the money, we had to pay for cooling and for fringe areas which are not cold. Whenever we set up a new program, everybody gets on board. The prophecy has been self-fulfilled.

And so an energy welfare plan has joined the lineup of specific welfare plans each with separate rules and separate administration. Marching along in that lineup with energy welfare is housing welfare, food stamps, AFDC, SSI, disaster relief and a host of local welfare programs.

It is laudable for Congress to solve some people's problems with some other people's money. If it must, it should fashion a single welfare program, with a single set of rules, a single economical administration.

The unending array of specific welfare programs represents bad policy with good intentions. This bill, House Joint Resolution 392, ought to be defeated.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the supplemental appropriation to increase funding for the fuel assistance program.

As we all know, this has been an extremely harsh and severe winter for the northeastern States. Record subzero degree temperatures have dominated the national weather scene during these past few months.

In my own district, there are many individuals who cannot afford to keep warm this winter due to high and constantly rising fuel prices. The fact that the administration has lacked the ability or interest in bringing some much needed relief to thousands of unemployed Americans, the situation has only worsened.

It is no secret that in this Nation many older people are dying each day from accidental hypothermia, a rapid drop in body temperature. In other words, they are freezing to death. Many people have literally been forced to make a choice between freezing to death or starving. In fact right here in Washington, D.C. our Nation's Capital, less than six blocks from where we are all gathered today—a poor man, Jesse Moore froze to death because he could not afford the cost of fuel. It has been reported by Dr. Richard Besdine of the Harvard Medical School that over 25,000 Americans die of hypothermal-related causes each year.

Despite the ill effects the cold winter has had on this Nation's elderly and poor, despite the devastation that last year's budget cuts brought to the fuel assistance program, the Reagan administration is proposing that the fuel assistance program be cut still further. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that the Reagan adminstration's callousness toward the poor and elderly of our Nation is unequaled to any administration in my lifetime.

I would suggest that the Reagan administration heed the words of President John F. Kennedy who said,

If a free society will not help the many who are poor, it cannot save the few who are rich.

● Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Joint Resolution 392. Although $77 million in home heating assistance is available to low-income Michigan residents this year, officials across the State of Michigan fear it will not be enough to meet increased needs. The funds, from Federal sources, are $26 million less than Michigan asked for under initial estimates of weather conditions. Needless to say, the cuts are due to reductions in the Federal budget that was passed, without my support last year.

Now additional funding is needed so that energy assistance payments can be made to help low-income citizens. In many instances these payments are literally lifesaving. There have been scores of new accounts of tragedies in American cities this winter. Low-income citizens, especially children and the elderly, are suffering and some are even dying from insufficient heat. The intense cold weather this winter, coupled with the truly needy's inability to pay for heating fuels or energy efficiency improvements and repairs, makes it imperative that our citizenry be provided with adequate heat. It is mandatory that we pass this measure today.●

● Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, the low income energy assistance program is a key element of the "safety net" which Government has helped establish for the poor, handicapped, and elderly in this Nation. Its objective is a simple one—to help keep American citizens from freezing to death in their homes because they are unable to pay their heating bills.

The elderly are the most susceptible to this problem. They survive, day to day, on fixed incomes in an economy of rising prices. Today, many Americans are paying $300 to $400 for their monthly heating bills, but the stark fact is that some people have had bills as high as $2,000 in the northern parts of the country in this most severe of winters. In an average year, according to a Harvard physician, as many as 25,000 older Americans are likely to die from "accidental hypothermia." In the face of that, this administration wants to reduce funding drastically; only by the action of the House today are we insuring that this won't happen.

We all share the hope of reducing the Federal budget and achieving an economic recovery. But I do not believe that we should do it by leaving the poor, elderly, and handicapped of this society alone to freeze to death in their homes.

I trust that my colleagues will overwhelmingly support the supplemental appropriation for low-income energy assistance before us today. It is essential that we in the Congress provide what the administration appears unwilling to do, and that is to make it possible for the American people to survive this winter.●

● Mr. BONKER. Mr. Speaker, I urge support for House Joint Resolution 392, a $123 million supplemental appropriation for the low-income energy assistance program.

Without this supplemental appropriation, many of our Nation's elderly and poor will be forced to make choices among food, medicine, and heat. No American should have to make such a choice.

The average, retired social security recipient receives $373 a month; an aged widow receives $348; a disabled person receives $396. The list goes on. Unfortuntately, the dollars do not go very far.

This money will bring the total fiscal year 1982 appropriations level for this program to $1.8 billion—the level authorized by the Omnibus Reconciliation Act.

Some have talked about how the supplemental appropriation will increase the 1982 budget deficit.

But our choice today must be made with full awareness of other cuts in services to the elderly and poor which already have occurred, and those yet to come.

As Energy and Commerce Chairman JOHN DINGELL and his subcommittee chairmen noted last week in looking at proposed cuts for 1983, as many as 25,000 older Americans may freeze to death each year from accidental hypothermia while the administration plans to terminate weatherization of homes of the elderly, poor and disabled.

In my State of Washington and throughout the Pacific Northwest, electric rates soon will soar as much as 300 percent. Some public utility customers will be lucky—their heating bills will double.

Let us focus on areas of Federal spending that truly can be cut. No person need be cold or hungry in the process.●

● Mrs. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the supplemental appropriation for low-income fuel assistance. Since its inception, this valuable program has enjoyed the consistent and unwavering support of Congress. Its importance to the elderly and low-income households it serves has become even clearer during these harsh winter months.

Last year, the Congress appropriated $1.8 billion for the fuel assistance program, and the administration has acted quickly and responsibly to speed the distribution of the funds during the winter months, when they are most needed.

Unfortunately, consumers in Frost Belt States like Rhode Island, faced with one of the coldest winters on record, are using 25 percent more energy to heat their homes, while the price of fuel oil has risen by another 15 percent. The combined effects of the severe weather and the price increase has outstripped the funding made available by our $1.8 billion appropriation last year, which did not allow for inflation in fuel prices.

Failure to provide the supplemental appropriation before us today—which would provide an additional $123 million for fuel assistance—would seriously strain already hard-pressed State budgets and curtail assistance to our low-income and elderly citizens struggling to make it through a very cold winter.

Mr. Chairman, Federal fuel assistance should be considered a basic promise that Congress made to the American public in exchange for the decontrol of oil prices. In light of the fact that the price of home heating oil has risen by a factor of five since 1973, we can hardly turn our backs on our responsibility to the people who have been hardest hit by the price increases. Many of those who receive Federal fuel assistance are elderly citizens on fixed incomes who are spending as much as 40 percent of that income on energy bills.

The chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the gentleman from Mississippi, and the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Massachusetts, deserve special thanks for moving so quickly to bring this responsible resolution before the House—we should act just as responsibly and approve the resolution today. I would like to say a particular word of thanks to the gentleman from Massachusetts, who has fought so hard and so well to see that the Congress honors it commitment to fuel assistance for needy citizens.

The $123 million in supplemental assistance provided by this resolution will hardly break the budget, but it could well be the key to survival for many of our senior citizens during these cold winter months.●

● Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Joint Resolution 392 making an urgent supplemental appropriation of $123 million for the low-income home energy assistance program.

Mr. Speaker, most of us, if not all of us, have felt the bite of the rising costs of heating a home. According to the Department of Energy, home energy fuel costs rose 16 percent between October 1980 and October 1981. For 1982, energy prices are expected to increase 2 percent for fuel oil, 22 percent for natural gas, and 9 percent for electricity.

Added to the problem of escalating energy prices is that fact that we are experiencing one of the coldest winters in the 20th century. During January 1982, temperatures ranged from 6 to nearly 20 degrees below normal in most of the country.

Mr. Speaker, at a time when many middle and upper income Americans are complaining about the high cost of fuel, rising energy prices, and harsh weather conditions make an already difficult situation for low-income Americans even worse. Poor Americans spend proportionately more of their income on fuel costs than other families. When hit with additional heating expenditures, these families have little flexibility in their budgets to accommodate the extra burden. This sacrifices spending on food, medical care, clothing, or other basic essentials.

Last year, when the House Appropriations Subcommittee on Labor-HHS-Education considered this program, the members felt strongly that $1.85 billion should be provided for low-income energy assistance, the same amount available in fiscal year 1981.

Because of budget constraints, the subcommittee reluctantly recommended $1.8 billion. This amount was further reduced in congressional action on the fiscal year 1982 continuing resolution to $1.752 billion at the urging of the Reagan administration. Now, because of that reduction, fewer funds are available to meet greater needs. As a result, many States have actually reduced benefits to eligible persons while heating costs have increased. In Ohio, 280,000 persons received assistance to meet 40-60 percent of their home heating costs. This year, only 250,000 persons are being served with only 13-40 percent of their energy assistance needs being met.

Mr. Speaker, poor Americans are reeling from Reagan budget cuts in food stamps, welfare payments, medical assistance, and other programs which help to improve their quality of life. The funds contained in House Joint Resolution 392 do not begin to address the real human needs of poor Americans. The funds contained in this measure will not fully meet even the energy assistance needs of the poor—far more would be required to do that. They will, however, go a small way toward a more realistic and responsible program to help poor people cope with the higher cost of energy.

The need for this type of assistance is overwhelming. Winter is here. It is my hope that House Joint Resolution 392 will be approved by the Congress and signed by the President without delay.●

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the joint resolution and the amendment thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 342, nays 62, not voting 30, as follows:

[Roll No. 5]

YEAS—342

Addabbo	Deckard	Hatcher
Akaka	Dellums	Hawkins
Albosta	Derwinski	Heckler
Alexander	Dicks	Hefner
Anderson	Dingell	Heftel
Andrews	Dixon	Hendon
Annunzio	Donnelly	Hertel
Anthony	Dorgan	Hightower
Applegate	Dougherty	Hiler
Ashbrook	Dowdy	Hillis
Aspin	Downey	Holland
Atkinson	Duncan	Hollenbeck
AuCoin	Dunn	Holt
Bailey (PA)	Dwyer	Hopkins
Barnard	Dyson	Howard
Barnes	Eckart	Hoyer
Beard	Edgar	Hubbard
Bedell	Edwards (AL)	Hughes
Beilenson	Edwards (CA)	Hunter
Benedict	Emerson	Hyde
Benjamin	Emery	Jacobs
Bennett	Erdahl	Jeffords
Bereuter	Ertel	Jenkins
Bethune	Evans (DE)	Jones (NC)
Bevill	Evans (GA)	Jones (OK)
Bingham	Evans (IA)	Jones (TN)
Blanchard	Evans (IN)	Kastenmeier
Bliley	Fary	Kazen
Boggs	Fascell	Kemp
Boland	Fazio	Kennelly
Bolling	Fenwick	Kildee
Boner	Fiedler	Kindness
Bonior	Findley	Kogovsek
Bonker	Fish	Kramer
Bouquard	Fithian	LaFalce
Bowen	Flippo	Lantos
Brinkley	Florio	Latta
Brodhead	Foglietta	Leach
Brooks	Foley	Leath
Broyhill	Ford (MI)	LeBoutillier
Burton, John	Ford (TN)	Lee
Burton, Phillip	Forsythe	Lehman
Butler	Fountain	Leland
Byron	Fowler	Lent
Carman	Frank	Levitas
Carney	Frost	Long (LA)
Chappie	Garcia	Long (MD)
Chisholm	Gaydos	Lowry (WA)
Clausen	Gejdenson	Lujan
Clay	Gephardt	Luken
Clinger	Gilman	Lundine
Coats	Gingrich	Madigan
Coelho	Ginn	Markey
Coleman	Glickman	Marlenee
Collins (IL)	Gonzalez	Marriott
Conable	Goodling	Martin (IL)
Conte	Gore	Martin (NC)
Conyers	Gradison	Martin (NY)
Coughlin	Gray	Matsui
Courter	Green	Mattox
Coyne, James	Gregg	Mavroules
Coyne, William	Guarini	McClory
Crockett	Gunderson	McCurdy
D'Amours	Hagedorn	McDade
Danielson	Hall (OH)	McEwen
Daschle	Hall, Sam	McGrath
Daub	Hamilton	McHugh
Davis	Hammerschmidt	Mica
de la Garza	Harkin	Michel
Mikulski	Ratchford	Stark
Miller (CA)	Regula	Staton
Mineta	Reuss	Stenholm
Minish	Richmond	Stokes
Mitchell (MD)	Rinaldo	Stratton
Mitchell (NY)	Ritter	Studds
Moakley	Roberts (KS)	Swift
Moffett	Roberts (SD)	Synar
Molinari	Rodino	Tauke
Mollohan	Roe	Taylor
Montgomery	Rogers	Traxler
Morrison	Rosenthal	Trible
Mottl	Rostenkowski	Udall
Murphy	Roukema	Vander Jagt
Murtha	Roybal	Vento
Myers	Rudd	Volkmer
Napier	Russo	Walgren
Natcher	Sabo	Washington
Neal	Savage	Watkins
Nelligan	Sawyer	Waxman
Nichols	Scheuer	Weber (MN)
Nowak	Schneider	Weber (OH)
O'Brien	Schroeder	Weiss
Oakar	Schulze	White
Oberstar	Schumer	Whitehurst
Obey	Seiberling	Whitley
Ottinger	Sensenbrenner	Whittaker
Oxley	Shamansky	Whitten
Panetta	Shannon	Williams (OH)
Pashayan	Sharp	Wilson
Patman	Siljander	Winn
Patterson	Simon	Wirth
Pease	Skeen	Wolf
Pepper	Skelton	Wolpe
Perkins	Smith (IA)	Wortley
Petri	Smith (NE)	Wright
Peyser	Smith (NJ)	Wyden
Pickle	Smith (PA)	Wylie
Porter	Snowe	Yates
Price	Snyder	Yatron
Pritchard	Solarz	Young (AK)
Quillen	Solomon	Young (FL)
Rahall	St Germain	Young (MO)
Railsback	Stangeland	Zablocki
Rangel	Stanton	Zeferetti

NAYS—62

Archer	Grisham	Moorhead
Badham	Hall, Ralph	Nelson
Bafalis	Hance	Parris
Bailey (MO)	Hansen (ID)	Paul
Brown (CO)	Hansen (UT)	Rhodes
Burgener	Hartnett	Robinson
Campbell	Huckaby	Roemer
Collins (TX)	Hutto	Roth
Corcoran	Ireland	Rousselot
Craig	Johnston	Shaw
Crane, Philip	Lagomarsino	Shelby
Daniel, Dan	Lewis	Shumway
Daniel, R. W.	Livingston	Shuster
Dannemeyer	Loeffler	Smith (AL)
Dreier	Lott	Smith (OR)
Edwards (OK)	Lowery (CA)	Spence
English	Lungren	Stump
Fields	McCollum	Tauzin
Frenzel	McDonald	Thomas
Fuqua	Miller (OH)	Walker
Gramm	Moore

NOT VOTING—30

Biaggi	Dickinson	Marks
Breaux	Dornan	Mazzoli
Broomfield	Dymally	McCloskey
Brown (CA)	Early	McKinney
Brown (OH)	Erlenborn	Pursell
Chappell	Ferraro	Rose
Cheney	Gibbons	Santini
Crane, Daniel	Goldwater	Wampler
DeNardis	Horton	Weaver
Derrick	Jeffries	Williams (MT)

□ 1730

The Clerk announced the following pairs.

Mr. Biaggi with Mr. Daniel B. Crane.
Mr. Derrick with Mr. Brown of Ohio.
Mr. Chappell with Mr. Wampler.
Mr. Weaver with Mr. McKinney.
Mr. Rose with Mr. Pursell.
Ms. Ferraro with Mr. DeNardis.
Mr. Early with Mr. Broomfield.
Mr. Dymally with Mr. Erlenborn.
Mr. Brown of California with Mr. McCloskey.
Mr. Breaux with Mr. Dickinson.
Mr. Santini with Mr. Horton.
Mr. Williams of Montana with Mr. Jeffries.
Mr. Mazzoli with Mr. Goldwater.
Mr. Cheney with Mr. Dornan of California.

Mr. SHAW and Mr. RALPH M. HALL changed their votes from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. STENHOLM changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the joint resolution was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

URGENT SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, 1982

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the order of the House on Thursday last, I call up the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 391) making an urgent supplemental appropriation for the Department of Labor for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982, and ask for its consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

H.J. RES. 391

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982, namely:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

Employment and Training Administration

Grants to States for Unemployment Insurance and Employment Services

For an additional amount for "Grants to States for unemployment insurance and employment services", from the Employment Security Administration Account in the Unemployment Trust Fund, $343,490,000, of which $146,700,000 shall be available only to the extent necessary to meet increased costs of administration resulting from changes in a State law or increases in the number of unemployment insurance claims filed and claims paid or increased salary costs resulting from changes in State salary compensation plans embracing employees of the State generally over those upon which the State's basic grant was based, which cannot be provided for by normal budgetary adjustments: Provided, That any portion of the funds granted to a State in the current fiscal year and not obligated by the State in that year shall be returned to the Treasury and credited to the account from which derived.

Advances to the Unemployment Trust Fund and Other Funds

For an additional amount for "Advances to the Unemployment Trust Fund and Other Funds", $1,950,000,000, to remain available until September 30, 1983.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. WHITTEN) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, first I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE) for debate purposes only, pending which I yield myself 5 minutes.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the consideration of House Joint Resolution 391, and that they may include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, on today, as required by law, our Committee on Appropriations had before us the Secretary of the Treasury, the Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisors and the Budget Director. Perhaps many of you do not know that the law requires that our Committee on Appropriations have this annual overview hearing. In the hearing this morning with these gentleman, I thought we may have developed several things that would be of interest. May I say, in the presentation of these gentlemen, that what they had hoped for 1 year ago when they were before us has not come to pass. Conditions are much worse than was expected and they still believe that they will improve in the future. One of the evidences that conditions are not as good as they might be is the fact that the Office of Management and Budget has requested this $1,950 million for increased unemployment compensation.

I might add that approximately half of the local employment offices were scheduled for closing and I understand perhaps some have been closed; so we present you today a resolution which is urgent, as was the earlier one about the CCC which I presented to you.

□ 1740

May I say that I appreciate the fact that the OMB has asked for these funds. We all recognize that they are absolutely necessary. We got unanimous consent that it be considered in the House. Later, when it developed that the Budget Committee had filed a statement showing the budget situation to be somewhat different, we got a rule, so we are all working together in bringing this resolution here. It is very necessary.

My colleague from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE) joins in this action, and I hope, since the Senate is ready to act this afternoon on this measure if we get it to them, I would express the hope that under this permission to revise and extend remarks that each Member who wishes to do so would take advantage of that unanimous-consent request so that we might get through as quickly as possible.

Again, may I say the fact that this becomes necessary is indicative of the fact that some of the things proposed by the administration have not turned out as well as all of us hoped. But that fact being true, there is no excuse not to meet this problem which exists, and I hope my colleagues will join with us in getting it through as fast as we can. We have been assured the Senate will take it up this afternoon if we can get it over to them as it is.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. WHITTEN) and the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. NATCHER) for the prompt manner in which they set my bill down for hearing and approved the expenditure of $210,450,000 to provide the funds for the employment service offices that will keep them open for the balance of the year.

It was incredible to me, just incredible, that there were no funds that were available at a time when the number of unemployed men and women of this country are exceeding 9 million people. This bill will correct that. I hope the House will pass it very quickly.

Mr. WHITTEN. I thank my friend from Illinois. He is always on his toes. It is a pleasure to work with him.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, will these supplemental funds be distributed to the States under the same formula as other employment turnbacks under the Federal Unemployment Tax Act? If so, then the Commonwealth of Virginia and other States with good employment records have much to lose.

Mr. WHITTEN. There is no change whatever, as I understand it. It would be additional funds through the regular operation. Of course, the Appropriations Committee does not determine the allocation formula. That is done by the Labor Department pursuant to the existing authorizing statute.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, by law, employers in all States must pay the Federal Government approximately seven-tenths of 1 percent on the first $6,000 earned by each of its employees. This money is collected by the Federal Government. At least 35 percent, or five-fourteenths, is taken off the top and the remainder is returned to the States for their unemployment programs. The Office of Management and Budget indicates that, approximately, a 60-percent return of these funds can be considered normal.

My State, however, last year received only $18 million of the approximately $51 million she should have under the formula, and that only amounts to about 35 percent of our total contributions or 25 percent less than the average State receives.

Virginia can be proud for her employment efforts, but should she be penalized for her successes?

Granted, this is a Federal program. The Federal Government collects these funds for the good of the Nation. If every State could handle its own problems, there would be no reason for Federal unemployment programs.

Yet why should we in the Commonwealth have to close 26 of our local Virginia Employment Commission offices and lay-off some 800 employment personnel because we do not get adequate return on our contributions?

Virginia received approximately 43 cents on each dollar of FUTA tax paid. Yet Alaska received over $3 for every dollar paid in. It is difficult to tell my constituents that, "No, we cannot find you a job because our unemployment funds are going to other States." It is difficult to tell a man or woman who is unemployed and still providing for a family that someone else needs the money more.

Mr. Speaker, for the Federal unemployment program to work, two things must make it work. Provisions must be made to allow specialized, extremely depressed areas the opportunity to meet their special needs. But more importantly, each State must believe it is at least being treated fairly by Washington. This, Virginia does not.

Because of a depleted Federal unemployment trust fund, Virginia closed many offices statewide. With funds restored, will we be able to reopen the same offices and rehire the same personnel we were forced to let go? If this supplemental is distributed under present formula, we may not.

And let us look at the allocation formula. How many Members of Congress know that the formula involves some 90 different variables? How many can name half of those variables? How many realize that one of those variables in "the good judgment of the director of employment services?" Historic unemployment, another variable, might distort benefits to States who have never taken adequate steps to address their employment problems. Virginia has addressed these problems and has a good plan for employing her citizens, yet it is subsidizing other States who may or may not have ever come to grips with the same problems.

My friends in Oregon, though suffering enormous unemployment, are also given substantially reduced return on FUTA paid. Why?

Perhaps another of those 90 variables is that no State starting with "O" and ending with "n" can receive adequate benefits.

When my office called to get a list of these variables, my staff was told,

"Well, I know there must be a copy of the list some where. I am sure we use it all the time."

I think it is about time that the Congress and the Administration began looking into this matter a little more closely. The Virginia congressional delegation has already expressed its concern over the formula in a letter to the Secretary of Labor.

It is indeed a worthy effort to provide for jobless Americans throughout the country. But I for one, and neither can any of my colleagues in the Virginia delegation, explain to a jobless Virginian that his State is at the bottom of the Federal unemployment assistance barrel so that people in other States, paying no more, can receive his benefits.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to cooperate with us and let us get this to the Senate so they can act today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE).

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I wholeheartedly support House Joint Resolution 391 and the timely fashion in which our chairman and the gentleman from Kentucky, and the full committee have moved on this important matter.

I am likewise pleased that the administration also recognized the timely and critical needs of the employment services and unemployment insurance programs.

The supplementals that are before us today represent a genuine commitment to meet the needs of the unemployed, and I am further pleased that Republicans and Democrats alike in the Congress stand ready to take expedient action to move these supplemental measures.

When the Congress passed the continuing resolution back in December, it was clearly the intention of that resolution to produce savings where legitimate savings were possible, but it was not the intention of that resolution, or my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, to seriously handicap or render ineffective the unemployment insurance service or the employment services program.

In fact, we went to some length to try to safeguard against the possibility of there being insufficient funds to properly administer the unemployment programs.

You may recall that on December 10 we included a "History of Legislative Intent" in the proceedings to clarify the intentions of the continuing resolution since no actual report was possible.

That legislative intent included the following language under the title, "Grants to States for Unemployment Insurance and Employment Services."

It is the intent of this resolution to assure that State unemployment offices will not be closed and employees will not be laid off as a result of limitations on trust funds provided by this resolution. The Secretary of Labor has indicated that if under the January 1982 economic assumptions the 1982 workload for processing unemployment compensation claims is higher than assumed in the September budget request, the administration will submit a supplemental request. . . .

Several factors, not all of which were foreseen, coupled with 8.9 percent unemployment to drain funding from the Employment Services Offices among the States. While some reductions in staffing of those offices were clearly the intent of the September budget request, it was not the intention of the continuing resolution to further reduce those offices at all.

Specifically, what do these supplementals do?

First, they provide $210 million to the Employment Service. As you know the Employment Service provides State assistance to job seekers, including job finding and placement, counseling, and testing and other services to workers. The committee has included sufficient funds to restore the Employment Service staffing to a national total of 24,800. This compares with a current level of 17,500.

Second, the supplemental provides $133 million to cover the additional costs of processing unemployment insurance claims for the balance of this fiscal year. These funds are needed now to enable the States to process the added workload in a timely manner.

The third, and largest segment of the supplemental is for "advances to the unemployment trust fund and other funds" in the amount of $1.950 billion. This supplemental is necessary to provide additional resources to the Federal unemployment account—$1,450,000,000—and to the extended unemployment compensation account—$500,000,000.

I also wish to point out again the timely nature of this recommendation. During our committee's hearings with Assistant Secretary Angrisani of the Department of Labor, we urged Mr. Angrisani to work with every State to keep their employment services offices open during this brief period while the Congress worked to provide the necessary funds. He said he would notify the States of the likelihood of these funds coming into the pipeline very soon and would urge them to keep their UI and ES offices operating and employees on board.

I am pleased that we are here now with the committee's resolution and with an administration request to take care of this real need.

I urge all of my colleagues to support the joint resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. LIVINGSTON).

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I appreciate the gentleman's yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this urgent supplemental appropriations request. I want to thank the distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. WHITTEN) as well as the chairman of our Subcommittee on Labor, Health, and Education, the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. NATCHER), for the expeditious manner in which they handled this bill.

I want to especially thank the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE) and his able counsel, Jim Fabiani, for the excellent work they performed, with the administration, in getting the supplemental appropriations approval for Employment Services.

As the gentleman from Massachusetts stated earlier, it was our intent in the December 14 continuing resolution to realize effective cost savings, and—if economic conditions warranted it—the administration had given us assurances that they would send up a supplemental request.

The administration did just that and wisely included additional funding for the Employment Service.

The administration supports the present bill before us.

Mr. Speaker, the bill before us today will prevent the eventual closure of 23 of our 40 unemployment offices in the State of Louisiana. In addition it will preserve hundreds of jobs and allow for the continued timely payment of UI benefits and employment services.

While Louisiana's situation, in comparisons to other States, had been temporarily mitigated by approval of emergency appropriations by our ex-colleague, Gov. David Treen, House Joint Resolution 390 will provide a long-term solution to this entire situation

Mr. Speaker, I ask the Members of the House to support this bill and urge quick approval by our colleagues in the Senate.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. O'BRIEN).

Mr. O'BRIEN. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Joint Resolution 391 to provide supplemental appropriations for unemployment compensation payments, and for State employment services.

Last December when we passed the third continuing resolution the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE) assured us that the administration would submit a supplemental budget request should the cost of providing grants to States for unemployment insurance and employment services rise higher than estimated at that time.

Today we are responding as we planned to do in December. Because of the recession these costs have risen and the administration kept its promise in submitting a request for supplemental funds.

In this bill we are providing an additional $1.9 billion to pay unemployment compensation benefits through the end of fiscal 1982 next September 30 and $130 million to process those claims.

In addition, the bill contains $210.5 million for grants to State employment services. This will prevent the closure of 22 job service offices in Illinois and many other similar offices in other States throughout the country.

Much as I regret having to call upon my colleagues to approve additional expenditures in these difficult times, the supplemental appropriations in this bill meet real emergency needs and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to my good friend, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. HILLIS).

Mr. HILLIS. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the measure, House Joint Resolution 391—the supplemental appropriations to provide additional funding for the Department of Labor. I appreciate the efforts of Congressman NATCHER and Chairman WHITTEN in bringing this measure before the House in an expedited manner. This bill is necessary because of the unforeseen effects of budget cuts forcing the closing of State employment offices.

The Preamble to the Constitution states that one of the major functions of the Federal Government is to promote the general welfare of the people of the United States. That obligation requires a commitment on our part to help the unemployed find new employment; return to being contributing members of our society; and get off the welfare roles as soon as possible.

In Indiana the employment security division has done an excellent job in finding new employment for those who have lost their jobs. Indiana's work incentive program achieved a total welfare savings of almost $35 million in fiscal year 1981. The work incentive program, or WIN as it is known, is administered by the State welfare department and the Indiana Employment Security Division. It seeks to break the welfare dependency cycle by developing job opportunities, providing employment training and furnishing needed support services. State and county welfare WIN offices work with local employment security division offices in helping recipients find jobs. More than 6,750 persons left AFDC rolls in 1981 as a result of WIN.

Unfortunately, unless we pass this measure, the WIN program will be substantially curtailed because of the lack of employment placement services operated by that State. The WIN program represents only a portion of the fine work the employment placement services provide. In fiscal year 1980 a total of 96,476 persons in Indiana were placed through employment services offices at an average hourly wage of $3.71. If you annualize that figure, and assume a 30-hour work week, $558,364,498 was earned in wages by those who might otherwise been without work. In other words, Indiana collected $7,817,103 and the Federal Government collected $50,252,805—not counting the $74,820,843 is social security taxes—from people working due to placements through the employment security division.

The December employment rate in Indiana was 12.4 percent. That figure however, does not take into account the thousands of individuals who have lost their jobs and moved to other States. Since Indiana's unemployment has been high for so long, the official unemployment rate does not reflect the true seriousness of the situation.

I can assure my colleagues that people in Indiana are worried. In talking to my constituents, I sense a feeling of concern for the future. For those who are unemployed, there is a sense of helplessness, and in some cases hopelessness of finding a decent job in the near future.

There is already a feeling that Washington does not understand, nor care, about the unemployed in these areas of high unemployment. The closing of the Employment Service offices, and the curtailment of employment placement services, can only add to the feeling of despair. As I mentioned earlier, I believe we have an obligation to prevent that from occurring.

In Indiana we stand to lose 10 full service offices and the placement services in 12 more due to the budget reductions contained in the last continuing resolution. One of the offices due to be closed is in Peru located in Miami County, Ind. The unemployment rate in Miami County is 16.4 percent. Imagine the feeling people get who are unemployed in an area with 16 percent unemployment, when the unemployment offices close and placement services cease.

I am sure no Member intended for these closings to occur when we passed the budget cuts. Let us correct this situation and pass this bill.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. PARRIS).

Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join today with my colleagues from the Commonwealth of Virginia in a colloquy on the unfairly low rate of return which Virginia receives on the taxes it pays into the Federal Unemployment Tax Act trust fund.

While I can certainly understand that those States with a greater need would receive more Federal funding, I find it blatantly unfair to penalize States with a good record of providing employment services.

Last year Virginia paid $51.5 million into the trust fund yet only received $18.5 million from the Department of Labor to administer the Virginia Employment Commission's unemployment compensation and employment service functions.

This low level of funding has led to the closing of 26 local offices around the State and both the Alexandria and Manassas offices in the Eighth Congressional District.

I would hope that the formula which is used to determine the level of payments for each State is revised to insure a more equitable distribution of the funds since the current formula has not allowed the VEC to provide the services which the employers of the Commonwealth want and for which they pay.

It is indeed difficult to tell an unemployed worker that he will receive no assistance in locating employment because Virginia has had a recent history of low unemployment.

I will support the passage of House Joint Resolution 391 with the hope that this inequitable formula can be corrected in the very near future.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. ROBERT W. DANIEL, JR.)

Mr. ROBERT W. DANIEL, JR. Mr. Speaker, the supplemental funds provided in this resolution are badly needed to continue services to unemployed Americans. As unemployment rises, we must give people the means to find productive and rewarding jobs. It is certainly a better investment to provide job services than simply pay unemployment or welfare benefits.

While this supplemental appropriation will help to alleviate the problems which State employment agencies have experienced, we in Virginia are suffering from another more fundamental problem. The formula used to distribute the Federal unemployment tax to the States is an insult to the people of Virginia. While Virginia is 14th in the dollars contributed to the unemployment tax, it ranks 51st in the number of dollars returned to the States.

Although some redistribution of the unemployment tax funds might be desirable, no reasonable person can argue that the current formula is fair.

It is the existing formula, more than any recent reduction in funding, which has forced the Virginia Employment Commission to close 41 of its offices statewide. I hope that this supplemental appropriation will allow some of those offices to reopen. Yet, I know that Virginia will not be able to fully meet the needs of its citizens until more of the tax Virginians contribute is returned to their State.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to another good friend, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF).

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the ideas expressed by my distinguished colleague, Mr. BLILEY, in this matter. It is my feeling that consideration and attention must be directed toward rectifying this inequity in the Federal Unemployment Tax Act in its distribution of funds to Virginia. This is important to the people of our State.

While considering this supplemental appropriations bill for the Department of Labor, it is necessary to voice these concerns in hopes of attaining changes in the distribution formula which resulted in the closing of 41 of Virginia's 67 employment service locations.

The national average per State in this employment security system is a return of 90 cents on each dollar contributed to this fund by employers. Virginia, however, is well below the national average, percentagewise, ranking last among the 50 States with a return of only 43 cents on each dollar. This inequity must be corrected.

I urge that further consideration be given to altering the current formulas used to distribute FUTA tax dollars. A much more balanced and efficient method should be studied and implemented.

Mr. CONTE. Last but not least, Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. TRIBLE).

Mr. TRIBLE. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this joint resolution and urge my colleagues to restore funding for important employment services around this country.

At this time of very high unemployment we must help those people that are out of work and looking for jobs to find meaningful employment.

Budget reductions have forced the Virginia Employment Commission to announce the closing of 41 VEC offices and the abolition of 788 VEC jobs.

These closings mean the loss of nearly a thousand jobs for the employees who work in VEC offices. It also means that, at this time of high and growing unemployment, jobless men and women will receive less and less assistance in finding jobs and in qualifying for unemployment benefits.

It is also time for the Labor Department to review and revise the formula which reallocates FUTA tax dollars to the States for use by State employment commissions.

Under the present inequitable formula, the Commonwealth of Virginia gets back only 42 cents of every FUTA tax dollar collected in Virginia and sent to Washington. This is the lowest percentage return for any State, and is unfair.

This arbitrary allocation formula, combined with the reduced funding produced by the recent continuing resolution, has produced a severe funding crisis for Virginia's Employment Commission.

This House must take action to insure that important services, such as job counseling, testing, and job placement, as well as assistance in qualifying for unemployment benefits, will be available.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to my good friend, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DAVIS).

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the resolution.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to the attention of the Members of the House that unanimous consent was obtained for all Members of the House to have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks.

The President of the United States sent this to the Congress as an emergency supplemental request. It is for $343,490,000 that goes into the grants to States for unemployment insurance and employment services account, and $1,950 million, Mr. Speaker, that goes into the advances to the unemployment trust fund and other funds account.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this seems to be unanimous. I know a number of Members would like to have their remarks in the RECORD. Unanimous consent has been obtained.

Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced on January 29 by the chairman of our fall Committee on Appropriations, Mr. WHITTEN. We also sought and obtained the rule from the Rules Committee that made consideration of this bill possible. Mr. Speaker, this bill would not be before the House today without the efforts of the gentleman from Mississippi. It has been a distinct honor and privilege for me to serve with him for the last 27 years on the Committee on Appropriations. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi is one of the ablest Members of this House, and we are grateful to him for his efforts on behalf of this bill to restore funds to the State employment service and for unemployment compensation benefits.

Mr. Speaker, in order for us to finish by 6 o'clock, I yield such time as she may consume to the distinguished gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. OAKAR).

Ms. OAKAR. I thank the chairman.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Joint Resolution 391 and urge my colleagues to act favorably on this legislation that provides $343.4 million in grants to the States for unemployment insurance and employment services. This bill also advances $1.95 billion to the unemployment trust fund to assist the States in payment of unemployment insurance benefits.

In my own State of Ohio, the unemployment rate is now at 12 percent, the second highest in the country. There are now 600,000 unemployed workers in Ohio and during the week of January 18, 1982, there were 270,000 claims filed for unemployment insurance benefits. Because of the massive draw-down on the State's trust fund reserves, my State has been forced to request a loan of almost $400 million from the Government to pay unemployment insurance benefits.

With unemployment as serious as it is in my State, it would be unthinkable to curtail any service intended to help unemployed workers find new jobs. Yet 38 employment service offices are threatened with closing by the end of March, and some 1,000 employees may lose their jobs unless additional moneys are provided quickly to maintain the necessary funding and staffing levels.

I applaud Chairman WHITTEN's action in this matter and appreciate his concern for the serious situation many States find themselves in because of irresponsible cuts made in funding to the States for the administration of the unemployment insurance and employment service programs.

The unfortunate outcome of these cuts has been the threatened closing of hundreds of employment service offices around the country and the potential loss of thousands of employment service jobs, such as placement counselors and job interviewers.

I am relieved that the administration saw fit to request Congress to enact this supplemental appropriations bill, but I am, frankly, appalled that the administration would have permitted this situation to exist in the first place. At a time when we have record high unemployment and sharply increased claims for unemployment insurance, we certainly should not be laying off the very persons who are trained to handle these claims and to assist in job searches in an efficient and effective way.

As a former member of the National Commission on Unemployment Compensation, I was able to study firsthand the unemployment insurance program and to acquaint myself with many of the problems associated with the program's financing, administration, and benefit coverage. One of the most important recommendations the Commission made was to increase grants to States for administrative financing for unemployment compensation and the employment service and to increase the staffing levels of the employment service in order to provide effective job search assistance to unemployment insurance claimants and other unemployed workers.

Mr. Speaker, I urge that this House act speedily and favorably on this legislation to insure that sufficient funds are available to the States to continue their unemployment insurance and employment service responsibilities without the need for the closing of any offices or the laying off of any employees.

Thank you very much.

□ 1750

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. GARCIA).

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this emergency supplemental appropriation to cover the costs of claims by unemployed persons who have lost their jobs as a result of the recession and the administration's policies.

In doing so, I also wish to call to my colleagues' attention the administration's mishandling of the budget of the Bureau of Labor Statistics which is charged with the responsibility for compiling and publishing the monthly labor force statistics.

Mr. Speaker, last fall when all Federal agencies were forced to reduce expenditures by an additional 12 percent, the BLS budget was reduced by almost 20 percent, or nearly $5 million. It seems now that OMB has made a mistake and unless Congress corrects its carelessness, BLS will be forced to take extreme measures which translates to disrupting the monthly flow of unemployment data as well as inflation figures for several of the remaining months in fiscal year 1982.

What this all means, Mr. Speaker, is that Congress, and specifically the Senate, will be asked to add $5 million of this bill for BLS. In effect, we will be asked to cover OMB's errors. I personally believe we should restore the money. It is simply the right thing to do.

But we should also remember this little episode as we begin our deliberations on the fiscal year 1983 budget.

Mr. Speaker, at this point I would like to insert a list of the programs reduced or eliminated as a result of the President's 12-percent reduction in the budget of the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The material follows:

U.S. BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS

PROGRAMS REDUCED OR ELIMINATED IN THE 12-PERCENT REDUCTION

1. Labor Turnover survey program eliminated.

2. Current Population Survey—May supplement on multiple jobholding eliminated.

3. Current Population Survey—Redesign to take account of 1980 Census changes delayed.

4. Current Population Survey—Number of households added to improve Local Area Unemployment Statistics reduced.

5. Research to improve State and local area unemployment statistics eliminated.

6. BLS Family Budget program eliminated.

7. Consumer Price Index for Fairbanks, Alaska, eliminated.

8. Pricing samples for Consumer Price Index for Wage Earners and Clerical Workers (CPI-W) reduced. Same prices will be used for the All Urban Index (CPI-U) and the CPI-W.

9. Planned revision of Producer Price Index delayed.

10. Planned completion of Export and Import Price Indexes delayed.

11. Work stoppage statistics sharply reduced. Coverage will be limited only to strike covering 1,000 or more workers.

12. Five Industry Wage Surveys eliminated.

13. Analysis of Collective Bargaining Agreement provisions eliminated.

14. Survey of Labor and Materials Requirements in the Construction Industry eliminated.

15. BLS economic growth and occupational outlook program reduced.

16. Reduction in number of occupations in the Occupational Outlook Handbook.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. SAVAGE).

Mr. SAVAGE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of passage of House Joint Resolution 391, legislation that makes critically needed supplemental appropriations for unemployment compensation. As a cosponsor of this important legislation, I strongly urge my colleagues to pass this measure and to push for its speedy enactment into law. This bill would restore the administration inspired cuts in the jobs service and will make it possible to pay for the ever increasing number of unemployment claims nationwide.

If it were not for the cold and callousness of Reagan and his surrogates over in the office of mis-management and cut-it, this legislation would not even be needed. But because of the actions he and his henchmen took last year and especially last fall, over 500 people in my State of Illinois, alone, whose job is to help find employment for others were, themselves, near victims of Reagan's indiscriminate budget ax.

I find it unconsionable that in this time of Reagan-induced recession and outrageously high unemployment, that in these trying times when millions of blacks, browns, and whites are out of work and wondering where their next meal is coming from, people over in the White House seem to show more concern about the condition of china place settings than the condition of the poor and working poor.

Again, I urge my colleagues to pass this measure today, and in the subsequent days of this session to reverse this antipeople, more-money-for-guns budget of this administration, whose legacy to the American people undoubtedly will be that of catering to the rich, while ignoring the starving and poor.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. DAN DANIEL).

Mr. DAN DANIEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the joint resolution.

I desire to associate myself with the question raised by the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY).

For a number of years, members of our State delegation have been trying to get some relief for the Virginia Employment Commission on our allocation. It defies logic that we have met with such resistance to what appears to be a justified complaint.

If one is to follow the reasoning of the Department of Labor to its logical conclusion, Virginia is being penalized for doing an efficient job. The fact that we have had less unemployed and have been more successful in placing those who have been temporarily out of work has been a disadvantage in the allocation of these funds.

VEC offices which have been serving a useful purpose have been forced to close and the load of work will therefore fall heavier upon those offices which are kept open. Those who are out of work in the areas where offices are closing will be further away from sources of assistance. Perhaps this ultimately will improve our relative standing among the States but this is scarcely an objective toward which we want to strive.

We hear a great deal today about the need for more effective and responsive government—and I certainly concur with this objective. Reducing the cost of government also is a goal to which I lend support. However, it makes little sense and discourages initiative when the formula under which these people operate penalizes them for doing a good job. I urge again that this system be reevaluated.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. DICKS).

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, my district and the State of Washington, suffers from extremely high unemployment. As of December of 1981, the unemployment rate was 11.3 percent and over 193,000 Washingtonians were out of work, principally due to massive layoffs in the forest products and related industries.

Currently, unemployment in the Tacoma, Wash., area is 11.5 percent and could go higher.

Traditionally, the Washington State Department of Employment Security has provided unemployment benefits to unemployed workers and their families and has attempted through its job service offices to help these workers find other employment.

In 1981, 39 State job service offices provided unemployment benefits to tens of thousands of Washingtonians who were out of work and approximately 3,800 employment security employees helped these individuals receive benefits and find new jobs. These 3,800 employees served approximately 150,000 unemployed workers.

Unfortunately, due to the cuts in unemployment benefits and funding for personnel to assist the unemployed, 753 Washington State employment security workers were RIF'd—at a time when Washington State unemployment was rising from about 8 percent in January 1981 to about 11.5 percent in January 1982.

Currently, 2,600 State employment workers must serve over 214,000 unemployed workers in Washington State. These employees not only must help the unemployed obtain their benefits, but they also must help them find employment.

The administration's budget cuts have also reduced the number of State offices providing employment location services from 39—about 1 per county—to 16 statewide.

This situation causes longer delays in processing unemployment benefits because there are fewer employees to serve greater and greater numbers of unemployed. Additionally, the unemployed often must travel further and wait longer for the scarce State employment security specialists who have traditionally assisted them find new jobs.

For the unemployed, the situation of being without work—which is wrenching enough—is further aggravated and made more difficult through no fault of their own.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the Congress and this administration must provide the resources to reduce and to eliminate the suffering of our unemployed. We have an obligation to the millions of Americans who are without jobs and need unemployment benefits and assistance in finding work. This emergency supplemental request will help in this regard.

I also believe that this subcommittee and the full Appropriations Committee must assist those individuals who have exhausted their 39 weeks maximum of unemployment compensation. In Washington State an estimated 65,000 individuals will exhaust their unemployment benefits during 1982. This number is almost double the number of individuals who exhausted their benefits in 1981—in a State which qualifies for the full 39 weeks of regular and extended unemployment benefits due to its extremely high rate of unemployment.

Mr. Speaker, in many cases the Appropriations Committee on which we serve is the last hope for the survival of workers who have borne the brunt of this recession.

We have a responsibility to act for them and for their families.

As I have in the past, I pledge to work with you to help these citizens so that they will not fall through the hole of any so-called safety net.

Thank you.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. FOUNTAIN).

Mr. FOUNTAIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the legislation.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. LOWRY).

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. Mr. Speaker. I rise in strong support of this legislation. The House Appropriations Committee and the leadership are to be commended for their quick response to what is without question the most personally traumatic of all the symptoms of our ailing economy—escalating unemployment.

In my home State of Washington, the magnitude of the unemployment problem cannot be overstated. The State employment security office recently reported that the State's unemployment had reached 11.1 percent in December, 2.2 percentage points above the national average and the highest in the State since they began keeping unemployment statistics in 1947. This figure does not take into account those who have exhausted their unemployment benefits or have given up their search for employment out of frustration. In the week ending January 9, 22,379 Washington residents filed for unemployment insurance, an increase of over 10,000 from the previous week. For the same week nationally, initial claims totaled 1,073,030, an increase of 379,000 from the preceding week. During the Boeing slump in the early 1970's when billboards advised the last person leaving Seattle to turn out the lights, statewide unemployment peaked at 10.4 percent. This month, it is estimated that unemployment will exceed 12 percent.

The Seattle-Everett area alone presently has over 75,000 individuals collecting unemployment pay. My district, in the Seattle area, is representative of many urban areas. Boeing is laying off aerospace workers, small businesses are closing their doors and homebuilders and realtors are idled by high-interest rates. But relative to the rest of the State, we are fortunate. In those counties highly dependent on the forest products industry, unemployment is well above 15 percent with no end in sight.

It is difficult to imagine a government service which could be more useful and productive than the job-finding services or employment security offices as they are known in Washington State. Our employment security offices place an average of 90,000 persons in jobs every year. They also monitor claimants for unemployment compensation, attempting to place individuals as soon as they begin to receive unemployment compensation. Because of the cuts in funds for these job placement centers, Washington State has been forced to lay off one-half of its 500 employment security officials and close 14 of the 31 State offices. It simply does not make sense to close the doors at these offices at the very time unemployment is reaching record levels.

The action we take today will at least make the shock of unemployment somewhat easier for the thousands searching for work. However, we all recognize the overwhelming issue we must face—there are fewer and fewer jobs to be found every day.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. VENTO).

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Joint Resolution 391. I commend the Appropriations members' action which would provide the urgently needed funding for the unemployment trust fund and the Labor Department Employment Service. This bill indeed is urgently needed.

While the recent unemployment statistics have shown a curious drop in unemployment rates, those rates are still too high. It is ridiculous to be implementing policies which place employment placement personnel into the ranks of the unemployed at the same time as millions of Americans are looking for work.

The Minnesota Employment Division has done an outstanding job in providing assistance for the jobless. But the Federal budget cuts in conjunction with the State economic crisis have placed the viability of the State placement service in doubt.

Mr. Speaker, we all want to see full employment. How we achieve this goal may be subject to dispute, but the success of State employment services is documented. In dire times, we cannot close the door of hope to the unemployed. The Federal Government has a responsibility to aid the States. The short-term costs are far outweighed by the long-term benefits. Mr. Speaker, the December continuing resolution is revisited again—hopefully the administration and House/Senate counterparts will be more reasonable in appraisal of the needs of the unemployed in light of the deteriorated economic situation as a result of unsound national economic policies enacted in 1981. I urge my collegues to vote in strong support of House Joint Resolution 391.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from West Virginia (Mr. RAHALL).

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support for this measure, House Joint Resolution 391, and would like to commend the leadership and the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Mr. WHITTEN, and the subcommittee chairman, Mr. NATCHER, for bringing this legislation to the floor in expedited fashion. This resolution answers a growing need throughout the Nation and attempts to alleviate somewhat the sharp pains of an economy in trouble.

As we all know, when the continuing resolution was passed late last year, an annual unemployment rate of 7.5 percent was projected. Little did we know that such figure would be overly optimistic, and now the administration is projecting a 1982 rate of 8.9 percent. I fear, as I am sure many of you do, that this figure may also be optimistic in the end.

In the wake of the budget ax, almost 15,000 unemployment job service offices have closed all over the Nation. In my home State of West Virginia, 25 of the State's 44 job service offices have shut down, and 95 unemployment workers have been put out on the street themselves. In short, we have been witnessing a sad irony, where individuals who assist the unemployed have become the unemployed.

Over the past few years, job service offices have annually helped connect some 3 to 4 million willing workers with gainful employment—a practice I believe that is far better and far cheaper than leaving these individuals to languish in an unemployment line.

When the administration pushed for this reduction last year, evidently they gave little consideration to the fact that for each 1 percentage point rise in unemployment $25 billion is added to the ever-growing Federal deficit—a fact the President himself admits.

While this supplemental appropriation will be of great benefit to countless American families, we must realize that it may not meet all the needs that currently exist.

For example, in West Virginia, our employment security commissioner, Jack Canfield, states that the job service program will take a while to be put back on par. Already my State owes the Federal Government $99.8 million for unemployment benefits—and faced with a 7.8 unemployment figure—another $20 million may be needed to meet the claims.

I support House Joint Resolution 391 because it answers the call of the American people. I fear that further calls will be heard in the coming months, as further adverse impacts of the so-called economic recovery package are made known.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. HEFNER).

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the efforts of this body to avoid repenting in leisure the mistakes we have made in haste. I speak specifically of our efforts to pass an urgent supplemental appropriation to meet our legal obligation to the hundreds of thousands forced onto unemployment roles and our moral obligation to put those Americans back to work.

In the waning days of the first session of this Congress, we were forced to pass a continuing resolution written by an administration which said it had all the answers. One such answer was to cut unemployment insurance and employment service funds another 12 percent past cuts made in earlier budget rounds. The result—the closing of between 1,000 and 2,500 local job service offices nationwide and the laying off of approximately two-thirds of employment service personnel. All done at a time when unemployment threatens to go into double-digit figures.

Such an action is not fiscal responsibility; it is fiscal folly. In my State of North Carolina, we may be forced to close 48 of the 85 local and branch employment service offices at a time when we have received more applications for unemployment insurance than at any time since the recession of 1975—the worst year for employment since the Great Depression. Over 230 employment service personnel face losing their jobs immediately. Another 400 will lose their jobs in North Carolina if we do not pass this supplemental. Not only will these people face unemployment and cost the Government more money to pay their unemployment benefits, they will not be available to assist others in finding useful jobs. This is a senseless and unnecessary situation.

The House has before it today a measure to alleviate this situation. I support this wise investment of our dollars, and I urge my colleagues to do likewise.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. FORD).

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Joint Resolution 391. Approval by the House is desperately needed as a stopgap measure to keep open employment security offices throughout the Nation. Under the administration's misguided direction during the consideration of the continuing resolution, severe cuts were made in funding for unemployment benefits and staffing for services to assist unemployed workers. Even in my home State, the Republican-appointed director of the Michigan Employment Security Commission, S. Martin Taylor, readily admitted the lack of foresight by President Reagan and his budget advisers. Before a special meeting of the Michigan Employment Security Commissioners in our State capitol, he said that the continuing resolution enacted at the request of the Reagan administation imposes retroactive budget cuts that "are far more devastating than anyone may have realized."

We cannot afford to make mistakes of this kind at the expense of working people who have a genuine desire to seek new employment or retraining through the employment security offices. I applaud my colleagues at their wisdom in agreeing to this supplemental. When so many of our constituents are suffering so much, it is the least we can do in lending a helping hand.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. WOLPE).

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Joint Resolution 391, and commend the committee for acting so expeditiously on this legislation.

The current economic recession has had a devastating effect on the State of Michigan. The people of Michigan are struggling with the highest unemployment rate in the Nation at the same time that budget reductions at both the State and national level have dramatically reduced important employment assistance programs. Today, nearly 16 percent of Michigan's labor force is without a job, and approximately 60 percent of those without employment have exhausted their unemployment benefits.

The economic decline that is plaguing Michigan and her neighboring States has spread to the rest of the country. With the deepening recession, the national unemployment rate has surged from 7.4 percent in December 1980 to 8.5 percent in January 1982. As the trend of growing unemployment continues, the prospects for a more vital economy dim.

The President himself recently acknowledged every percentage point increase in the national unemployment rate automatically triggers a $25 billion increase in the Federal deficit. Unless we address the problem of unemployment, the deficit will grow exponentially, the money markets will respond by maintaining high interest rates, the recession will drag on, and the ranks of the unemployed will grow still larger.

Mr. Speaker, we all await an economic recovery—and nowhere is that recovery more anxiously awaited—or more desperately needed—than in Michigan. But that recovery will never materialize unless we address the problem of unemployment by taking steps to contain its growth.

I think we begin by passing this resolution.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. AuCoin).

Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I want to make the point that in Oregon we have an unemployment rate of nearly 12 percent, about the second highest in the Nation. In some areas in Oregon we have communities where 60 percent of the able-bodied people are out of work. In the city of Tillamook one out of four workers is out of work. In the city of Willamina, one out of every three workers is out of work today.

I am amazed, as I think most Americans are, and certainly people in my district, that the President of the United States would imply that unemployment is not his problem when he addressed the country in his recent press conference. I am further amazed that the President would give the impression that joblessness is a small problem by pointing to 22 pages of help wanted ads in the Washington Post. I think the President should understand that that is not very much comfort for millworkers and construction workers in my district who are out of work because of high interest rates, high deficits that his policies have caused. I strongly support this legislation. I commend the gentleman from Illinois for introducing it. The chairman of the subcommittee has done excellent work, and I am pleased to have been a party to it.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. Fithian).

Mr. FITHIAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman for yielding. I want to commend the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Yates), and I commend the chairman of the committee for his work in introducing this legislation and for the speed with which he brings it to the floor.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Joint Resolution 391 providing an urgent $210,490,000 appropriation to keep State employment offices open. If Congress does not pass this urgently needed legislation within the next few days, our national effort to get Americans back to work, particularly in high unemployment States like Indiana, will have been dealt a severe blow.

As a result of the Conte amendment to last December's continuing appropriations bill, somewhere between 800 and 1,000 local employment offices nationwide have been closed and probably 13,000 to 15,000 job placement specialists have been laid off, themselves, to join the ranks of the unemployed.

In Indiana—which is now suffering a 12.4-percent unemployment rate—the impact of these cuts would have been serious under any conditions. The Indiana Employment Security Division has announced that unemployment offices in the following towns will be closed later this month if money cut out of the budget by the Conte amendment is not restored.

Local unemployment rate—December 1981

Town:	Percent
Crawfordsville	8.8
Southtown (Indianapolis)	10.1
La Porte	13.0
Linton	13.9
Martinsville	10.2
Peru	13.7
Plymouth	13.9
Shelbyville	13.9
Tell City	15.0
Warsaw	9.8
Winchester	14.7

In addition, if additional funds are not appropriated, job placement services will be terminated at the following offices:

Local unemployment rate—December 1981

Town:	Percent
Auburn	18.5
Augusta (Indianapolis)	10.1
Bedford	22.1
Connersville	12.4
Franklin	9.7
Jasper	10.0
Lawrenceburg	13.0
Lynhurst (Indianapolis)	10.1
Meadows (Indianapolis)	10.1
New Castle	17.1
Portage	11.0
Seymour	17.4

In some States, vigorous State sponsored job-creation programs are making it easier for jobless workers to find productive work without the help of State employment offices. This is not the case in Indiana. The State's efforts, until now, have been ineffective.

Fortunately State employment services have been moderately successful in placing jobless workers in past recessions and in reducing the dollar drain on the State's unemployment insurance fund. The IESD in fiscal year 1980 and fiscal year 1981 made 96,476 and 91,675 placements, respectively. By taking the average hourly wage and average workweek for each placement, figures show that for each fiscal year the IESD job placement activity generated wages in the amount of $558 million and $569 million respectively into the Indiana economy. In short, the IESD's employment services are cost effective—a concept which is totally in line with President Reagan's goals. In addition, the importance of the job service/unemployment insurance relationship cannot be overstated. A Stanford research center survey indicated that the "coordination of UI claims with job service placement efforts shortened unemployment 5 to 7 days, which produces a significant savings in UI (unemployment insurance) benefits."

Over the past few days I have been assessing the potential impact of IESD's threatened office closings. If supplemental appropriations are not provided, the State is planning to shut down employment services in counties where unemployment runs as high as 22.1 percent. Offices which the State has threatened to close located 10,000 jobs last year. They are currently carrying tens of thousands of other unemployed workers on their books, workers who still need help in finding a job. If these 23 offices are shut down, local workers will have to turn to offices in other counties which already have their hands full taking care of their own unemployed. These remaining offices simply will not be able to locate jobs as effectively as we need them to.

If supplemental appropriations are not provided by the Congress and the IESD goes through with its plan to shut down its offices, here is what it will mean to communities throughout my State:

Crawfordsville's unemployment security office would be completely shut down, forcing 1,500 jobless workers to look elsewhere for help in finding work. The city has been hard hit by layoffs from the Lone Star plant and other major employers.

In Indianapolis at least 22,000 jobless workers would be shuffled from one employment office to another. The city has been hit by major layoffs by several large employers, among them RCA, Western Electric, Ford, Chrysler, Chevrolet, and International Harvester.

In La Porte, Ind., layoffs by local companies have led to a 13-percent unemployment rate. The local employment service office located 957 jobs last year, but 8,000 unemployed workers are still depending on the office to help them find a job. If this office shuts down, these workers will have to turn to an office which already has its hands full taking care of its own unemployed. These offices simply will not be able to locate jobs as effectively as we need them to.

Linton's unemployment office, which was assisting 2,152 area residents to find work after layoffs by RCA, General Electric, and other major area employers, would be completely shut down.

In Martinsville where local employment office workers were trying to place 1,500 jobless workers in productive jobs, IESD personnel would themselves join the ranks of the unemployed.

In Peru, a city struggling to cope with layoffs from General Tire, Peru Foundry, Owen Corp., and United Technology, some 1,937 jobless workers would be forced to look somewhere else for help in finding a job.

In Plymouth some 1,300 unemployed workers would be asked to drive 50 miles to make use of IESD job placement services.

In Shelbyville some 2,000 jobless area workers, many of them idled by layoffs from Ford, Chrysler, International Harvester, and Western Electric, would not be able to turn to their unemployment office for help in finding a job—it will be closed.

In Tell City, a community struggling with its worst unemployment problem in a generation, some 2,500 unemployed would be told that their unemployment office will be closing its doors; 2,000 unemployed Warsaw area residents would be asked to make a 65-mile round trip to Elkhart to make use of the State's job placement services.

In Winchester, a city experiencing its worst unemployment since the Great Depression, some 2,000 workers idled by layoffs from American Hose Corp., Sheller-Globe, Overmyer Mold Co., and United Body would face a 40-to-50-mile drive to the nearest IESD office.

In Auburn, Bedford, Connersville, Franklin, Jasper, Lawrenceburg, New Castle, Portage, and Seymour the loss of job placement services at local unemployment offices would mean that individual workers will be idled for longer periods, that local unemployment rates will stay high longer, and that local employers with jobs to fill will have a tougher time getting qualified people to fill them.

I cannot overemphasize how strongly Indiana's jobless workers want these offices to be kept open. Basically they want jobs, not a handout. Their employment offices are among their most important resources in finding a job.

People in Indiana need jobs badly. The employment service offices which Indiana's State government plans to shut down if supplemental funds are not made available located 10,000 productive, private-sector jobs last year. This emergency legislation will help keep these offices open. I strongly urge passage of this crucial legislation.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PICKLE).

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, the most important thing these employment offices all over the country do today is help people find jobs. That is the positive part of our program. As a former State commissioner of the Texas Employment Commission, I know that agency does great service in helping people find jobs.

I am glad the administration has recommended this appropriation, and I compliment the committee for taking this action because it states our need to get people jobs. That is what we are trying to do at this particular time.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consumer to the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. SMITH).

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, in the interest of time I will not take some separate time. I just asked the gentleman to yield to thank him for the work he has done as the chairman of the subcommittee, and to also point this out: This not only involves unemployment, but also involves the job service, and in some States like Iowa, that is equally as important as the unemployment comp part of it. In this legislation we are giving them flexibility so that they can use some of the money in those States that need to do so to enhance their job service capability as well as to do the other things that need to be done.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from the State of Illinois. It is a pleasure to yield to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. YATES).

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding, and thank him for his kind remarks.

I think we ought to know, Mr. Speaker, that this bill does not contain all the funds that it should. It does not contain funds for the so-called work incentive program. It is $77 million short in that respect. It is a program that I consider to be essential, because it offers the opportunity for people who are on welfare to obtain the assistance that they need to get jobs.

It is a good program, and it is a program that is productive. I have talked to the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. NATCHER) about it, and he has told me that he is going to look favorably upon it.

I thank the gentleman.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. BOLAND).

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

I want to commend the gentleman from Kentucky for his leadership, and also my colleague from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE) for joining in bringing this to the floor in a very expeditious manner. I also compliment my colleague from Illinois (Mr. YATES) for sponsoring legislation with reference to the job service offices.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly support House Joint Resolution 391. I was pleased to have been an original cosponsor of House Joint Resolution 387, a bill introduced by Mr. YATES, which would have provided $210 million for administrative expenses for job services offices, and which has been incorporated into House Joint Resolution 391.

As my colleagues are aware, unemployment is currently at record levels. The national unemployment rate far exceeds the economic forecasts of the Reagan administration and has resulted in a request for an additional $1.9 billion for unemployment insurance payments to the States. The need for more money to pay jobless benefits has underscored a problem that the administration created for itself, with the budget cuts it pushed for in the continuing resolution adopted in December. The administration's bill reduced the grants to States for unemployment insurance and employment services account by more than $200 million, a reduction that is being absorbed by closing State-operated employment offices all across the country.

These offices, quite simply, help the unemployed find jobs. During the past few years, personnel in these offices have directed between 3 million and 4.5 million workers annually toward available employment. It makes no sense, in ny judgment, to curtail these activities, sending thousands of job placement specialists to join the ranks of the unemployed, at a time when their services are so desperately needed.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to provide the funds necessary to maintain unemployment insurance benefits and insure the continued operation of job placement offices by adopting House Joint Resolution 391. We have a duty to assist those without work in both sustaining themselves and their families, and in securing new employment. Spending ever increasing sums of money on unemployment benefits while at the same time reducing efforts to place people in available jobs is not a sound policy. I am pleased that we now have an opportunity to correct this situation and get on with the task of putting people back to work.

Mr. Speaker, for all of the reasons that have been enunciated here and more, I would ask this House to support this resolution unanimously.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for one more moment?

Mr. NATCHER. I yield.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, I inadvertently omitted from the encomiums I placed upon the gentleman and the gentleman from Mississippi the name of my good friend from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE). His cooperation was total in this respect, and I want to commend him as well as the others for the fine work that they did.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR).

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, no single appropriation may be more important to the American people than the one which I hope this House will approve today to provide $210 million for State employment service agencies.

The continuing resolution, which Congress passed in December 1981, to provide appropriations for the current fiscal year, effected grotesque savings in its reduction of funds for job services. At a time when the administration is slashing programs which alleviate the burden of joblessness, a time when fiscal and monetary policy are impeding economic recovery and creating unemployment, the continuing resolution cut Federal support for this program whose purpose is to help unemployed people find new jobs.

The appropriation before the House today will allow us to reverse some of the harm from those terrible budget reductions. As a sponsor of House Joint Resolution 387, I am delighted that the House Appropriations Committee has moved so quickly to bring to the floor House Joint Resolution 391, which makes supplemental appropriations urgently needed for job services and advances to the States for their unemployment compensation programs.

The appropriations bill before us today will enable us to fulfill a fundamental responsibility to the unemployed people of this country and their families. I know from the experience in my district and throughout my home State of Minnesota of the devastating impact of the continuing resolution upon job services and the unemployed. The resolution forced the Minnesota job services program to cut its statewide staff by over 30 percent.

House Joint Resolution 391 will provide sufficient funds to restore employment service staffing nationwide to approximately 24,800. The Department of Labor estimates that, in the absence of this urgent supplemental appropriation, employment services would be reduced from the level of 31,500 in 1981 to 17,500 in 1982. The Appropriations Committee indicated that the reduction might be even greater.

An article in the January 1982 Duluth News Tribune graphically describes the problems these cutbacks have created at the community level; I commend the article to the attention of my colleagues.

I urge my colleagues to support the restoration of these funds to the job placement program; no other action of this body could be a clearer or more immediate signal to the Nation's unemployed that Congress cares about them.

The article follows:

JOB SERVICE LAYS OFF 11

(By Bill O'Keefe)

You know things are really bad when the people who work to help you find a job are laid off.

Hit by further federal budget cuts, the Duluth Job Service office said Wednesday it will trim its staff by 11 in early February.

Actually, things have been tight for a while. This is the third time since June that the Duluth office has been forced to cut positions, said Dick Foss, Duluth Job Service office manager.

"We laid off seven in September and 13 in June when the CETA (Comprehensive Employment Training Act) program went down," Foss said.

Seven job placement and four Work Incentive Program (WIN) staff positions will be cut. "That's about 50 percent of our WIN staff," he said.

Ronald Pearson, who runs the WIN program, said it is designed to help people receiving Aid to Families with Dependent Children.

"It (the program) has been cut quite drastically but we'll still be able to offer people counseling and job placement services," he said.

Said Foss: "We'll lose some experienced people. Some of the folks we'll lose because of the seniority schedule—they've not been on board as long as some others—are just excellent people. We don't like to lose them but that's the way it is."

He said employees with up to five years' service will probably be out of work. Those with more seniority will have the chance to "bump" to other positions in the Duluth office or transfer to another Job Service office, he said.

By "bumping," an employee displaces another worker with less seniority.

"Some of the folks here have a fair amount of service and will be offered reassignments to vacancies or be able to bump at the Duluth office or around the state."

Foss said the cuts lower his staff to 58.

"I think our function will be to restructure the program like we did in September. It worked out well then. We're still providing services with the same degree of quality . . . and we're meeting the program mandates."

"But we've never operated at this level of staff resources before," he added.

Foss said Reagan Administration budget cutbacks have caused Job Service in Minnesota to cut its statewide staff by 31.3 percent.

"There are 125 positions out-state and 101 in the central office" being cut, he said.

Since Job Service's entire budget is paid by the U.S. Department of Labor, offices in all 50 states will probably be affected by the lastest budget cuts, he said.

The Duluth office will drop the 366 Work Incentives Program enrollees in Carlton County from the program but will continue to serve 1,100 people in the program in the southern third of St. Louis County, Foss said.

Pearson said Carlton County residents in the Basic Education Opportunity Grant progam will finish their job training. After that, he said, "we won't be able to help them."

Foss said he hopes to keep open the Cloquet, Miller Hill Mall and Michigan Street Job Service branches.

Ray Skramstad, manager of the Hibbing Job Service office and Jacqueline Coleman, of the Superior office, were reported out of their offices Wednesday and unavailable for comment.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. FORD).

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Joint Resolution 391 which will provide supplemental administrative funds for State employment security agencies.

I applaud the Appropriations Committee for its action in promptly bringing this legislation to the floor. With cooperation from the other body, we can avoid serious disruptions in the Employment Service.

Although the President has reversed himself by submitting this supplemental appropriation request, the implications of the administration's original actions should not be overlooked.

Remember, it was this administration that requested and successfully lobbied for the cuts in the employment service we are now restoring. It is clear that these cuts were inappropriate and unwise. It is hard to believe that, with over 9 million Americans out of work and unemployment increasing, the administration would have proposed such drastic reductions in the Employment Service.

As chairman of the subcommittee with jurisdiction over the Federal-State unemployment insurance system, Mr. Speaker, I feel compelled to make one additional observation. House Joint Resolution 391 contains supplemental appropriations necessary to finance the Federal share of extended unemployment benefits and to fund a loan account in the Federal Unemployment Trust Fund from which States that cannot meet their unemployment benefit obligations may borrow. It does not provide funds for new or additional unemployment benefits; nor does it in any way restore unemployment insurance cuts enacted in the 1981 Budget Reconciliation Act.

I remind the House, that major revisions in the extended unemployment benefits program were enacted last year in the budget reconciliation bill, at the administration's urging. Under the extended benefits program, up to a maximum of 13 additional weeks of unemployment compensation are payable to individuals who exhaust their State benefits. The program cuts enacted last year, effective in fiscal 1982, have already played havoc in a number of States with high unemployment, and other States will be similarly affected when additional reconciliation changes become effective this coming September. For example, as a result of the changes, extended benefits have triggered off in Michigan—incredible as that seems—which has a 16-percent rate of unemployment.

I do not intend to debate the merits of the unemployment compensation changes mandated in the reconciliation bill. Although, a number of my colleagues have introduced legislation to repeal them. I simply want the record to be clear. This supplemental request will only finance Federal obligations under current law and in no way responds to the damaging impact of last year's unemployment compensation cutbacks.

□ 1800

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to my good friend, the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. BETHUNE).

Mr. BETHUNE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of a bipartisan supplemental appropriation, House Joint Resolution 391, which, among other provisions, will appropriate $210 million for State employment services so that the job service offices can continue their work of placement, counseling, and testing assistance to job seekers. For Arkansas, House Joint Resolution 391 means that approximately 13 ESD offices will remain open that would have otherwise been shut down, 262 positions will not be terminated, and approximately 70,500 Arkansans can be helped to find jobs.

The employment security division's national average for job placement is only 5 to 8 percent which contributes to the view that the program should be cut. However, in Arkansas for fiscal year 1981, ESD placed 65,120 different Arkansans in jobs, a record that places Arkansas 17th in the Nation in the ratio of individuals placed per staff year worked. Arkansas success of placing almost 25 percent of its unemployed gives rise to the need to review our criteria for deciding to make budget cuts. I do not know why there is a placement variation among the States, but I do not believe that States with efficient placement records should be penalized.

In our haste to cut unnecessary Federal spending, we were bound to make mistakes. As soon as I talked to the job service people back home, I knew the extent of the mistake made in the December continuing resolution. I was greatly relieved when I came back to Washington and talked with my colleagues on the House Appropriations Committee and Employment Service officials in the Department of Labor who agreed with me that corrections needed to be made.

The bill we consider today appropriates money to bring the national staffing level back up to 24,800, as did the administration's request, and a resolution that I cosponsored. I commend the members of the Appropriation Subcommittee on Labor, Health, Education, and Welfare, and the full committee for their fine work and expediency. Now we have a bill before us that deserves, and will receive our wholehearted support. We have the opportunity to work together to correct a mistake, and I feel good about this. In the future, we must be more diligent to see that good programs are not penalized for overall poor performance.

But, before we pat ourselves on the back, let us rethink why we joined efforts and worked so hard to keep job services from being eliminated. I have read many constituent letters supporting ESD, and I have met with many fine ESD people who serve my district. However, I would rather let one of my constituents give my fellow Members the value of his insight. He is an employer relations representative in an ESD office in my home district, and is often referred to as "Mr. ESD." He speaks well for the Employment Services people and the unemployed seeking jobs across the country.

Mr. Speaker, I include my constituent's letter for printing at this point in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

ARKANSAS EMPLOYMENT SECURITY DIVISION,
Conway, Ark., February 2, 1982.

Hon. ED BETHUNE,
U.S. Representative, 1527 Federal Building, 700 West Capitol, Little Rock, Ark.

DEAR SIR: I would like to take a few minutes of your time to tell you about the operations of the Conway ESD office. I hope that by explaining what we do for our local employers, you will have a better understanding of how essential our services are and how destructive it will be to displace our current staff members.

We serve approximately 150 major and minor market employers in the Conway area. Twenty of these are major market employers in the manufacturing industry with whom we have exclusive hiring agreements. This means that all company applications are completed in the ESD office and all interviews are scheduled by the ESD staff. We also maintain applicant flow charts for thirteen of these employers, mailing their copies to them on designated reporting periods.

Our job placement interviewers speak directly with applicants to match them with existing job openings. We also have two staff members who operate a job order control room. All job orders are taken and written here. File search and call-ins of qualified applicants are conducted first, and then interviews are allowed to refer qualified applicants. All referrals are monitored by the job order control room staff. It is here that company applications are issued, applicant flow chart entries are made, and interview appointments are arranged.

This process insures employers that their needs will be serviced according to their instructions, allowing them more freedom and time to conduct their daily work requirements. We have shown our employers that we are competent in performing these duties and services for them in a timely and professional manner. Our excellent staff and job placement services have enabled us to keep the business of these employers, serve our applicants well, and make the Conway ESD office the best in the state.

As the Employer Relations Representative, I have worked directly with the Conway employers over a period of years to set up exclusive hiring agreements. Each employer's agreement is individually structured to meet the company's particular needs. The rest of the ESD staff has supported me well by efficiently carrying out the detail of these agreements over the same period of years. I also serve as a troubleshooter to eliminate any problems that arise with our hiring agreements in the ESD office or on the part of the employers. We have proven to our employers that we can and will accommodate their needs on an ongoing basis. This has given the Conway ESD office a superior record which speaks for itself. However, this record would not exist without the dedication and hard work of our conscientious staff.

I hope this information will give some assistance in fighting for the restoration of funds that will eliminate the planned lay offs and transfers of ESD employees. It is imperative for the agency, employers, and applicants that ESD continues to provide these essential services at a time when the unemployment rate is high and economic hardships prevail.

Sincerely,

HAROLD STURGIS,
Employer Relations Representative.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to my good friend from New York (Mr. KEMP).

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support for providing additional unemployment insurance funds. Unemployment benefits are a fundamental public trust between Congress and American workers. We cannot let them down, especially in this time of recession.

Let me also make two additional points. First of all, while this bill is absolutely necessary, it still does not solve a very important problem facing my constituents in western New York. Unemployment in Buffalo is 10.5 percent. Yet because unemployment in New York State as a whole is lower, my constituents are not eligible for extended unemployment benefits. This is completely unfair. I agree that we should not provide extended benefits in areas that truly have high levels of jobs and employment, but western New York is not one of them.

This is why I have cosponsored a bill introduced by my colleague from western New York (Mr. NOWAK). This bill would provide special extended unemployment benefits in areas, like western New York, that have unemployment rates much higher than those of the rest of the State. I would like to strongly urge my colleagues to hold hearings and vote on this bill as soon as possible.

My second point is, that as we begin the debate on next year's budget we must understand that unemployment, not unemployment benefits, is our budget problem. More than four-fifths of the projected increase in the deficit for this year is a direct result of unemployment and our deteriorating economy. Between benefits to unemployed workers and their families, and the taxes they can not pay when they are not working, unemployment could cost the Government almost $200 billion in the next 3 years. We will not cut that deficit by reducing benefits, or taxing working men and women. We will cut that deficit only by putting the American people back to work. And the best way to do that, I believe, is to move up the tax cut, and to end a Federal Reserve monetary policy aimed at curing inflation with unemployment and high interest rates. Only full employment and honest money can reduce both inflation and high interest rate deficits.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT).

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, as the sponsor of emergency legislation (H.R. 5390) to appropriate funds for grants to States for unemployment insurance and employment services, I would like to take a few moments to commend the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. WHITTEN), and the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. NATCHER) for their expeditious handling of House Joint Resolution 391, making urgent appropriations for the Department of Labor. In addition, I would like to point out that President Reagan recognized the severity of the crisis and delivered a supplemental budget request along these lines last week.

In the hectic final days of the first session during consideration of the continuing resolution, Congress agreed to increase the limitation on administrative expenses by $261 million in the account entitled "Grants to States for Unemployment Insurance and Employment Services." That $261 million is a reduction from a March budget base of $2.2 billion.

At the time of the reduction, we were assured that this action was carefully construed to assure that no State unemployment office would be closed as a result of this limitation, and that no employees of this office would be laid off. In addition, Secretary Donovan stated that "if under the January economic assumptions the 1982 workload is higher than assumed in the September budget request—which is what this limitation reflects—the administration would submit a supplemental budget request to assure the processing of the higher workload. What was understated at that point was the fact that the Department of Labor would then have to take 80 percent of these reductions from employment services. The irony is plain. Benefit checks would continue to be fully funded, but the activities to move those recipients out of the unemployment lines and into productive, private-sector jobs would be severely curtailed.

Today, we all know that a supplemental budget request is necessary to assure the processing of the higher workload. I am sure all my colleagues have received the message from their home districts as to the extent of dislocations in employment services nationwide. With our present rate of unemployment this is obviously a vital expenditure in our Federal budget. It would simply be penny wise and pound foolish to continue these reductions.

The House of Representatives was so concerned about staff reductions on the unemployment side, long waiting lines for the unemployed, and an overwhelmed staff faced with increased fraud in the unemployment insurance system. I believe we minimized the seriousness of the reductions in employment services.

The increased workload is developing at a fast pace, and unless we take quick action at this point to rectify this error it will be too late to do any good. States are now being forced to reduce critical employment services during the peak of our unemployment period.

The cuts as proposed in my home State of Arkansas will put these reductions in perspective. It is reported that placements in Arkansas are about 20 out of every 100 applicants screened. In one county in my district for fiscal year 1981, 12,093 applicants were screened and 3,405 individuals were placed for a 28-percent success ratio. Funding in Arkansas for the job services, where the cuts have been the heaviest, has been reduced by approximately $4 million from the fiscal year 1981 level, a cut of 40 percent. Job service staff funded for 473 positions in fiscal year 1981 will be reduced to 153 positions on March 1, 1982. In fiscal year 1981, this staff was responsible for placing 65,120 different individuals in jobs. Assuming these people made only the minimum wage their incomes would exceed $327 million. The benefit to the economy far exceeds the funds expended to provide these services.

The impact of these reductions in Arkansas is as follows: Ten local offices will have less than three job service positions.

Staff will be unable to administer unemployment insurance work test, thus increasing the duration of unemployment and total benefits paid to claimant.

Many applicants who rely on the job service will be unable to find work.

Employers will continue to pay FUTA taxes but will not receive services to which they are entitled.

Job placement, recruitment, testing for referral selection and other services to employers will be reduced or eliminated.

Employers will have to use private employment agencies to obtain services that they have already paid for through FUTA taxes or do their own recruitment.

AFDC recipients will continue on the welfare rolls with no organized effort to make them job ready as is now seen in WIN.

Again, I ask my colleagues to join with me in recognizing the grave effects of these employment service reductions on our unemployed, and rectify this inadvertent and adverse impact on our most needy citizens by supporting House Joint Resolution 391.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from the State of Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY).

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I can understand why a lot of people want to vote without debate, because they would like to cover up the way they voted last year.

Let me suggest why we are here today. We are here today because we have an administration economic policy which is callous, and which is misguided, and which has brought us to the highest unemployment since the Great Depression.

We are also here on the unemployment, on the job service issue, for an entirely different reason. My colleagues will remember in the continuing resolution last year the administration came and asked us to cut $120 million from the unemployment insurance administration fund. We discovered that they had an internal memo in the Labor Department which estimated that that $120 million reduction in staff would result in a $1 billion overpayment for waste, fraud, and abuse, because they would not be able accurately access unemployment, the eligibility, and there would be a great deal of overpayment.

We raised that on the continuing resolution. When we raised it, the administration decided to cover their tracks on that issue by transferring the cuts to the job service program. As a result, we saw in Wisconsin 35 job service offices closed. We have that operation in total chaos around the country.

The administration was willing, the administration was willing to destroy the morale and destroy the ability of that agency to operate and fund jobs for unemployed people because they were trying to cover their tracks. Now they are in here saying, oh, I am sorry, we just underestimated unemployment, and we are sorry, and would you please put the money back in.

Mr. Weidenbaum has testified that unemployment would be 9 percent at the time the administration's request came to our committee. Now the Republicans want to vote because they do not have any answers for the argument.

What I would suggest is that my colleagues look at the numbers in this resolution, because while the administration is asking us to temporarily restore the funds for unemployment service, in their new budget for 1983 they are asking us to again reduce the numbers in unemployment services by reducing $60 million below the amount which they are asking us to increase today. That means they have taken the job service from 30,000 staff year equivalent in 1981 to 17,000 in the continuing resolution. They say they are bringing it back up to 24,000 now, and they are asking us in their new budget to again take it down to 13,500.

If my colleagues can make any sense out of that, they are a lot smarter than I am.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. RATCHFORD).

Mr. RATCHFORD. Mr. Speaker, for more than 1.2 million Americans the loss of employment is devastating enough. The deepening recession has taken a tragic human toll that unemployment figures cannot possibly account for. Even in Connecticut, where we have experienced tremendous industrial and corporate growth in recent years, we are now experiencing the symptoms of the economy's ill health. The latest round of layoffs announced in the State will force some 1,300 workers at Pratt & Whitney and Electric Boat out of a job.

These and many other laid-off workers like them are anxious to return to work, and the skills they have acquired over the years should enhance their prospects of securing a new position. But the biting irony of this administration's program is that while we hear the President talk of thousands of unfilled jobs listed in the classified sections of newspapers each day, it is his very budget program that has virtually crippled critical State job service programs.

Last spring, the job service program of the Connecticut Department of Labor sustained a 17-percent cut in staffing and other available resources in expectation of Federal Budget cuts. An additional 30-percent cut was imposed as a result of the continuing resolution adopted several months ago. This has come at a time when the services of this program are most in need. Last year, the Connecticut job service program served over 200,000 workers seeking employment and secured placement for more than 45,000 of them. Yet unless the Congress quickly adopts the unemployment insurance supplemental appropriation bill before the House today, State job service offices throughout the Nation will be forced to close and a great many of the presently unemployed will be stripped of the most valuable tool available to them in finding new work.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to adopt this supplemental request which includes $210.5 million for the Labor Department's Employment Service. If we fail to act affirmatively within the next 2 weeks the result will be devastating. In Connecticut alone, over 160 staff persons would have to be terminated, 16 of 20 offices throughout the State now offering assistance to the job seeker would have to abandon those activities, and critical computer operations which match workers with available positions would have to be significantly reduced.

Regrettably there has never been a greater need for these services, yet nearly 1,000 employment offices around the country have been forced to close their doors since December and countless others will be forced to do likewise if we fail to act today. Now is not the time, Mr. Speaker, to lock the door and throw away the key on those Americans searching desperately for a means to support their families.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. MILLER).

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, as Members of the House, the obvious reason we are here at this late hour is because this is a testimony to the bankruptcy of the Reagan administration policy on our economic system. In this country, 1 in 10 American workers is currently looking for a job. In the last continuing resolution, in the name of expediency, we cut the very services which were there to help these workers find jobs.

When the Secretary of Labor came before my subcommittee, he promised us a program of job training, of helping unemployed workers move to other areas of the country to find jobs, of trying to help people match with jobs. None of those promises have come true. In fact, all of those services have been cut by this administration.

What we find out is, in fact, there is no policy within the Reagan administration. For the first time in the history of this country, when we have the major industry of automobiles, the major industry of homebuilding, the major industry of steel, of aerospace laying people off, for the first time in the history of this country the Government is not willing to raise a finger to help these individuals find new jobs, to become retrained, to move to other parts of the country. In fact, they are sitting back and deciding that there is no role for the Government to play for these people to try to help them out as they try to feed their families.

I think we ought to remember tonight what we are doing. This is nothing more than a patch on a very bad economic policy that has taken its toll, which has been endorsed by many Members of this Congress. I hope that as we go into the next budget year they will start to understand that you cannot just keep cutting money without having an impact on individual workers and their families.

When unemployment strikes an economy it is the duty of a responsible government and a civilized society to perform four basic tasks:

First: Assist the unemployed in their job search through effective employment service programs;

Second: Improve the skills of the unemployed through realistic job training programs;

Third: Maintain a decent quality of life for the jobless through unemployment insurance; and

Fourth: Develop a strategy for relieving the burdens on the unemployed by creating jobs through a realistic look at the economy not as it was or how we hope it might be but as it is.

We are in the midst of unprecedented levels of unemployment in this country.

Over 9 million people who want to work cannot find jobs;

Another 1.2 million people who want to work have become too discouraged to continue looking for jobs that are just not there;

Nearly 600,000 people began receiving unemployment insurance in a single week last month;

And while members of this administration point in indignation at the long lines of Polish workers waiting for what little there is to buy in their country, the administration ignores our neighbors waiting in lines for hours for a few pounds of excess cheese and for unemployment checks.

And so, a year down the supply side road, the Congress and millions of workers must ask—What is the employment policy of this administration?

The President of the United States suggests that the unemployed read the want ads in the Washington Post. The Assistant Secretary of Labor complains that the youthful unemployed do not seem to want to apply for thousands of jobs his office lists as unfilled—jobs for mechanical engineers and systems analysts in Enid, Okla., or Lincoln, Nebr.

The administration has failed to perform the four basic tasks. The fact that we are here today, responding to an emergency request for supplemental unemployment benefits, is testament to the failure of this administration's policies.

Nearly a year ago, in response to my subcommittee, Secretary of Labor Donovan demonstrated the lack of understanding about our economy and the specific responsibilities of his own Department. We asked him to respond to the fear among many workers that options were closing all around them and what was opening was a door to unemployment and welfare. In response the Secretary of Labor—the one individual designated to look out for the interests of the working people—stated "That's a natural reaction from a man losing his job, but it isn't as bad as that statement indicates."

Well, Secretary Donovan, if it was not that bad last year, it certainly is this year.

This administration has totally failed to comprehend the depth of the current economic crisis. They respond to historic unemployment rates with unrealistic economic forecasts, rosy predictions, and by cutting programs to put Americans back to work.

In sectors of the economy long thought to be immune from the present levels of unemployment and recession we find long lines of unemployed men and women who will probably never again find the same kinds of jobs or earn as much as they did in their last job. And so now the administration wants us to pass an emergency appropriation to patch over their lack of a sound economic plan.

Last year the administration promised us a program to match unemployed workers with unfilled jobs. Instead they delivered budget cuts which have forced one of the largest job matching programs—the California job banks to shut down.

Last year they promised a job training program to revitalize a sagging economy. Instead they delivered massive cuts in training jobs and a year's wait for a much balihooed, but never realized, business-labor training program.

Last year they promised a decrease in unemployment. They delivered an inflationary increase in military spending which leads to fewer jobs.

They promised funds to relocate people to meaningful jobs. Now they talk about a plan to give the unemployed worker a lump sum benefit so he can buy a bus ticket to a part of the country already flooded with wishful jobseekers.

They promised trade readjustment allowances to aid 250,000 autoworkers who have lost their jobs. Instead, we get reduced TRA benefits and a complete failure of any effort at job retraining.

They promised a program to solve the problem of displaced workers. A year later they have announced only a high-level team designed to evaluate options.

The administration claims to have a program. But what the administration wants in this legislation is a substitute for a comprehensive program to arrest growing unemployment and the enormous misery it has spawned.

Let us not trick ourselves into believing that all will be well with the employment services if we pass this bill today. The proposal before us today will only restore a portion of the funding to a beleaguered program. In California, the employment development department has absorbed $121 million in budget cuts in the last year. This proposal will only replace about $34 million of that loss, hardly enough to restore the employment service program in the State.

The $121 million in cuts forced the State to close its job bank program, and this has cost the State and local governments an additional $39 million in lost welfare grant reductions.

In the Pleasant Hill employment office in my own district the effects of the statewide 64-percent reduction in field staffing has had a particularly harsh effect. In December, the already reduced program was able to place 2,605 individuals in paying jobs. In January they were able to place only 400—while during the same period, unemployment in my county increased by 7.2 percent.

We have no choice but to vote for this special supplemental appropriation to provide temporary relief to the millions of unemployed of our Nation. But we do have a choice whether to sit by and allow this administration to continue to move us on the road toward economic ruin or to take action to address the problem of unemployment head on.

We cannot think for a minute that this appropriation will solve the problem. The administration has abrogated its responsibilities toward the workers and the unemployed workers of America; and that responsibility now falls to the Congress.

We must do what the administration cannot, or will not, do, we must develop a sound policy to stem unemployment, to create jobs, to train workers for those jobs and to place them in those jobs.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the last speaker, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. ALBOSTA).

Mr. ALBOSTA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Joint Resolution 391, the measure to provide $2.3 billion in supplemental funds for the Labor Department's unemployment program.

Although I wholeheartedly agree, in principle, Mr. Speaker, with the effort to trim the Federal budget, I am also keenly aware that the unemployment situation in Michigan, my home State, is serious enough in and of itself—but now, without adoption of this measure, it will be compounded by the reduction of unemployment services.

When I supported the President's overall plan to cut Federal spending I emphasized that careful consideration must be given to where the cuts were made. We now see, with the advantage of hindsight, that not all of those—specifically reductions in funds for employment services—will meet the intended purpose. With these and other such cuts, we should not hesitate to pause and review their application. The object, after all, is to get as many Americans as possible off the unemployment rolls and onto productive private payrolls.

As you are undoubtedly aware Mr. Speaker, the current economic recession has had a devastating effect on the State of Michigan—an effect more devastating than that suffered by any other State. The people of Michigan are struggling with the highest unemployment rate in the country and—I wish to remind this body—it is the unemployed who are the chief victims of the recession.

The Michigan Employment Security Commission (MESC) is in the process of reducing its services and closing 42 statewide offices due to the budget cuts of last year. MESC no longer has the funding to assist anyone other than those job seekers receiving unemployment benefits, with this supplemental appropriation, Michigan's job bank and work incentive (WIN) programs will be completely eliminated at a time when they are needed the most.

In fiscal year 1981 almost 20,000 Michigan residents found jobs through the help of the WIN program. Last year the program operated on a $15.3 million budget, yet it saved $68 million in welfare costs because of its job placement successes.

We are thus faced with the closing of offices which, in many cases, serve the desperately needed; those who just cannot find work. Because the unemployment problem has lasted so long and is so widespread in Michigan, many of these people have exhausted their unemployment benefits. What is more, though, the reality of these particular closings is that while hindering the unemployed in our large cities, they will be devastating to our rural poor.

The American people are calling on their government leaders to cut the fat and to cut the waste, fraud and abuse from the Federal budget. This I endorse fully. But I do not believe the administration has the mandate of the people to cut programs, like MESC, that are both essential and working.

I urge adoption of House Resolution 391.

□ 1810

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. DOUGHERTY).

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Mr. Speaker, I would just like to take a moment to state to my colleagues on the other side that I am one of the Republicans who did not vote for the Reagan budget last year. I think I have something to say that the Members may be interested in.

Let us not lie to the American people. The economic mess that this country is in did not start January 1981. When you talk about the problems in steel, the problems in housing, the problems in the auto industry, we are not talking about something that just came to this country with Ronald Reagan. What I would like to see this Congress do, if we had the courage to do it—it is very difficult in an election year—let us put politics aside, ladies and gentlemen, and let us deal with the issue. If the Democrats have a good plan to deal with the problems of unemployment in this country or high inflation or high interest rates, bring it to the floor. This is one Republican who is prepared to vote for something that will settle unemployment. I sat here for 3 hours this afternoon, and I am sick and tired of hearing everybody play the unemployment problem for politics instead of playing it for resolution.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, in early January, my office began receiving questions and complaints regarding the proposed job service closings in nonmetropolitan Nebraska and across the country. Today I rise in support of a bill introduced by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. YATES) which would authorize an emergency supplemental appropriation of $2.3 billion to reopen beleagured job service offices nationwide.

It is important to know how job service offices function in order to understand why this supplemental appropriation must receive such a high priority. Job service offices fall under the U.S. Employment Service, which also oversees an unemployment insurance branch. Money for the U.S. Employment Service comes primarily from what is known as the FUTA tax—the Federal unemployment tax. Employees pay a certain amount into the FUTA fund per individual placed in a job, based on that individual's salary or wages. More importantly, what employers pay into the FUTA tax amounts to 97 percent of the fund's operation revenues. These revenues are used to pay unemployment benefits during times of high unemployment, as well as to operate job service offices. Because unemployment is so high now in many areas of the country, the revenues in the fund that are being used to pay unemployment benefits are being depleted faster than they can be replaced. The decision to eliminate many job service offices was made because unemployment benefits had to be paid. In order to do this, funds from the FUTA tax that normally go to job service administrative operations were shifted to pay unemployment benefits. The result was that job service offices that did not deal with unemployment claims received word that they would be closed for lack of operating funds. In Nebraska, this meant that 75 percent of job service offices would be closed.

As soon as I heard from people in Nebraska about the impending crisis in my State, I wrote a letter to Secretary Donovan, expressing my grave concerns about the wisdom of such actions during a time when unemployment is so very high and people are searching for work. While unemployment benefits must be paid, it is counterproductive to close those offices that offer an avenue out of unemployment. Job service offices provide a direct link between those employers who need job slots filled to run their businesses, and unemployed individuals who are looking for work. The two branches of the Employment Service have a very favorable symbiotic relationship. They simply cannot be separated; one cannot take priority over the other.

In Nebraska we are fortunate that the unemployment rate is just 4.4 percent—only Oklahoma has a lower unemployment rate. In my opinion, part of the reason that my State has this low unemployment rate is precisely because our job service offices do their jobs well—they put those people who need to work in touch with employers who have jobs to offer. On the other hand, as my colleagues from States where unemployment is higher, such as Michigan and Pennsylvania, know, job service offices there play a critical role as well. In those States, they provide not only that link between employers and those looking for work, but they represent a certain amount of hope and a bridge from despair to optimism. What all of this says to me, then, is that job service is crucial, and in fact, intrinsic to the very structure of the economy that we are trying to improve. To eliminate or significantly reduce employment services, in total, is shortsighted, foolish, and insensitive.

In addition, the need for job service offices is especially great in rural areas in my State, and similar areas, for example, in Louisiana and Arkansas. In these areas, jobs are scarce and private agencies may in fact be nonexistent. Cities would not be as directly affected by the proposed closings, since most have at least one private employment agency. Many employers from Lincoln and other medium-size towns in Nebraska have mentioned to me, however, that they regularly use job service in addition to private employment agencies.

The tremendous support for job service that has come pouring into my office has come not just from employers who use it, but from individuals who located jobs through it, as well as teachers, lawyers, and concerned citizens in general. Nebraska Governor Charles Thone, in a courageous move, authorized an emergency appropriation of $200,000 from a State contingency fund, to keep job service offices open across our State and give Congress time to act. Nebraska's gamble paid off, for in the meantime, the pressures on other congressional delegations increased, culminating in last week's Appropriations Subcommittee hearing. The result of that hearing was Mr. YATES' bill, which has my full support. Out of this $2.3 billion appropriation, $210 million will go to job service to keep their offices open, $1.9 billion will go for unemployment insurance payments, and $133 million will go for staffing needs for unemployment services.

Mr. Speaker, and distinguished colleagues, please join with me in supporting this very important bill. Reaffirm with me this Nation's commitment to economic recovery and full employment that reflects the workplace strength of a self-sufficient citizenry.

● Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, the need for this appropriation is abundantly clear in the unemployment statistics that have been piling up in the last 6 months. Nearly 2 million people have been added to the unemployment rolls since July.

I am particularly pleased that additional money is being made available to State employment agencies. With nearly 20 million people looking for work, it is obviously not a time for shutting down offices that help people find jobs. But that is what is happening as a result of the drastic cuts imposed on State employment services in the last continuing resolution. In my own congressional district, one office of the Texas Employment Commission has already closed. I hope that quick action on this supplemental may enable that office to be reopened or at least avoid further closings.

The need for this rescue operation for our State employment agencies dramatizes the danger of adopting wholesale, across-the-board budget cuts without understanding just what their impact will be. I am afraid we will be facing another problem soon in the Bureau of Labor Statistics. The reductions in personnel forced on BLS by budget cuts could well result in the Bureau being unable to compile and analyze the data needed to determine just what is happening in the labor market. It may also limit their ability to gather the data to determine the Consumer Price Index on which many Federal programs, labor contracts, and pension plans rely to adjust benefits and wages. That must not be allowed to happen.●

● Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I strongly support the resolution before the House today providing badly needed funds for State employment offices around the country. At a time when unemployment shows no signs of abating, and when jobless men and women will receive less and less assistance in finding jobs, we must act to prevent a serious situation from growing even more severe.

As a cosponsor of House Joint Resolution 387, introduced by my good friend and colleague Congressman YATES, I was grateful for the swift action the Subcommittee on Labor-Health, Education and Welfare took on the appropriations resolutions on the floor today. Once again BILL NATCHER has demonstrated his able and forceful leadership on an issue of vital national importance.

Through the efforts of Congressmen NATCHER, YATES, and others, we will be able to avert a very dangerous development. When the Congress enacted House Concurrent Resolution 370, it approved a 4-percent across-the-board reduction in funding. The Department of Labor translated that reduction into an allocation reduction for the State of New York of more than 25 percent. Since the reduction is retroactive to October 1, 1981, the Labor Department's action will require the closing of 30 to 40 full-time job service offices and 50 satellite facilities. In short, New York State's ability to assist those seeking employment will be severely curtailed if corrective action is not taken. With Senate concurrence in House Joint Resolution 391, those unemployed men and women in New York and elsewhere will have a place to turn for assistance in finding employment. I am hopeful the Senate will follow our lead so that the resolution can be sent to the White House as soon as possible.●

● Mr. MOFFETT. Mr. Speaker, I endorse strongly this emergency supplemental appropriation for employment service funding and unemployment compensation. It is an urgently needed remedy for the thoughtless budget cutting requested and won by the Reagan administration over the past year. We should keep in mind that it was the administration which created the crisis in funding for State employment services and unemployment benefits, through a combination of its overall economic policy, and through specific budget cuts for these vital programs.

This bill will provide a total of $2.293 billion for Government programs to aid the unemployed. Of this total, $1.950 billion will go to the unemployment trust fund. From this sum, $1.450 billion will go into the unemployment funds for States that are unable to provide sufficient unemployment compensation to their jobless, as required by law. This reflects the 8.6-percent national unemployment rate, which means that nearly 10 million Americans are jobless. Even the administration forecasts that the unemployment rate will remain at this level or higher for the rest of 1982.

Another $500 million will go to finance part of the Federal share of the 39-week extended benefit program, which has been drastically slashed by the administration. A year ago, nearly 700,000 citizens were receiving 39-week extended assistance. Yet cuts by the administration in this benefit have reduced the number by 90 percent, to barely 68,000. Why, in the middle of a recession, does this administration cut benefits for the jobless?

Another $210 million of this aid package will go to keep State employment services operating. In my State, as well as others, these offices have been threatened by imminent closing, as a result of the Reagan budget bill cuts of last summer and the additional 4-percent cut imposed in December. Across the Nation, hundreds of State employment service offices have already closed as a consequence of these cuts. Without these new funds, even more would close. For example, in Connecticut, the State Department of Labor has just announced that it will fire 140 employees and start shutting down employment service offices if new money is not forthcoming.

In some States, unemployed workers have had to travel as much as 100 miles in order to reach the nearest open unemployment office. This is an intolerable burden to impose on the jobless. Even where such offices are closer to the worker's home, cuts in funding for processing of claims have resulted in endless lines. Citizens have had to wait in bitter cold, hour upon hour, in order to be processed. Isn't it bad enough that they are unemployed, without inflicting a form a physical punishment on them? The bill we are now considering will provide an additional $133 million for the costs of processing—it is almost surely an inadequate amount.

So, here we have a bill to rescue the administration from the indifference and cruelty of its own policies. Yet it will be this administration which, in a few months, will be charging the Congress with budget busting because we voted for funds like these. While we vote in favor of this appropriation, we should keep in mind just whose policies produced the funding emergency. This should also be a lesson that meaningless budget-cutting results in equally meaningless policies—such as slashing unemployment benefits and programs during a recession.●

● Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Joint Resolution 391, a bill to provide $2.4 billion for unemployment insurance and State employment services.

It is unfortunate that such a bill is necessary because it means that unemployment levels have increased dramatically.

Members know the details of unemployment legislation: $1.9 billion for unemployment benefits, and $133 million for more employees to process unemployment insurance claims and collect unemployment compensation taxes.

One provision of the unemployment compensation bill was authored by my good friend, SID YATES, the $210 billion to continue State employment services.

This provision will continue some 880 Illinois State Job Service employees according to the Illinois State office. This provision means that these services will continue for Illinois residents.

I want to complement the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, BILL NATCHER, for his expeditious and efficient handling of this important matter.●

● Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Joint Resolution 391 and it is my firm hope this resolution will pass without opposition by this House.

This bill provides $2.3 billion in supplemental funds for the Labor Department's unemployment programs. This total includes an additional $210.5 million for the Labor Department's Employment Service, which provides money to the States for assistance to job seekers.

It is my opinion that the Employment Security Commission has borne its fair share of the burden of the Federal budget cuts. During the current economic recession and high unemployment rates the services of the employment security offices are more important than ever. The incredibly high unemployment rates of this country are causing great pain to many of our citizens. We especially need the assistance of the job service offices to help our unemployed find jobs. Instead, hundreds of these offices are being closed and thousands of job service employees are themselves joining the ranks of the unemployed. This is the worse case of false economy we have seen yet.

In my own State of South Carolina the unemployment rate last month was 9.9 percent. One of our counties has an unemployment rate of 23.5 percent. Several of the counties which I represent are well above the 10-percent mark. I suggest this is a situation which will soon prove to be intolerable. One out of every ten South Carolinian workers is unemployed; this is the highest figure since the 1974-75 recession. This means 131,400 South Carolinians who are willing and want to work cannot find employment—40,000 more than at exactly this time last year.

Mr. Speaker, I reiterate my support of this legislation and I urge this House to pass this measure without hesitation in order to provide some immediate assistance to the unemployed of our country.●

● Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support House Joint Resolution 391, the urgent supplemental appropriation for the Department of Labor.

This legislation will provide the funds so important to keeping the various State job services offices which were facing severe budget cuts, open.

In speaking with an office manager of a job service office in my congressional district, I was advised that his office staff of 16 persons served an area with a population of approximately 450,000. In calendar 1981, 2,000 people found employment through the efforts of that office.

In addition, over a period of some 45 years these job service offices have consistently provided quality service to our veterans.

It is important to protect an agency that is dedicated to finding jobs, not only for our veterans, but for all unemployed citizens. The earned income from the jobs found is returned to the community in increased purchasing power and in tax revenues.

Last week, prior to this legislation reaching the floor, I was pleased to have been part of a special group who met with Governor Thompson, our Illinois Senators and concerned members of the Illinois congressional delegation to take direct action in resolving this problem. I am pleased that this concerted effort has resulted in positive results.●

● Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of this emergency supplemental appropriation bill.

In the area of central Florida that I represent, there are 7 of the 12 employment service offices that are scheduled to be closed by April 15 because of the drastic cutback in funding.

It is foolish and it is counterproductive to be eliminating employment offices in a severe recession. We should be providing all the help we can to locate jobs for those who are willing and anxious to work.

I commend the chairman and his committee for their compassion and for their prompt reaction to this crisis that has resulted from the deteriorating economy. I urge swift passage of this urgent legislation.●

● Mr. CORRADA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Joint Resolution 391, an urgent supplemental appropriation for employment compensation and the State employment service. This resolution will serve to replace badly needed funds which the administration removed from the continuing resolution under the assumption that unemployment would not rise above 7.7 percent in 1981.

Unemployment compensation is a vital portion of any economic package—these payments to the jobless constitute the sole source of income to many of the 9.3 million Americans currently out of work. The fact that our economy is suffering from a recession rather than a depression can be attributed to the purchasing power which these payments channel into depressed communities. At a time when unemployment exceeds 20 percent in some States, the Federal Government must continue to honor its commitment to protect those who for reasons beyond their control are without jobs. We must act immediately to cover the costs of the unemployment compensation program.

Although it has not yet become necessary to reduce payments either under the basic or extended benefits program, if Federal appropriations are not increased many States will face difficulties providing benefits. Right now for example, Puerto Rico pays out roughly $100 million in basic unemployment compensation, as well as $15 million in State share of the extended benefit program.

Because our economy suffers from 21.6 percent unemployment the strain on our $57 million trust fund has proven more than we can bear, and Puerto Rico has already had to borrow $80 million from the Federal Unemployment Trust Fund to meet demand from eligible participants. If we do not continue to finance this Federal loan service, Puerto Rico along with many other States will find it impossible to provide full benefits under the basic program.

In addition, the request for a $210.5 million supplemental for the employment service is needed to halt the closure of these offices on the State level. The Federal contribution in support of the service has been insufficient for many years but further reductions precipitated by an amendment to the continuing resolution have led many States to opt out of the program completely, thereby terminating job placement activity at a time when unemployment rates are rising. Perhaps the most basic function of the Department of Labor is to see that available jobs are matched with available workers, but without this supplemental appropriation their charge will not be met.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to join my distinguished colleague from Mississippi (Mr. WHITTEN) in supporting the passage of this resolution, and by doing so to act responsibly in fulfilling the Federal Government's promise to the unemployed worker.●

● Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, today the House will consider legislation which provides $2.3 billion in supplemental funds for the Department of Labor's unemployment programs. I am sure that many of my colleagues will vote for passage of House Joint Resolution 391 because of the rising number of unemployed workers across the Nation.

Last year, the administration, looking through rose colored glasses again, projected an average unemployment rate of 7.5 percent for 1982. The harsh reality of the situation is that last month—January—the national unemployment rate was 8.5 percent. The administration must learn to pick better numbers out of the air. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the last time this Nation had an average unemployment rate of 7.5 percent was in May of 1981. A far cry from the first month in 1982.

The latest unemployment figures for the city of Chicago reveal a 9.6-percent rate as of November 1981. The January 1982 unemployment rate for the State of Illinois is 9 percent with unemployment claims up 40 percent during the second and third weeks in January. At such a swelling tide, a supplemental appropriations of $2.3 billion is sorely needed by the States in order to insure extension of unemployment benefits for those still out of work and for those who need assistance in finding employment.

However, given additional RIF's to be announced by the administration, as well as more plant closings and layoffs nationwide, we can expect the unemployment average to surpass 8.9 percent this year.

Accordingly, I urge the passage of this unemployment insurance supplemental appropriation.●

● Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, the national unemployment level is rapidly approaching the 10 percent mark and this administration appears determined to pursue policies which will insure that we have the highest level of unemployment since the Great Depression. House Joint Resolution 391, making supplemental appropriations for unemployment compensation, is our committee's recommendation to deal with the emergencies caused by these disastrous policies.

The resolution includes $133,000,000 for employment services which provides State assistance to job seekers, including job finding and placement, counseling and testing. State employment service agencies also assist employers through labor market information manpower planning as well as information on job modification and personnel practices.

In my State alone, there are 1 million people out of jobs. At the same time, because of the President's budget, job service field office staff must be cut by 64 percent, less than 300 people will be left to help find jobs for the unemployed. Already, 42 field offices and services centers have been closed and substantially more service centers will be closed or consolidated in urban areas. Outreach programs to employers and screening for job applicants to meet employer needs will be minimal. Employment and vocational counseling will be reduced by 60 percent in some areas.

Mr. Speaker, this tragic list is endless. I am not suggesting that the money contained in this resolution will cure the ills which beset the unemployed. However, there is a great need for this money which will alleviate some of the burdens I have listed. I urge my colleagues to support the Appropriations Committee recommendation and vote in favor of this resolution.

Thank you.●

● Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that we are being given the opportunity to provide additional funds to the States to restore financing for State employment services. This will provide the staff needed to help the unemployed find jobs and allocate unemployment benefits to those who qualify. I am most concerned, however, that these funds be distributed equitably to those offices which have already been forced to close. In my own State of Virginia, 26 employment commission offices have closed this year, causing a reduction of 788 staff positions, which is 39 percent of the Virginia Employment Commission labor force.

The Virginia congressional delegation has recently written to Secretary of Labor Donovan concerning the low rate of return of employer tax dollars received by Virginia under the Federal Unemployment Tax Act (FUTA). Our figures, based upon Department of Labor statistics, indicate that Virginia has consistently received the lowest return rate on FUTA taxes while maintaining one of the most efficient and productive employment services programs in the country. This bare minimum efficiency especially is being penalized by a 12-percent across-the-board funding cut which ignores a State's prior efforts to reduce administrative costs, thus further aggravating the inequities of the present formula. The Virginia congressional delegation and Governor Robb plan to meet with Department of Labor officials later this month to address this inequity. However, in the interim, my Virginia colleagues and I would like to make certain that the supplemental appropriations for employment services legislation under consideration today is allocated equally to our citizens.●

● Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, the President is now discovering what can happen when budgets are blindly slashed. In the case of State employment offices and job centers around the country, the people who process unemployment claims and who find work for the thousands of jobless now find themselves without a job, thanks to Reaganomics. Even the city of Denver, relatively insulated from the current unemployment wave, is seeing this cruel twist of fate.

Because of the administration-endorsed continuing resolution passed in December, the Department of Labor was forced to cut the Employment Service program, which finds jobs for the unemployed. Because of previous budget reductions, the Colorado office had to close 10 centers statewide and release over 300 employees. But as a result of the resolution, which mandated reductions retroactive to October 1981, Colorado will lose 22 more offices and will be left with only 47 staff people to handle the casework at a time when even Colorado will see hundreds of unemployed. I shudder to think what other States face.

Reagan's economics gave birth to the unemployed. His idea for a New Federalism will not rescue them. His wish for more private charity will not rescue them. His hope for increased social responsiveness by business will not rescue them, either. Reagan's budget cuts will not rescue them. The budget cuts offer the unemployed a lead life preserver.●

● Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, House Joint Resolution 391 is a bill on which we have no choice. Unless we wish to repudiate our entire unemployment compensation program, we simply have to pass it.

Of the nearly $2.3 billion, all of it but the $210 million for the U.S. Employment Service is essential to our program. I have never been impressed by the USES but, even so, I must support the comprehensive proposals in House Joint Resolution 391.

This resolution, however, does not solve the long-term financing problems of unemployment compensation. This is only a quick money fix, not a system revision.

The Federal Unemployment Tax Act (FUTA) will bring $2.1 billion this year. The benefits and administrative costs to be paid out of FUTA will amount to $2.3 billion.

Obviously, if we wish to maintain the same program, some change will have to be made in the FUTA tax system. If we raise either the base, $6,000, or the rate, one-half of 1 percent, we add a payroll tax that may stifle new job creation.

That is one more hard choice Congress is not enthusiastic to take on. But we cannot solve the problem with supplemental appropriations forever.

Another unpleasant choice we have refused to face is the fact that States cannot, and in some cases do not intend to, pay back their loans from the unemployment account.

We need a thorough overhaul. As necessary as this resolution is, it would not do it.●

● Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this urgent supplemental appropriation that was made necessary by the administration's overly optimistic projections of the unemployment situation. Without this funding, many States will be unable to provide unemployment benefits to people who have lost their jobs because of the recession.

However, this bill also acknowledges a serious situation that was created by the Reagan administration and that has been ignored by this administration. Employment Services funding—that money used by the States for job placement—was cut under the continuing resolution by an across-the-board total of 12 percent. And it was cut at the request of the President and his advisers—those people who believe the principal focus of the Government should be to get people to rely on themselves and not the Federal Government for their livelihoods.

The Department of Labor ordered the States to distribute 80 percent of the continuing resolution job services reductions to Employment Service. In other words, DOL is content to dole out unemployment benefits for as long as the economic situation requires it without providing the impetus or the funds to place unemployed workers in other jobs. The emphasis on job placement was ignored. The need for this emphasis should be understood during these times when the work ethic is so prominently displayed as a foundation of the President's philosophies.

Mr. Speaker, the Texas Employment Commission has been ranked No. 1 in the Nation in total individuals placed in jobs—and No. 2 in the Nation in the total number of jobs filled. The Department of Labor would do well to examine the specifics of TEC's record in placing the chronically unemployed, the underskilled, the handicapped, and—which should be important to the President—those people drawing unemployment insurance, and other benefits at the Government's expense.

In fiscal year 1981, Texas placed over 26,000 handicapped individuals, over 141,000 youths, over 102,000 veterans—6,610 of which were disabled, over 74,000 older workers, 12,000 people receiving food stamps, and well over 91,000 people who have been classified as disadvantaged according to CETA and food stamp guidelines. Nearly every one of these individuals would be costing the Federal Government money had they not been placed in jobs with the private sector. And nearly every one of these categories are targets of the President's budget cuts. He believes private enterprise will assume the safety net functions that his budget has by-passed. With its classic, penny-wise, pound-foolish mentality, the administration has overlooked the agencies with proven capabilities of putting people back to work.

If the Employment Service funds contained in this bill had not been insisted upon by my colleagues, in Texas alone, over half of the people involved in direct placement services would themselves be out of work. I have been assured by officials in Austin that those reductions, if not reversed, will translate into a guaranteed 40-percent reduction in productivity.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, there is one other irregularity here that cannot be addressed in the appropriation but which deserves mention and possible future action. Job services funds are presently allocated to the States on a formula basis. The formula is extremely complicated, but factors like population shifts and agency productivity are not taken into account. As I mentioned, Texas has been ranked as the No. 1 State in the country in individual job placements, and No. 2 in the number of jobs filled. It is clearly one of the most efficiently administered Employment Service programs in the Nation.

But Texas ranks 49th—behind every State but Virginia—in its return on its FUTA contribution to the Federal Government. From 1972 to 1979, Texas paid a total of $894,900,000 to the Government and received a total of $458,000,000 back—only 51 percent of its contribution. In 1980, Texas got a 38-percent return on its investment; and in 1981, a 37.3-percent return.

Texas is rewarded for its productivity with diminishing shares of Employment Service funds. And this is happening as population shifts to the Sun Belt are rising.

Congress should reconsider this allocation formula which penalizes those States which save the Federal Government the most money. There is resentment among officials in Texas who see this as an inequitable distribution of funds that are better spent in our State than in nearly every other State in the Nation. I urge my colleagues to examine this inequity and correct it before their resentment prompts a full fledged regional battle over scarce funds.●

● Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my colleagues today in supporting this urgent supplemental appropriation for the Labor Department to provide funds for employment service offices nationwide.

I am pleased to support it, but I am also disturbed, and, frankly, a little mad that we must go through this process of trying to beat the clock to save this essential service for States.

The question must be asked, "What brought us to this point?" And I think the answer, in a large part, is that Members of Congress were not given sufficient information about the ramifications of the 12-percent cut in the Employment Security Administration account contained in the continuing resolution passed by this body last December.

I cannot believe that a majority of my colleagues would have supported that 12-percent cut had they known that Employment Service offices throughout the country would be forced to shut their doors, particularly at a time when their services are desperately needed.

In my home State of Oregon, official unemployment has reached 12 percent. However, this figure is deceptive. Many of the unemployed, mostly construction and timber industry workers who are victims of an administration that has no housing policy, have exhausted their benefits and are no longer on the official unemployment rolls of the State.

At the same time, over 250 employees of the Oregon State Employment Service have been served notice that their jobs will be eliminated this month. Never mind that these employees helped fill more than 80,000 jobs in the State in the last fiscal year.

The fact is this mere 12-percent cut in administrative funding resulted in a far greater impact to State employment service offices than most of us realized.

As unemployment continued to rise, it became obvious that few cuts could be made in the unemployment service positions. These employees are desperately needed to process the increasing number of claims. This left most State administrators with the task of cutting this 12 percent from nonpersonnel expenses and the employment services.

But the problem in cutting nonpersonnel expenses is that the savings are not immediately realized. It takes time to break a lease and gather an actual savings from reduced utility use.

Compound this problem with the fact that this cut was retroactive to October 1, 1981; yet most States were spending at higher target levels until January, when they received their new target levels. In Oregon we ended up with the unavoidable decision to completely shut down all job search services.

Even though I voted against this continuing resolution, I was shocked and embarrassed to see the States put in such a position of having no choice but to eliminate this service.

As I said earlier, I just cannot believe that my colleagues would have supported this cut had they known all the ramifications. And had we all known these ramifications, I do not think we would be here today, performing this rescue operation on one of our most valuable Government services.

As a final note, I just want to say that this whole episode has, at least for me, brought the credibility of the Department of Labor into severe question. I think the writing was on the wall back in May of last year, when Secretary Donovan, testifying before the House Labor, HHS, and Education Subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee made this statement regarding cuts in State employment service staffing:

> It is one of those areas that we preferred not to cut because it didn't sound logical. But now that we face that reality, it is not going to be as bad as it seems on the surface.

Well, I think today's exercise has proven that the exact opposite of Mr. Donovan's statement is true: The real circumstances are far worse than they seem on the surface, and far worse than Members of this body were led to believe.●

● Mr. WHITEHURST. Mr. Speaker, for the past several years, I, as well as my colleagues in the Virginia congressional delegation, have been concerned about the low rate of return of employer tax dollars received by Virginia under the Federal Unemployment Tax Act.

In recent years, the Virginia Employment Commission, which finds work for unemployed Virginians and distributes unemployment compensation to jobless workers, has been trapped in a catch-22. The more it accomplishes, the less the Federal Government, its sole funding source, contributes for its survival.

Mr. Speaker, it is time for a serious reconsideration of the formula used in distributing Federal unemployment tax dollars. Recent figures, based upon Department of Labor statistics, indicate that Virginia has consistently received the lowest return rate on these tax dollars while maintaining one of the most efficient and productive employment services programs in the Country. This bare minimum efficiency is being especially penalized by a 12-percent across-the-board funding cut, which ignores our State's prior efforts to reduce administrative costs, thus aggravating the inequities of the present distribution formula.

Specifically, for every dollar Virginia employers pay to operate their State employment service, only 43 cents make their way back to the Commonwealth of Virginia. In effect, Virginia businesses are contributing financial support, through the U.S. Department of Labor administration, to the District of Columbia and the other 49 States. In fact, some States, including Alaska, receive as much as 300 percent return on their tax dollars through Federal allocation of the unemployment tax dollars.

Despite the shoestring budget that it has had to work with, the Virginia Employment Commission ranks first in productivity within the mid-Atlantic region. Apparently, though, productivity is not always enough. Budget cuts in the last year have cut the Virginia Employment Commission's work force in half and closed 41 of its 67 offices. Centers in Suffolk, Virginia Beach, Chesapeake, Williamsburg, and Hampton are being closed, leaving only full-service offices in Norfolk and Newport News.

The situation in Virginia should be of concern to all of us. Virginia has been caught in its own web of operating a financially responsible State government. There was little fat to be trimmed away to begin with. These proposed cuts can only cut into the meat of the VEC, providing valuable employment services to our economy at a time when it is urgently needed.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support House Joint Resolution 391, which would provide a much-needed supplemental appropriation to the Department of Labor for unemployment insurance and employment services.●

● Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is vital to the Nation during this time of unusually high unemployment that the House adopt this supplemental appropriation for the Labor Department.

My concern stems from the exceedingly high rates of unemployment, not only across the country, but in my Fourth District of Ohio, which averages about 16 percent. The unemployed people of my district are all good citizens who have contributed a great deal to their State and country. They are all willing to work, but are unable to find openings in the job market. They are people who have suffered through tough economic times, both financially and personally; they should not be further burdened with unusual demands in order to obtain their lawful benefits.

In my State of Ohio, the Ohio Bureau of Employment Services has announced the closing of 37 State offices—4 of those in my district—due to fiscal constraints. When Congress passed the continuing resolution last December, $264 million was cut from the Nation's budget for moneys used by State employment offices. It was the intent of Congress when that resolution passed to mandate cutbacks in only job counseling services—used by a very small percentage of the unemployed—while leaving the unemployment insurance moneys virtually untouched.

As a result of the congressional action, the Department of Labor, in its January 1982 memorandum to all employment offices, reiterated Congress intent when it stated, "Unemployment insurance offices will be kept open, except when it is determined by the State employment services agency that services will improve by closing an office."

Despite these directives from the Federal level, some States have found it fiscally impossible to keep their offices open. In my district, many unemployed people who usually drove 2 to 3 miles to pick up their unemployment checks, will be forced to drive up to 70 miles weekly simply to receive their lawful benefits.

Mr. Speaker, the President's economic recovery program has just begun to take effect. Leading economists are predicting an upswing in employment during the next three quarters. However, in the short term, Ohio and the country are faced with high and unacceptable rates of unemployment. It is not the time to turn our backs on these individuals who want to work but cannot find employment.

I urge my colleagues to join with me in strong support of House Joint Resolution 391.●

● Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise now in support of the Appropriations Committee's bill to provide $2.3 billion in supplemental funds for State unemployment services and insurance for the rest of fiscal year 1982.

It is obvious now that the administration seriously underestimated the number of people who would become unemployed over the past few months and I am happy that yesterday, Congress rectified this lapse in judgment by a wide bipartisan margin.

When the continuing resolution was passed, the administration projected an average unemployment rate of 7.5 percent for 1982. Then, they revised it upward to 8.5 percent in January. Now, that same optimistic administration projects just under 9 percent; 14 States are currently paying extended benefits for an additional 13 weeks, and 34 are expected to start paying extended benefits during the balance of the year.

The 1982 need is so great apparently that the administration itself came in with a supplemental request for an additional $2.3 billion in additional appropriations for these people.

One wonders now, when people are hurting, why the inefficiency of cutting unemployment services and benefits at a time of rising unemployment was not more readily apparent when the continuing resolution was voted on in December.

No matter, at least my colleagues who voted the other way then have heard their people and now know their needs.●

● Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, I fully support an urgent fiscal year 1982 supplemental appropriation of $2.3 billion to help States pay for soaring unemployment compensation costs and to avert staffing reductions and closure of State employment security agencies.

This increased level of funding is crucial for the State of Ohio since it is one of the 18 States plagued by escalating unemployment rates and consequently must borrow from the Federal unemployment account. The most recently published figures for comparing National, State, and city unemployment rates reveal that in November, Ohio's rate of unemployment was 10.9 percent—three full percentage points above the national average of 7.9 percent. The unemployment rate for Cleveland, during that same period was a staggering 12.7 percent.

This supplemental appropriation is of special importance to Ohio in light of recent announcements that over 1,000 persons staffing the job services centers in Ohio would be laid off as a result of the Reagan administration budget cuts. Additionally, 37 of the centers were marked for closure. These centers provide valuable assistance in matching jobless workers to available jobs.

During a time when more than 9 million Americans are out of work, it would be irresponsible for the Members of Congress to stand idly by and not protect funding and staffing for the job service agencies that are so vital in serving the needs of the record number of unemployed workers of our Nation. It is incumbent upon the Congress to remedy the mistakes of the Reagan administration which proposed that staffing for these employment service offices be reduced. I urge swift approval of House Joint Resolution 391.●

● Mrs. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Joint Resolution 391, to provide $2.3 billion in supplemental funds for the Labor Department's unemployment programs. These figures are equal to the administration's February 1 request and I believe will provide much-needed relief to States and workers.

When the continuing resolution was passed, we were projecting an average unemployment rate of 7.5 percent for 1982. The unemployment rate in January was 8.5 percent and is expected to climb even higher. For example, the unemployment rate in my own State of Rhode Island has climbed a percentage point since we recessed last year.

We must provide our States with the necessary relief. Six States borrowed from the trust fund in January, and it is anticipated that an additional 12 States will need Federal funds in the future.

I call on my colleagues to help our States and the American worker by reducing some of those burdens imposed by the unemployment situation.●

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the joint resolution to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appear to have it.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 398, nays 3, not voting 33, as follows:

[Roll No. 6]

YEAS—398

Addabbo	Donnelly	Hopkins
Akaka	Dorgan	Howard
Albosta	Dougherty	Hoyer
Alexander	Dowdy	Hubbard
Anderson	Downey	Huckaby
Andrews	Dreier	Hughes
Annunzio	Duncan	Hunter
Anthony	Dunn	Hutto
Applegate	Dwyer	Hyde
Archer	Dyson	Ireland
Ashbrook	Eckart	Jacobs
Aspin	Edgar	Jeffords
Atkinson	Edwards (AL)	Jenkins
AuCoin	Edwards (CA)	Johnston
Badham	Edwards (OK)	Jones (NC)
Bafalis	Emerson	Jones (OK)
Bailey (MO)	Emery	Jones (TN)
Bailey (PA)	English	Kastenmeier
Barnard	Erdahl	Kazen
Barnes	Ertel	Kemp
Beard	Evans (DE)	Kennelly
Bedell	Evans (GA)	Kildee
Beilenson	Evans (IA)	Kindness
Benedict	Evans (IN)	Kogovsek
Benjamin	Fary	Kramer
Bennett	Fascell	LaFalce
Bereuter	Fazio	Lagomarsino
Bethune	Fenwick	Lantos
Bevill	Fiedler	Latta
Bingham	Fields	Leach
Blanchard	Fish	Leath
Bliley	Fithian	LeBoutillier
Boggs	Flippo	Lee
Bolling	Florio	Lehman
Boner	Foglietta	Leland
Bonior	Foley	Lent
Bonker	Ford (MI)	Levitas
Bouquard	Ford (TN)	Lewis
Bowen	Forsythe	Livingston
Breaux	Fountain	Loeffler
Brinkley	Fowler	Long (LA)
Brodhead	Frank	Long (MD)
Brooks	Frenzel	Lott
Brown (CO)	Frost	Lowery (CA)
Broyhill	Fuqua	Lowry (WA)
Burgener	Garcia	Lujan
Burton, John	Gaydos	Luken
Burton, Phillip	Gejdenson	Lundine
Butler	Gephardt	Lungren
Byron	Gilman	Madigan
Campbell	Gingrich	Markey
Carman	Ginn	Marlenee
Carney	Glickman	Marriott
Chappie	Gonzalez	Martin (IL)
Chisholm	Goodling	Martin (NC)
Clausen	Gore	Martin (NY)
Clay	Gradison	Matsui
Clinger	Gramm	Mattox
Coats	Gray	Mavroules
Coelho	Green	McClory
Coleman	Gregg	McCollum
Collins (IL)	Grisham	McCurdy
Collins (TX)	Guarini	McDade
Conable	Gunderson	McEwen
Conte	Hagedorn	McGrath
Conyers	Hall (OH)	McHugh
Corcoran	Hall, Ralph	Mica
Coughlin	Hall, Sam	Michel
Courter	Hamilton	Mikulski
Coyne, James	Hammerschmidt	Miller (CA)
Coyne, William	Hance	Miller (OH)
Craig	Hansen (ID)	Mineta
Crockett	Hansen (UT)	Minish
D'Amours	Harkin	Mitchell (MD)
Daniel, Dan	Hartnett	Mitchell (NY)
Daniel, R. W.	Hatcher	Moakley
Danielson	Hawkins	Moffett
Dannemeyer	Heckler	Molinari
Daschle	Hefner	Mollohan
Daub	Heftel	Montgomery
Davis	Hendon	Moore
de la Garza	Hertel	Moorhead
Deckard	Hightower	Morrison
Dellums	Hiler	Mottl
Derwinski	Hillis	Murphy
Dicks	Holland	Murtha
Dingell	Hollenbeck	Myers
Dixon	Holt	Napier
Natcher	Roth	Stratton
Neal	Roukema	Studds
Nelligan	Rousselot	Stump
Nelson	Roybal	Swift
Nichols	Rudd	Synar
Nowak	Russo	Tauke
O'Brien	Sabo	Tauzin
Oakar	Savage	Taylor
Oberstar	Sawyer	Thomas
Obey	Scheuer	Traxler
Ottinger	Schneider	Trible
Oxley	Schroeder	Udall
Panetta	Schulze	Vander Jagt
Parris	Schumer	Vento
Pashayan	Seiberling	Volkmer
Patman	Sensenbrenner	Walgren
Patterson	Shamansky	Walker
Pease	Shannon	Washington
Pepper	Sharp	Watkins
Perkins	Shaw	Waxman
Petri	Shelby	Weber (MN)
Pickle	Shumway	Weber (OH)
Porter	Shuster	Weiss
Price	Siljander	White
Pritchard	Simon	Whitehurst
Quillen	Skeen	Whitley
Rahall	Skelton	Whittaker
Railsback	Smith (AL)	Whitten
Rangel	Smith (IA)	Williams (OH)
Ratchford	Smith (NE)	Winn
Regula	Smith (NJ)	Wirth
Reuss	Smith (OR)	Wolf
Rhodes	Smith (PA)	Wolpe
Richmond	Snowe	Wortley
Rinaldo	Snyder	Wright
Ritter	Solarz	Wyden
Roberts (KS)	Solomon	Wylie
Roberts (SD)	Spence	Yates
Robinson	St Germain	Yatron
Rodino	Stangeland	Young (AK)
Roe	Stanton	Young (FL)
Roemer	Stark	Young (MO)
Rogers	Staton	Zablocki
Rosenthal	Stenholm	Zeferetti
Rostenkowski	Stokes

NAYS—3

Crane, Philip	McDonald	Paul

NOT VOTING—33

Biaggi	Dornan	Mazzoli
Boland	Dymally	McCloskey
Broomfield	Early	McKinney
Brown (CA)	Erlenborn	Peyser
Brown (OH)	Ferraro	Pursell
Chappell	Findley	Rose
Cheney	Gibbons	Santini
Crane, Daniel	Goldwater	Wampler
DeNardis	Horton	Weaver
Derrick	Jeffries	Williams (MT)
Dickinson	Marks	Wilson

□ 1820

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Mr. Biaggi with Mr. Broomfield.
Mr. Derrick with Mr. McCloskey.
Mr. Chappell with Mr. Wampler.
Mr. Boland with Mr. Pursell.
Mr. Early with Mr. McKinney.
Mr. Peyser with Mr. Rose.
Mr. Santini with Mr. Erlenborn.
Mr. Wilson with Ms. Ferraro.
Mr. Mazzoli with Mr. Horton.
Mr. Brown of California with Mr. Jefferies.
Mr. Weaver with Mr. Findley.
Mr. Williams of Montana with Mr. Brown of Ohio.
Mr. Dymally with Mr. Goldwater.
Mr. Dickinson with Mr. Cheney.
Mr. DeNardis with Mr. Daniel B. Crane.

Mr. MOORHEAD changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the joint resolution was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HOUR OF MEETING ON TOMORROW

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 a.m. tomorrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if I could address a question to the distinguished majority whip.

What do we anticipate the schedule will be when we come in at the assigned hour of 11 o'clock?

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. FOLEY. I thank the distinguished Republican whip for yielding to me.

As the gentleman knows, we had originally scheduled for today consideration of the Justice Assistance Act of 1981. Because Members had been given assurance that the House would rise shortly after 6 o'clock that item has been rescheduled until tomorrow, and the reason that we are asking for the 11 o'clock hour is to take up that matter.

We have no other legislative plans for tomorrow other than to complete the schedule that was originally intended for completion today.

Mr. LOTT. So no other business is on the agenda, so we can anticipate an early afternoon adjournment tomorrow; is that correct?

Mr. FOLEY. I would expect an early afternoon adjournment tomorrow as far as we are concerned, unless some matter comes over from the Senate.

Mr. LOTT. Further reserving the right to object, I would like to also inquire as to whether or not the Senate has acted on the adjournment resolution? I believe we did act on that adjournment resolution earlier. Does the majority whip have that information?

Mr. FOLEY. I am advised that the Senate has not acted on it. My advice is coming very quickly, but from a very authoritative source, I will tell the gentleman, and one I harken.

Mr. LOTT. The gentleman is getting this from a reliable source?

Mr. FOLEY. Yes, the most reliable that can be found in the House of Representatives.

Mr. LOTT. I thank the gentleman. I wanted to find out where we were on that adjournment resolution, what we might anticipate from the other body.

Mr. FOLEY. We are hoping to get out at a very reasonable hour tomorrow.

□ 1830

Mr. LOTT. Will we get the program for the rest of the week tomorrow afternoon before we adjourn?

Mr. FOLEY. Yes.

Mr. LOTT. And for the next week?

Mr. FOLEY. Yes.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington (Mr. FOLEY)?

There was no objection.

SUMMARY REPORT OF DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY SUNSET REVIEW—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 97-142)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee on Government Operations and the Committee on Energy and Commerce, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

Transmitted herewith is the Summary Report of the Department of Energy Sunset Review. A Program-by-Program Analysis which provides detailed background information is being transmitted at the same time by the Secretary of Energy. These two volumes together satisfy the requirements of Title X of the Department of Energy Organization Act (P.L. 95-91).

I have asked Secretary Edwards and his staff to be available to respond to any questions or comments you may have regarding the Department of Energy Sunset Report.

RONALD REAGAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 9, 1982.

□ 1215

THE NEED FOR A NEW POLICY IN EL SALVADOR

(Mr. McHUGH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McHUGH. Mr. Speaker, as recent events make clear, President Reagan has decided to escalate U.S. military assistance to the Government of El Salvador rather than work toward a political solution which could end the violence in that tragic country. This is a policy without support at home and one which is bound to fail abroad.

The instability and unrest in El Salvador are not primarily the result of aggression by Cuba, Nicaragua, or the Soviet Union. While leftists surely seek to capitalize on events for their own purposes, the fundamental problem in El Salvador has always been the inability or unwillingness of the Salvadoran Government to address the compelling needs of its own people.

For generations the vast majority of Salvadorans have been exploited economically, denied politically, and, worst of all, have been the victims of indiscriminate violence. This repression has been carried out not by outside aggressors, but by the Salvadoran Government itself, oftentimes working in concert with the privileged oligarchs. Inevitably, the Government was unable to generate popular support. Inevitably, leftists sought to take advantage of popular disaffection by championing the cause of the oppressed. Inevitably, resistance grew, even among so essentially conservative and Catholic a people as the Salvadorans.

Some attempts were made at reform, particularly land reform, and for a time there was hope that more progressive elements could turn the Government away from its traditional policies of repression. Indeed, for a time there seemed to be some modest progress in efforts to bring the security forces under control and to begin addressing the pressing economic needs of the people.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, these efforts are at the brink of a failure. As our Government has increasingly defined El Salvador as a contest between East and West, and as the flow of arms has increased, the hand of the old Salvadoran militarists has been strengthened, the need for them to implement fundamental reforms has diminished, and the indiscriminate violence has continued.

As a result, the Salvadoran Government grows weaker. As the killing goes on—with American arms—popular support further erodes and the opposition grows stronger. Predictably, the Reagan administration responds by escalating the flow of weapons, raising military aid from its 1980 level of $6 million to $80 million today. Next year, we are told, it will be more.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe a victory by the extreme left will serve the interests of the United States or the Salvadoran people. But our current policy will not succeed in avoiding that outcome. Military arms alone will not sustain the Salvadoran Government. It will be sustained only if it respects the lives and property of its own citizens and is more effective in meeting their legitimate economic and political aspirations. U.S. military aid can be justified only if it pursues such a policy.

Congress recognized this by making it a condition of continued military assistance that the President certify to Congress that, among other things, the Salvadoran Government "is achieving substantial control over all elements of its own armed forces so as to bring to an end the indiscriminate torture and murder of Salvadoran citizens by these forces." The Salvadoran Government has clearly failed to meet that condition. Nonetheless, the President has recently delivered his certification, apparently in total disregard of the evidence indicating that indiscriminate killing by government forces goes on.

The President was also required to certify that the Salvadoran Government was "making continued progress in implementing essential economic and political reforms, including the land reform program." He has also certified that this condition has been met. Yet, as a recent report demonstrates, the land reform program is stalled and on the verge of collapse.

This is the view advanced by the Union Comunal Salvadorena (UCS), the main campesino organization supporting the land reform program in El Salvador. In a report published in December, the UCS concluded that:

Over 25,000 campesino families intended as beneficiaries under the land-to-the-tiller program had been evicted from their land before the 1981 spring planting, and that thousands more had been evicted since then;

Thousands of campesino families were being forced to pay rents to former landlords in spite of the fact that they had no legal obligation to do so;

Many campesinos and at least 20 of their representatives had been murdered in their efforts to enjoy their rights under the land reform law;

Less than 10 percent of former tenant farmers and sharecroppers had received provisional titles under the law, and that a far smaller number had received titles that contained an adequate description of the land supposedly being turned over to the campesino; and

Only 2 of more than 300 cooperatives on the larger estates taken under phase 1 of the program had received provisional titles.

Compensation of former landowners was proceeding slowly.

On the basis of this evidence the UCS concluded as follows:

> What had begun in March and April 1980 with bright promise, and had continued to show bright promise even through the end of 1980, now threatens to become a nightmare of bureaucratic redtape, evictions and killings, in which it will soon be beyond the capacity of the government or the campesino leadership to prevent a complete loss of faith by our country's campesinos in the agrarian reform program.

In the face of this evidence, the President seems intent on escalating military aid in the hope of achieving a military victory. Secretary Haig has even failed to rule out the use of American troops if that should be necessary. We must ask, to what end? To sustain a government that does not enjoy the support of its own people, a government that continues to violate their fundamental rights, a government that despite large infusions of American weapons, cannot control large areas of the country because of growing sympathy for the opposition?

Although President Duarte may still want to end the violence and repression, he lacks the political power to do so. He is dominated by the military. I also believe that there are elements of the opposition that would like to negotiate a peaceful settlement. Many of them are not of the extreme left, and indeed some have served in prior juntas where they sought unsuccessfully to bring about equitable and democratic reforms. In the face of resistance from the entrenched military, they gave up and joined the opposition.

Because there is at least some hope for a negotiated solution, it has been urged upon both sides by the Catholic Church and by other nations in the region such as Venezuela and Mexico. These efforts have come to naught, at least in part because the United States is intent on a military solution. In pursuing such a policy, we have weakened the moderates and strengthened the extremists on both sides.

Perhaps it is too late. Perhaps an attempt at negotiations would fail. We cannot be sure. What we can be sure about, however, is that our current policy is not working. The more we pursue a military solution, the greater grip the military has on the Salvadoran Government. The greater their grip, the less concern there is in controlling the indiscriminate violence by government forces and in achieving meaningful reform. The less that concern, the more popular disaffection and loss of government control. It is a no win policy.

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, Congress has tried to convey these concerns to the administration by requiring the President to certify that the Salvadoran Government is making substantial progress toward reform. The President has essentially disregarded these concerns. In these circumstances, the Salvadoran Government is sure to do so also. I believe the only avenue open to Congress now is a complete termination of military aid until such time as Congress itself determines that the conditions we have imposed by law have been met. The purpose would not be to promote a military victory by the opposition, but rather to demonstrate to the President and the Salvadoran Government that Congress is serious when it says it wants a substantial reduction in the indiscriminate killing and meaningful efforts toward equitable reform. If we fail to demonstrate our resolve, there will be no change in policy, no possibility for a peaceful solution, and no chance that American aid and influence will avoid a leftist victory.

For these reasons, I urge my colleagues in the House to support our efforts to terminate military assistance to El Salvador at this time.

HOME VIDEO RECORDING ACT OF 1982

(Mr. EDWARDS of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, the Congress is now faced with a serious issue involving the relationship of our copyright law to a new and appealing communications technology. I am speaking of the home video recorder which is fast becoming the most popular home entertainment product since the introduction of television. Today there are nearly 3 million video cassette recorders—VCR's—in the United States. It is estimated that by the end of this decade, 35 to 40 million VCR's will have been imported from Japan enabling millions of American families to tape programs received on their home television sets through direct broadcast, cable, or satellite transmission. The entertainment and educational values of this new technology are immense.

Late last year, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit reversed a district court ruling and held that off-the-air recording of audiovisual materials by VCR owners for private use constituted copyright infringement. The court of appeals based its decision on the absence of an explicit exemption for home video recording in the Copyright Act of 1976. The court also held that home video recording does not fall within the "fair use" doctrine which provides a limited exemption from infringement for limited uses of copyrighted works.

In the wake of the decision by the court of appeals, several of my colleagues in both bodies introduced legislation which would create an exemption from copyright liability for private use of home video recorders.

I support the basic goal of legislation which would exempt home video recorder use from liability for copyright infringement. However, I believe that Congress, in legitimizing off-the-air home video recording, also has a responsibility to protect the rights of those who create and own intellectual property. In so doing, the Congress would not be breaking new legislative ground. Rather, it would be acting in a manner fully consistent with the copyright clause of our Constitution, the protection of private property which is one of the basic precepts of our economy, and the principles and practice of modern copyright law in the United States and in other industrial democracies. The ninth circuit's interpretation of the law was correct. Now is the time to change the law so it can take into account the introduction of a new and important technology.

Today I am introducing a bill which will exempt owners of home video recorders from copyright liability, but at the same time establish a mechanism for the compensation of the creaters and owners of all types of entertainment programs for the use of their property. The bill is similar to an amendment introduced in the other body by Senator MATHIAS of Maryland and cosponsored by the majority leader, Mr. BAKER of Tennessee, the minority leader, Mr. BYRD of West Virginia, and the minority whip, Mr. CRANSTON of California. I am pleased to be joined in introducing this proposal by my colleagues, Mr. MOORHEAD, Mr. PASHAYAN and Mr. WAXMAN of California, and Mrs. SCHROEDER of Colorado.

Although the legislation I am introducing today deals only with the problem of home video recording, the U.S. music industry is facing a similar problem with home audio taping—the copying of sound recordings and musical works not only from radio and other transmissions, but also from prerecorded discs and tapes. As Congress reviews the home taping problem for the video industry, I am sure the impact of home taping on the music industry will also be explored. I would certainly lend my support to separate legislation which addresses this very real problem.

Mr. Speaker, the element of compensation is critical because compensation for the use of intellectual property is, and always has been, a necessary incentive for its creation. Society benefits when copyright owners are justly compensated for the use of their property, because compensation provides the impetus for the creation of intellectual work.

The compensation provision of this legislation provides a sensible and equitable means of achieving a valid and desirable goal. It would work as follows:

The importers and manufacturers of VCR's and blank video casettes would be required to provide the Register of Copyrights with information relating to the number of VCR's and video cassettes they import, manufacture, and distribute.

The Copyright Royalty Tribunal—CRT—an administrative body created by the Congress in the 1976 Copyright Act, would determine appropriate and reasonable royalty fees to be paid by the manufacturers and importers of VCR's and blank video cassettes. This royalty will provide fair compensation to the owners of audiovisual programs for the home recording of their works. The Tribunal would distribute the royalty fees to copyright owners on a yearly basis, as it now does for royalty fees owed for the use of copyrighted work by cable TV and jukeboxes.

The CRT is the appropriate body to determine the level of compensation and it will do so in a full, evidentiary hearing after it has received testimony from a variety of interested parties.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out that the copyright royalty fees envisioned by this legislation are not likely to be passed on to the consumer. The sale of VCR's is a highly competitive business with the major retail sales of these products occurring on a discount basis. The prices for the same piece of equipment vary widely, as anybody who investigates the purchase of VCR quickly learns. Highly competitive prices for VCR's and blank tapes, which now range from approximately $450 to $1,100 per machine and $14 to $18 per blank cassette, combined with declining import duties on these items and advances in technology, make it highly unlikely that the American consumer will be faced with an increased retail cost as a result of this copyright royalty fee.

In the past, the electronics industry has shown itself to be remarkably adaptable to similar costs which were needed to take new technologies into account. In 1962, when the Congress was considering the All-Channel Receivers Act which required that manufacturers of televisions place UHF tuners on all sets, the electronics industry claimed that it would increase the cost of the TV to consumers by as much as $30. Three years later, the FCC reported to the Congress that there was actually a price reduction of televisions with all channel receivers compared to VHF only models.

Unauthorized, uncompensated use of copyrighted material, which is an infringement of copyright, significantly diminishes that property's economic worth. Thus, just compensation for the creators and owners of copyrighted intellectual property is a right which the Congress must protect. Congressional action which would deny copyright owners such protection would deprive them of control over the use of their property, and thus would deprive them of the true value.

The need for economic protection of copyrighted works stems from the additional fact that increasing use of home video recorders has a direct and lasting impact on two important segments of the American entertainment industry: those corporations that produce audiovisual programs and the hundreds of thousands of labor and guild members whose livelihood depends upon the vitality of this industry. Plainly put, the widespread use of VCR for off-the-air taping undermines the revenue potential to be derived from the creation and ownership of motion pictures and other programs for television.

The need for adequate compensation for those who create intellectual property for this purpose is clear, as the costs of creating and marketing audiovisual programs today are enormous. Those who invest in these entertainment programs must depend on licensing their products in important secondary markets, such as pay cable and pay TV, network television, prerecorded video cassettes, discs, and syndicated television to recoup their investment. When millions of copies of their programs are made by home viewers who use a VCR, the value of the copyrighted property in these ancillary markets is substantially reduced. Deprived of these markets, copyright owners will have only two choices: (1) produce less intellectual property; or (2) limit the distribution of works produced so that these programs cannot be recorded by the consumer without compensating the copyright owner. In either event, the public is the big loser. I believe that a reasonable copyright royalty fee on video recorders and blank tapes paid by the manufacturers, distributors, and importers who profit from home taping is an equitable solution to this complex problem.

I am sure my colleagues will soon be told that the bill I am introducing today is somehow "anticonsumer." I do not believe that for a moment, based on the economics of the VCR and video cassette industries and the historical precedent I just discussed. Moreover, because this legislation treats both the VCR owner and the creator of intellectual property fairly, it assures Americans they will continue to have access to television and motion pictures of high quality. Legislation that omits any form of copyright protection for creators and owners of intellectual property is not only constitutionally unsound, but is also destined to seriously erode the economic health of the U.S. entertainment industry. Thus, I hope that my colleagues in the House will support this alternative which I believe protects the public's right to view, the manufacturers' and importers' right to sell, and the artist's right to create.

NATIONAL HEALTH PROTECTION FOR SENIOR CITIZENS

(Mr. BONKER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Speaker, if I were a senior citizen today, dependent on the promises of the Federal Government to uphold its commitment to social security, medicare, medicaid, and other programs, I would find myself very confused and demoralized. This administration, in the name of "economic recovery," is forcing deep cuts in social and entitlement programs that older Americans have rightfully come to depend on.

President Reagan's budget proposals for fiscal year 1983 for medicare in particular discredit the Federal Government's earlier commitment to provide citizens 65 years and over with a degree of health care protection. Even today, medicare is not fulfilling its earlier pledge to the elderly of adequate reimbursement for health care services. And now Congress is being asked to increase the out-of-pocket expenses of medicare recipients by another round of budgetary proposals to reduce benefits. This represents a benefit loss of $5 billion next year and $16 billion by fiscal year 1987.

Let us not forget that the medicare program is sustained by a trust fund, paid into by workers and employers, and is apart from the general fund. The hospital insurance trust fund is the only one in the entire budgetary system that is solvent. To make deep cuts here will only drain the trust fund's surplus while denying eligible recipients of their benefits. It is false economy and an affront to senior citizens.

Since coming to Congress I have long been committed to and have worked for improved health care services for the elderly. As a member of the Select Committee on Aging, I have seen startling evidence of the shortcomings of medicare to meet the staggering health needs of senior citizens. When medicare was enacted by Congress in 1964, it was estimated that the program would cover 75 percent of the medical needs of older Americans; today the program covers only about 38 percent. While private health insurance programs and medicaid have adequately protected most Americans, it has become painfully clear that senior citizens are today's true victims of the health care crisis.

That is why I have decided to introduce new legislation entitled, "Comprehensive Medicare Reform Act of 1982," or national health protection for senior citizens. This bill would amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to provide for comprehensive services under the medicare program.

Why introduce such a bill which will add several billions in new outlays to the Federal budget in these times of budget-slashing by the Reagan administration? The answer is a simple one. we should not be deterred from working toward our goal nor default on our commitments to provide senior citizens with decent health care. As Congress sorts through and rearranges its priorities, the inescapable conclusion will be that this is the greatest and most urgent need in the country.

The need for a comprehensive health plan is particularly accute for senior citizens, whose dependence on health care services increases with age. With the majority of American workers presently covered through existing health insurance where they work and medicaid taking care of the indigent, the group that is left without protection are senior citizens.

The views of this group were clearly voiced at the recent White House Conference on Aging. The need for comprehensive health care protection was of principle concern to the conference's delegates. Among the final resolutions to emerge from the conference was a long list of expanded health care services under medicare, very similar to the legislation I am introducing today.

The history of the medicare program is one of good intentions, but badly compromised results. In 1964, when Congress passed the medicare program, it was revealed that older people are sick three times as often and three times as long, and generally pay three times as much for their health care than the young.

For example, the average health care bill for an elderly person in 1978 was $2,026. This is seven times the $286 per capita spending for the under 19 age group and two and one-half times the $764 per capita expenditures for persons aged 19 to 64. Due to this disproportionate share of health care costs, the elderly are bearing the burden, causing many on fixed incomes to be reduced to poverty before qualifying for full health assistance.

From the beginning, medicare was punctured with compromises to make it more palatable for congressional action. It was to be financed by taxes paid by both employers and employees with minimal supplements from the Federal Government and the elderly themselves. What was originally a promise of full health care protection turned out to be limited care.

In 1966, the first year medicare was implemented, the average health care bill for individuals over 65 was $445, of which medicare paid only $204, or 46 percent of the bill. By 1978, the average health care bill for those over 65 was $2,026, yet medicare paid only $891, or 44 percent of the expenses.

Time and time again, oversight hearings on the medicare program find that recipients are not being adequately reimbursed for medical expenses. The elderly are understandably confused and frustrated as to why this program that originally guaranteed 80-percent reimbursement actually pays only 44 percent or approximately half of what it promises, at the same time that the cost of supplemental health insurance is going up.

The gaps in health care coverage for senior citizens are severe. Here are the expenses an older person now pays to have coverage under medicare, part B.

First. Monthly premium, $11.

Second. Medigap supplemental insurance, $17; total, $28.

Third. Other possible charges: 20 percent of physician's bill. If physician charges above what medicare considers "reasonable charge," the patient pays the excess.

Twenty-eight dollars per month for additional insurance is a real sacrifice for senior citizens living on a fixed income, especially when even this expense does not guarantee that their health care expenses will be covered.

My national health protection for senior citizens bill will accomplish two major changes in the current medicare program. First, the bill includes a long overdue updating of the physician's charge scale under part B, in an effort to encourage more physicians to accept medicare patients. Over the past several years, the number of physicians willing to accept medicare patients on the assignment basis—physician reimbursement at 80 percent of established "reasonable charge"—has been declining rapidly. Today, less than 50 percent of our Nation's physicians are accepting medicare assignment.

The most important part of my bill, however, is the expansion of basic services and the much-needed reduction of costly deductibles and coinsurance payments. These expenses have become intolerable burdens for many elderly citizens, the majority of whom spend 70 percent more for medical care than younger Americans.

National health protection for senior citizens provides total coverage of hospital and hospital-related costs under part A and reduces the cost of part B for recipients to the current monthly premium, a $75 deductible, and only a 10-percent coinsurance level instead of the current 20 percent.

Services covered under part B will be expanded to include prescription drugs, routine dental and eye care, preventive services and increased mental health care coverage. Passage of this bill will mean guaranteed health care coverage for senior citizens.

The price tag for any form of national health insurance will be high. However, if we ever are going to meet the needs of a fast-growing elderly population such expenditures must be made. I believe that by utilizing the legislative and administrative framework already in place we can meet the urgent health care needs of today's elderly more effectively and economically, while buying time to more carefully prepare our health care system for the increase in health care needs brought about by the future senior boom.

The elderly people of this country can no longer afford to wait for the Congress to decide which direction they will take in the health care field; whether it be national health insurance or a procompetition approach.

This Congress must recognize the greatest need of the older American. Guaranteeing them basic protection against the fear and costly burden of health care is the least we can do for those who sacrficed to make this country what it is today.

GENERAL MIHAILOVICH AND THE 500 RESCUED AMERICAN AIRMEN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois, (Mr. DERWINSKI) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Speaker, as my colleagues know, I have taken a strong interest for many years now in the case of Gen. Draja Mihailovich, leader of the democratic anti-Nazi resistance forces in Yugoslavia during World War II. In 1967, I finally got the State Department, after a good deal of evasion of their part, to declassify the fact that President Truman, acting on the recommendation of General Eisenhower, had posthumously conferred on General Mihailovich an American decoration, the Legion of Merit in the Degree of Supreme Commander. It was, of course, ridiculous that the fact of the award had been classified in the first place. I doubt very much that there is another case on record where one of the highest awards for service to the United States and the cause of freedom has been classified.

During World War II, after Mihailovich had been abandoned by Britain and the United States and at a time when our planes were regularly dropping supplies to the Communist forces then attacking him, Mihailovich was responsible for saving the lives of some 500 American airmen who parachuted into Yugoslavia from disabled aircraft. For this, he received no recognition at the time and no expression of gratitude. The airmen were evacuated from Yugoslavia by a special task force of the 15th Air Force, named "The Halyard Mission," the bulk of them being airlifted from an improvised and heavily protected airstrip only 80 miles from Belgrade.

When Mihailovich was captured by the Tito forces in March of 1946 and the announcement was made that he would be placed on trial as a collaborator, the American airmen who had been rescued by Mihailovich organized themselves into a "National Committee of American Airmen to Aid General Mihailovich and the Serbian People." They sent a wire to the Belgrade government asking to be permitted to testify on Mihailovich's behalf. Needless to say, the Tito government refused, just as they refused to accept the testimony of the several American officers who had been attached to the Mihailovich forces during the period when we supported him.

In 1974, the American airmen again came together and launched a new movement, the "National Committee of American Airmen Rescued by General Mihailovich." They petitioned Congress to enact legislation which would enable them to erect a memorial as an expression of gratitude to the man who had saved their lives. I introduced such legislation in the 95th Congress, and parallel legislation was introduced on the Senate side. The measure was favorably reported by the Senate Rules Committee and approved by the full Senate without dissenting vote in June of 1977. It was again approved by the Senate in the 96th Congress. On the House side, however, although hearings have been held, it has never been reported by committee because of the strong opposition by the Department of State that the government of Marshal Tito would be affronted by such an award.

On May 12 of last year, I introduced this bill again, with the support of cosponsors. In my conversations with State, I have repeatedly made the point that Tito has now been dead for several years, while Mihailovich has been dead for 36 years, and the only thing that should really count now is that there are some 500 American airmen who feel that they have a debt of honor to discharge to the man who saved their lives and who wish to do it without getting involved in partisanship or dipomatic controversies. I not only sympathize with the position the airmen have taken, but I feel that the United States, too, has a debt of honor—perhaps a larger one—in the case of General Mihailovich.

In this connection, I think it would be proper to reply to the State Department's position that the Yugoslav Government regards General Mihailovich as a collaborator and it would therefore be an affront to them to permit the airmen to proceed with their project.

Recently, I received a letter from Mr. David Martin, author of "Patriot or Traitor, The Case of General Mihailovich," which throws a new and rather sensational light on the Anglo-American abandonment of General Mihailovich. In his book, Martin charged that there were elements in SOE Cairo—the SOE was the British equivalent of the United States OSS—who had sabotaged United States and British supply of Mihailovich even when it was official policy to support him, and had slanted and suppressed intelligence for the purpose of inducing the Western Allies to switch their support from Mihailovich to Tito. He provided substantial documentation for his charges and he named a certain Maj. James Klugman, who had been publicly identified with the Communist movement both before and after World War II, as the man primarily responsible. Martin stopped short, however, of naming Klugman as a Soviet agent.

Klugman, it should be pointed out, belonged to the same remarkable group of left-wing intellectuals at Cambridge University which produced such notorious Soviet agents as Kim Philby, Anthony Blunt, Guy Burgess, and Donald Maclean. By common consent, Klugman was the most brilliant of the group. The proof that he had been a hireling of Soviet intelligence was still lacking when Andrew Boyle first brought out his book, "The Climate of Treason," in 1979. Since then, however, John Cairncross, a confessed Soviet agent who held a number of important positions in the British intelligence and diplomatic services during and after the war, has identified Klugman as the man who recruited him for Soviet intelligence. The Cairncross confession has been reported in some detail by the well-known British journalist, Chapman Pincher, in his recent book, "Their Trade Is Treachery."

So now there is no doubt at all about the identity of James Klugman.

The recent letter I received from David Martin informed me of the Cairncross development and reexamined some of the key documents he had unearthed in the light of this new information. In asking unanimous consent to have the text of Martin's letter inserted into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I would like particularly to call attention to two of his statements.

On his opening page, Martin says:

> The story of James Klugman is of major interest to our current personnel security problems in government because it illustrates how a quite junior military officer or government servant, in an obscure position, can play a major role in confusing and misdirecting the foreign policy of countries like the United States and Great Britain.

Martin quotes Sir Douglas Howard, who was in charge of Yugoslav affairs for the Foreign Office during World War II, as writing to him:

> I have read and reread your letter . . . with great interest, and with a certain measure of astonishment . . . If, of course, as now seems more than possible, our information re Mihailovich's activities where incomplete, to say the least, then the whole affair changes color . . . If the information contained in your work had been available to us at the time, our whole policy might and probably would, have been very different. (Emphasis added.)

The second point Martin makes is that bad intelligence or deliberately falsified intelligence inevitably leads to wrong decisions. "That is precisely what happened," he said, "when the British and American Governments, on the basis of the slanted and falsified intelligence sent to London by SOE Cairo and by the Yugoslav section of the Secret Intelligence Service (MI6), decided to abandon the prodemocratic and pro-Western forces of Gen. Draja Mihailovich in favor of the Communist-controlled movement led by his rival, Marshal Tito."

Perhaps it was bad intelligence that was responsible for the shameful act of moral derelictation. But that does not altogether absolve the British and Amerian Governments of responsibility for the consequences of their actions. I want to suggest to my colleagues of the House subcommittee which has the responsibility for reporting this legislation that the honor of America is engaged in this project and to remind them that it enjoys the endorsement of organizations as diverse as the American Legion and the AFL-CIO. I earnestly hope that they will not delay reporting the measure until it is too late for the present Congress to work its will by a straight up and down vote.●

DAIRY PROGRAM REVIEW

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlemen from Vermont (Mr. JEFFORDS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, during the consideration of the 1981 farm bill, I offered language that requires the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct a study of both the strengths and weaknesses of existing Federal programs and the consequences of possible new programs for controlling or minimizing surpluses of fluid milk and milk products. This study is due the Agriculture Committees of the House and Senate no later than December 31, 1982.

Concurrent with the study mandate, the President's Task Force on Regulatory Relief targeted marketing orders for review. The first such review was recently completed and Secretary of Agriculture John R. Block endorsed, on January 25, the continued use of Federal marketing order programs for fruits, vegetables and specialty crops, and announced new guidelines to influence future Government decisions and industry actions under the orders. Secretary Block, in releasing the study, said that marketing orders make a significant contribution to market stability, and that he favors these programs.

I am hopeful that the administration will evaluate the milk marketing order program, which provides for the efficient marketing of milk and dairy products, as a part of the study mandated by section 107 of the Agriculture and Food Act of 1981.

I urge my colleagues to support one study, as required by law, that is directed toward improving the efficiency and operation of existing dairy programs, to include milk marketing orders.●

COMMITTEE FUNDING REQUESTS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) is recognized for 20 minutes.

● Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, last week the Subcommittee on Accounts of the Committee on House Administration began hearing the committee budget requests for 1982.

The 1970's witnessed an unparalleled growth in the cost of committee operations. Numerous new subcommittees were established. Generous complements of staff were added to both the full and subcommittee levels—all which contributed to the demands for ever higher committee funding levels. Yet, during that period, the Committee on House Administration gave little more than a perfunctory review to these funding requests.

Last year, however, marked a significant departure from the extravagance of the past. The Subcommittee on Accounts—under the leadership of its new chairman, Representative FRANK ANNUNZIO, and its ranking minority member, Representative BOB BADHAM—succeeded in imposing fiscal restraint on committees, significantly reducing a number of committee budgets.

Although many Members believe that even deeper cuts should have been made, the fact is that the spendthrift pattern of the past was broken and for that the subcommittee deserves great praise. This year, in the evaluation of the 1982 requests, it is my hope that we can hold the line against any unnecessary increases.

These resolutions, which authorize funds from January 3 of one year to January 3 of the next, represent however only part of the total operational cost of our committee system. They authorize the hiring of investigative staff, and such expenses as domestic travel, consultants, witness fees, publications, and equipment.

But these resolutions do not reflect the salaries of statutory staff—those provided pursuant to the rule XI, clause 6, of the rules of the House—or committee printing costs, or certain stationery and communications expenses. And two panels, Appropriations and Budget, and also joint committees, are totally exempt from the scrutiny of the committee authorization process. At a later time, I hope to document for this body such hidden costs of committee operation.

For now, it should be sufficient to note that the appropriation for statutory staff amounted to over $29 million for 1981. That figure nearly equals the authorization for investigatory staff of all standing committees.

Mr. Speaker, at this point, I would like to insert in the RECORD a table which presents the funding resolutions, approved by the House, during the period of 1971 to 1981. I hope the table will give all Members a set of common figures to use in debate on committee funding resolutions.

FUNDING AUTHORIZATIONS 1971–81

	1971	1972 [1]	1973	1974 [1]	1975	1976	1977	1978	1979	1980	1981
Standing committees:
Agriculture	250,000		150,000	150,000	788,000	[2] 797,561	1,070,200	910,000	1,025,000	1,247,200	1,184,840
Armed Services	300,000	150,000	225,000	150,000	836,275	718,000	590,500	645,000	677,000	827,000	952,223
Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs	975,000	684,800	1,226,300	912,000	1,797,000	2,079,113	2,613,590	2,613,590	2,444,600	2,560,287	2,414,919
District of Columbia	220,000	30,000	275,000	275,000	[2] 375,411	407,800	275,000	275,000	315,000	289,670	275,187
Education and Labor [3]	1,350,000	1,128,000	1,440,000	1,180,000	1,600,000	2,320,000	1,900,000	2,160,000	2,250,000	2,522,200	2,565,448
Pension Task Force			[4] 220,000		[4] 298,000		[4] 226,000		167,500	207,200
Foreign Affairs	425,580	511,082	607,500	561,235	965,000	[2] 1,051,169	[2] 1,609,983	[2] 1,745,780	[2] 1,745,780	1,875,124	1,800,119
Subcommittee on International Organizations (Korean investigation)							310,000	375,000
Government Operations	1,032,600	800,000	1,219,700	891,300	1,540,000	1,589,000	1,645,598	1,952,500	2,093,500	2,274,900	2,229,402
House Administration	400,000	215,000	450,000	320,000	600,000	660,000	[5] 932,500	860,000	[6] 1,185,000	1,744,500	1,219,000
Interior and Insular Affairs	478,000	226,000	694,000	802,000	913,985	946,297	875,000	1,100,000	1,200,000	1,316,679	1,219,615
Internal Security	570,000	525,000	475,000	475,000
Energy and Commerce	989,000	485,000	1,180,000	639,000	[7] 2,859,000	[8] 3,247,000	[9] 3,152,000	[10] 3,350,000	3,708,000	3,750,000	3,750,000
Judiciary	350,000	450,000	[2] 1,606,218	1,274,000	[2] 1,831,090	[2] 1,276,767	[2] 1,296,115	1,482,805	1,432,000	[2] 1,406,678	1,350,410
Merchant Marine and Fisheries	291,500	227,500	291,500	203,000	477,500	353,000	900,000	1,400,000	[11] 1,494,074	1,682,171	1,581,241
Post Office and Civil Service	533,000	523,000	638,000	535,500	741,000	698,000	800,000	[12] 750,000	850,000	950,000	902,500
Public Works and Transportation	1,072,670	798,890	1,519,700	1,394,480	2,209,424	2,209,424	[13] 2,050,000	2,000,000	1,870,000	1,870,000	1,806,373
Rules	5,000		5,000	2,000	30,000	37,750	42,000	49,500	519,000	615,000	530,738
Science and Technology	380,000	410,000	380,000	400,000	554,000	742,738	1,398,400	1,500,000	1,600,000	1,896,800	1,820,928
Small Business	([14])	([14])	([14])	([14])	541,500	515,425	[15] 635,000	752,650	752,650	776,000	776,000
Standards of Official Conduct	25,000		25,000		35,000	[16] 235,000	530,000	500,000	500,000	500,000	450,000
Veterans' Affairs	150,000	110,000	150,000	120,000	460,000	[2] 354,763	500,000	400,000	400,000	352,490	352,490
Ways and Means	75,000		125,000	395,000	1,500,000	2,115,000	2,115,000	2,115,000	2,000,000	2,252,000	2,252,000
Total, standing committees	9,872,350	[1] 7,274,272	[2] 12,902,918	[1] 10,679,515	[2] 20,952,185	[2] 22,353,807	[2] 22,566,887	[2] 26,936,825	[2] 28,229,104	[2] 30,915,698	29,433,433
Select committees:
Aging [17]					600,000	580,000	787,625	985,891	1,050,000	1,233,000	1,183,680
Intelligence [17]							302,499	[2] 966,906	[2] 927,402	972,420	938,700
Crime	675,000	470,000	[2] 331,160
House Restaurant	43,000	29,500	33,500	34,500
Small Business	530,000	398,000	563,000	431,000
Missing Persons in Southeast Asia					[4] 350,000
Special Commission to Investigate Campaign Expenditures, 1972		185,000	45,000
Professional Sports						30,000	3,000
Intelligence					750,000
Assassinations						150,000	2,514,400	3,290,000
Narcotics Abuse and Control						111,667	722,204	722,204	700,000	600,000	540,000
Outer Continental Shelf					150,000	239,000	315,000	300,000	290,000	116,000
Congressional Operations							440,000	900,000
Ad hoc Energy							212,833	140,000
Ethics							283,000	114,000
Population							63,733	750,000
Committees									525,000	287,852
Total, select committees	1,248,000	1,082,500	972,660	465,500	1,850,000	1,110,667	5,644,294	8,169,001	3,492,402	3,209,272	2,662,380
Total, all committees	11,120,350	8,356,772	[18] 13,875,578	11,145,015	[2] 22,802,185	[2] 23,464,474	[2] 31,211,181	35,105,826	31,721,506	34,124,970	32,095,813
House Information Systems	[4] 1,500,000		2,400,000	2,400,000	3,780,000	6,728,500	7,980,000	10,995,000	[19] 9,889,000	9,881,000	7,509,560
Grand Total	12,620,350	8,356,772	[18] 16,275,578	13,545,015	[2] 26,582,185	[2] 30,192,974	[2] 39,191,181	46,100,826	41,610,506	44,005,970	39,605,373

[1] Prior to 1975 committees could utilize funds authorized in the first session during the second session.
[2] Rounded off to the nearest dollar.
[3] The Pension Task Force operated as an instrument of the Committee on Education and Labor's Subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations; funding was provided in a separate authorization in 1973, 1975, 1977, 1979 and 1980. In 1981, House Administration included the funding for the Task Force in the authorization for the Committee on Education and Labor.
[4] Two-year authorization.
[5] Funding authorization of $860,000 (H. Res. 261); authorization of $72,500 (H. Res. 361) for 7 contested election contests.
[6] Includes supplemental of $340,000 (H. Res. 268) as a result of the assumption, by the Committee, of the responsibilities of the Select Committee on Congressional Operations.
[7] Funding authorization of $2,809,000 (H. Res. 282). Additionally, $50,000 was authorized in H. Res. 899 for the employment by the Chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of a special counsel in the case "Ashland Oil, Inc. against Federal Trade Commission, et al."
[8] Funding authorization of $3,197,000 (H. Res. 1049). Additionally $50,000 was authorized in H. Res. 1420 for the employment by the Chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of a special counsel in the case "United States against American Telephone and Telegraph Co., et al."
[9] Funding authorization of $3,197,000 (H. Res. 283). Additionally, $55,000 was authorized in H. Res. 334 for the employment by the Chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of a special counsel in the case "United States against American Telephone and Telegraph Co., et al."
[10] Includes supplemental of $150,000 (H. Res. 1364).
[11] Includes supplemental of $94,074 (H. Res. 430).
[12] Includes supplemental of $50,000 (H. Res. 1363).
[13] Includes $50,000 included in H. Res. 322 for the Committee to assist the Architect of the Capitol in conducting a solar energy feasibility study of the House Office Building complex.
[14] Prior to 1975 Small Business was a select committee.
[15] Includes supplemental of $120,000 (H. Res. 921).
[16] Includes 2 supplementals.
[17] Provided for in the Rules of the House.
[18] Total does not include authorization of $1,500,000 for the Bolling-Martin Select Committee on Committees.
[19] Beginning of reimbursement policy whereby House Committees and administrative offices were required to pay for computer services provided by HIS. Reimbursement policy as to the House Committees was terminated in 1981.●

TRIBUTE TO CLINTON M. FAIR

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. FORD) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor the memory of Clinton M. Fair, who died in St. Ignace, Mich., December 6 while this body was in recess. He was 72.

Mr. Fair was well known to many of our colleagues as a dedicated fighter for legislation to improve the lot of working men and women.

For 23 years, until his retirement 2 years ago, Mr. Fair was associated with the AFL-CIO, which he joined in 1957 as an assistant director of the department of social security. Three years later he became a member of the department of legislation staff, specializing in the areas of workers' compensation, social security, education, and health.

Mr. Fair grew up in Michigan's Upper Peninsula where harsh winters in near-wilderness surroundings added to the sting of the Great Depression. It was there that he developed a lifelong dedication to bringing equity, justice, and security to working people.

He began his working career as a high school history teacher in St. Ignace and he was a lifelong member of the American Federation of Teachers. From 1949-51 he was legislative secretary to former Michigan Gov. G. Mennen Williams.

Clinton Fair was a skillful legislative persuader for causes espoused by organized labor. In his dealings in pursuit of labor's goals he was a gentleman with a tough interior, tempered, no doubt, by the severity of the northern Michigan climate. He was a patient and understanding man who knew that gains won for working people had to be protected vigilantly against the onslaughts of new attackers.

A tribute to his dedication and professionalism was the fact that he earned both the admiration and friendship of two of Michigan's greatest senators, the late Philip A. Hart and the late Patrick V. McNamara.

Clinton Fair was a good and honorable man to whom working people owe a debt of gratitude.●

MAYOR COLEMAN A. YOUNG INAUGURAL ADDRESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CROCKETT) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. CROCKETT. Mr. Speaker, my city of Detroit, Mich., is generally regarded as one of the most distressed urban areas in this country. Our unemployment rate is much higher than the Nation's average, and the twin economic problems of recession and inflation have taken their toll.

The brightest spot in our city these days, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that we have a dynamic, forceful, and caring mayor, Coleman A. Young. Mayor Young, who just began his third term as our chief executive, has been the driving force behind the new spirit taking hold in Detroit and the beginnings of our economic renaissance.●

I would like to share with my colleagues the words of Mayor Young as he spoke to our city on January 5, 1982, the date he was sworn in to begin his third term. I think Members will find it a strong, positive statement on the future of our city—and, ultimately, of our Nation.

MAYOR COLEMAN A. YOUNG, INAUGURAL ADDRESS, JANUARY 5, 1982

This is as good a time as any to indicate that this bouquet of white roses for The Honorable Erma Henderson is my peace offering. And I want you to also know that I gave a corsage to both of the Council ladies, and yellow roses for all of the rest of the Councilmen and the City Clerk, Jim Bradley. I think the message behind that is quite clear. We can make it, Detroit, We will make it. But we're going to make it together.

This is no time for petty and, yes, I say "petty" differences to allow us to deviate from a clear responsibility. There's no question in my mind about the potential or the greatness of this city—which is already great—and I firmly believe that Detroit's greatest days are ahead of us—not behind us.

We have proved that we are willing to step up and pay the price of freedom and progress when that price is demanded. We proved that to a whole lot of doubting Thomases last year.

They all laughed when we went to vote on June 23. They said it was laughable for a city with unemployment approaching depression levels, for a city in the midst of a tax revolt all around us, closing down schools, slamming school doors for lack of millage to think that these Detroiters will vote themselves a tax increase in order to save their city. Some of them even said, "You know those Detroiters. They've always got their hands out." You heard that, didn't you?

But when the votes came in on June 23, there we were standing tall and proud, carrying our own weight, willing to do what was necessary to move this city forward. I knew and you knew then that the election was over. That was it. Detroiters were asked to vote on whether or not they believed they had a future and the answer came back a resounding "Yes!"

But just because we met one challenge, just because we won one battle, let no one be deceived that this fight is over. Those who would achieve freedom can only do it through struggle. To achieve freedom, those who would hold it must be prepared to fight to hold it because nobody is giving you anything.

By the same token, however, we're not called upon to wage a continuing war with our neighbors.

First of all, we will start off within this city. There's too much polarization along racial lines. I don't know what better day than this first day, when we've all just been sworn in, to lay it on the line, Detroit.

There's too much damn racial prejudice in this town.

There's too much hate and too much bitterness. And let me tell you that there's no way in hell for white Detroit to move forward if black Detroit goes down. And conversely, there's no way that blacks can move forward while whites stumble. So we're in it together. You can call it a shot-gun marriage if you want to, but we're in it together.

We're in it together with the suburbs, too. We've had a lot of fights with some of Detroit's customers. We give them water and sewerage and you know it's ironic about the Pontiac Silverdome. They couldn't operate without our water and our sewerage. Detroit has never hesitated to do its share in contributing to the growth of this whole southeastern Michigan area.

As a matter of fact, for many, many years the whole state rode on Detroit's back. That's when we were strong and there's nothing wrong with that. If we need each other for common survival, well then let the strong help the weak.

And he who is strong today might be weak tomorrow. You know history and life have a way of reversing themselves and Detroit is no longer strong. Those that we have helped must now help us not because they love us necessarily—although it would be good if they did it for that reason—but because they love themselves.

And so let us out again to attempt to build unity and mutual respect between the city and the suburbs, between the cities and the rest of the State. There's no question that this State cannot go forward unless all of its elements are together.

There's also no question that this nation cannot go forward unless all its elements are together. We don't have a national policy towards cities in the nation today.

Unfortunately, just two weeks ago, they discovered in the White House that we're in a recession. We could have told them that in 1975. They have not yet discovered that this nation cannot remain fiscally sound and economically healthy if its cities are sink holes of poverty, unemployment and starvation. That word hasn't quite reached Washington.

Washington doesn't quite know yet that the old people, senior citizens who helped to build this city and this nation, are going hungry again, because food stamps have been cut back, Medicaid has been cut back, Medicare has been cut back, everything has been cut back.

Washington has not quite yet discovered that whatever is wrong with our economy, the answer to high inflation, the answer to high interest rates, cannot be found at the expense of those at the bottom of the ladder, of the poor.

We need unity to take this message to where it counts. There's one thing that I must say about the President. At one time I called him Prune Face, but I'm sorry about that and now I call him President Prune Face.

There's one thing about "P.P." He didn't lie to you. You might not have believed him, in 1980 he said, "I'm going to reverse the trend in this nation. I'm going to repeal the New Deal." He said FDR was a fascist.

That's what the man said. Nowadays I can hardly find anybody who voted for Ronald Reagan. But some of you all must have voted for him.

Nonetheless, it is our responsibility—this is our country, too—it's our country and it's our responsibility to communicate to this President. First of all, let's get our thing together here in Michigan, here in Detroit, and then let's move onto Washington.

In the meanwhile, let's prepare to circle the wagons here in Detroit. Let's prepare to do what we have to do to keep this city moving forward.

Let us do what we have to do to provide the basic minimum services for our cities, to maintain a decent system of education for our children to meet the challenge that exists in America today.

There is no such thing as a free lunch and we know that. We're prepared to pay the price for freedom and let them tell you, brothers and sisters, citizens of Detroit and vicinity: you're being challenged now.

You are being asked to pay the price.

GEN. THADDEUS KOSCIUSZKO—A GREAT SOLDIER AND PATRIOT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, February 12 is the 236th anniversary of the birth of Gen. Thaddeus Kosciuszko, whose mighty contributions to the winning of our War of Independence symbolize so well the contributions made by millions of Polish Americans to their adopted country through their skill, hard work, and patriotism.

Americans cannot recall without deep emotion that he was the brave and courageous Polish soldier and statesman who voluntarily entered the American Continental Army and distinguished himself in the battles of New York and Yorktown.

No rollcall of the great heroes of the American Revolution who joined together in the fight against tyrannical rule would be complete without the name of Thaddeus Kosciuszko, for most historians recognize the significant contributions he made in the War of Independence.

As one of the proud cosponsors of the bill—now Public Law 92-524—to officially designate the Kosciuszko home in Philadelphia as a national memorial, I consider this an occasion to honor this great Polish patriot and also salute our fellow citizens of Polish descent who, following in the footsteps of Kosciuszko, have dedicated their lives, often at great risk, to continue the cause of freedom.

It is important for Americans to remain aware of the fact that American greatness is the result of vital contributions made by all of our ethic groups, and certainly the outstanding contributions of Polish Americans to the growth and advancement of our country merit the recognition that was officially extended through designation of the Kosciuszko home as a national memorial.

Even before our Declaration of Independence was signed, this young Polish officer sailed across the Atlantic and appeared before Gen. George Washington to volunteer his military skill and training to help create an effective military force from the fledgling Continental Army.

Kosciuszko was commissioned a colonel of engineers in the Continental Army with the task of strengthening the breastworks at Saratoga as well as the fortifications along the Delaware River and at West Point. The ardor and the zeal of this young officer were equaled only by his courage. It is a small wonder that Thomas Jefferson hailed him by saying: "He was as pure a son of liberty as I have ever known and of that liberty which is to go to all and not the few or to the rich alone."

Throughout the long and bleak years of the American Revolution, Kosciuszko devoted himself to helping General Washington win the war. In addition to his engineering prowess which meant so much to the Continental Army, this talented officer fought valiantly on the battlefields in the North as well as the South. Leading cavalry troops through the bitter campaign of the Carolinas, he played a major rule in driving the British out of Charleston.

Kosciuszko might have chosen to dwell in America and enjoy the love and acclaim of the American people while making continued contributions to our Armed Forces of which he was now a full-fledged general officer. The grateful Congress, in addition to land and money, had bestowed upon him all the rights and privileges of American citizenship.

Kosciuszko chose instead to return to Europe and to his native Poland where he issued a call to arms. Polish patriots rushed to his side to begin a battle for Polish independence. Unfortunately, the military might of Russia and Prussia was so enormous that the efforts of Kosciuszko and his followers were in vain. The gallant leader was captured and imprisoned in a dungeon. Upon the death of Catherine, the Empress of Russia, he was freed—sorely ill and suffering physically, but still with a burning passion for the independence of his homeland. He valiantly continued to work for the liberation of Poland until his death in 1817.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to join Polish Americans in the 11th District, which I am proud to represent, in Chicago, and all over this Nation as they pause this week to commemorate the birth of Thaddeus Kosciuszko and the enormous contributions he made to freedom of all Americans.●

LEGISLATION TO IMPROVE FOOD SAFETY LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. GORE) is recognized for 15 minutes.

● Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to introduce a bill to improve the food safety laws of the United States. While the current laws have served the Nation well for over 75 years, recent events have demonstrated the need to provide the Food and Drug Administration and the Secretary of HHS with the ability to respond with flexibility, and to use the latest and best scientific knowledge available. Interest in substantial improvement of these laws is now nearly 5 years old. Since the beginning of major controversy over FDA's decision to propose a ban on saccharin in March 1977 and continuing with the debate over the safety of nitrite, numerous proposals have been developed to try to protect the public interest while permitting the appropriate level of scientific flexibility and administrative discretion. Some of the proposals have been too simplistic in their attempts to single-mindedly apply emerging and imperfect concepts like cost-benefit analysis. More recently, others have been developed, like S. 1442, introduced by Senator HATCH, that contain a number of new approaches but are both too complex administratively as well as too ambitious in the nature of some of the proposed changes. The bill I introduce today has the advantage of examining these earlier proposals. Instead of reacting in either an emotional way during crisis situations, or trying to change the world in one fell swoop, it focuses on only the major problems in what is basically a good law. It is intended to be concise in its approach to issues, and will serve to focus the debate during the coming months.

The bill proposes six kinds of changes to the current Food Drug and Cosmetic Act:

First, it recognizes, as have the courts, that there is a level of risk, particularly in the area of indirect food additives, that can be described as de minimis.

Second, it maintains a high standard of public safety while permitting the Secretary to use the best scientific judgment available in determining safety, by defining "safe" as a "reasonable certainty that the risks of a substance under the intended conditions of use are insignificant." Because of existing interpretations, this standard gives adequate legislative guidance to the FDA without improving either quantitative risk assessment, or an overly rigid congressional determination of "safety."

Third, it permits the secretary to phase substances out of the food supply for periods of up to 5 years, depending on the availability of substitutes and the nature of the health risk involved; it also permits, under narrow circumstances where no alternatives are available for critical substances, the weighing of health benefits against health risks. The bill does not permit the weighing of economic benefits to one part of the population against health risks to another.

Fourth, it authorizes the development of external peer review mechanisms for food safety decisions in either the National Academy of Sciences, the Federation of American Societies of American Biology or other institutions of the Secretary's choice. It does this in such a way that the decisionmaking authority still rests with the Government on decisions, and it permits all sides of questions, including members of public interest groups, to petition for review of decisions.

Fifth, the bill clarifies that the class of basic and traditional foods, like potatoes, peanuts, nutmeg, et cetera, be held to a safety standard that requires the Secretary to show that the use of these foods would be ordinarily injurious to health before he takes regulatory action. As science proceeds, the development of this category is necessary to insure that the FDA does not have to take actions that are demonstrably foolish from the public's perspective. For example, if a cancer-causing substance should be found in ordinary potatoes, and it cannot be removed, the Secretary should not be in the position of either violating the law or banning potatoes.

Sixth, finally, the bill simplifies the regulatory process for the issuance of tolerances for substances that should not be in foods, like PCB's, but which are often unavoidable. Current law discourages the setting of tolerances because the process is extremely burdensome. By simplifying the process, the FDA will be able to let the public know what substances are in their food, and permit the public to make informed decisions on the permissible levels. In the absence of change, decisions will continue to be made exclusively by bureaucratic fiat. It is important to note that this change does not in any way change the Government's responsibility to protect the public against these substances.

In the past, much of the attention paid to the food safety laws has focused on the so-called Delaney anticancer clause. This is natural, inasmuch as that clause represents the symbolic commitment of our society to protect us against any level of risk from cancer in our food supply. It is a noble concept, and one should not approach the changing of it lightly. In examining the possibility of change, I have increasingly come to the opinion, however, that we must have regulatory statutes that are both tough and realistic, if the laws are to maintain the respect of the people. With respect to the current Delaney clause, I now believe that:

First, its importance in the actual administration of the statutes has been vastly overstated; the general safety clause of the law is by far a more important tool in the regulatory arsenal;

Second, its absolutist approach ignores our ability to measure substances in increasingly small amounts; and

Third, its maintenance in an unchanged way is likely ultimately to bring the public agency that must enforce it into disrepute by forcing actions that may be demonstrably foolish.

Because I strongly believe in the importance of a powerful but credible Food and Drug Administration, I think it is important to bring the Delaney clause and the general safety clause into accord, and to permit the Secretary to judge, with appropriate procedural safeguards, when the risk of an added substance is insignificant. If we do not do this explicitly by legislation, we will be guilty of passing the buck back to the bureaucrats, while permitting ourselves the luxury of strong criticism every time the Agency does something we think is foolish. This is bad public policy, because it is ultimately destructive of respect for public institutions and the goals of the regulatory establishment that we have constructed.

As many of you know, I have been strongly critical of many of this administration's actions in the health and safety regulatory arena. I believe that many of the budget actions taken in the Environmental Protection Agency, for example, are backdoor ways of dismantling public protection in the guise of regulatory relief. In contrast, I believe that this bill approaches regulatory reform in the serious and constructive fashion that the issue demands. We do need to wrestle with the regulatory establishment we have created, but we need to recognize the massive benefits in public protection that we have gained over the last decades. I believe that this bill represents the kind of mid-course correction that will be good for both producers and consumers.

In the past months, I have been critical of other attempts to change the law. In my view, that is part of the natural process of give and take on important public policy issues. It is important to recognize, however, that Senator HATCH and many of my colleagues in the House, have made important contributions in raising the right questions about the laws. I look forward to working with all concerned parties to insure that the American people are adquately protected. A section-by-section analysis follows:

SECTION BY SECTION ANALYSIS OF GORE BILL, H.R. 5491, TO REFORM THE FOOD SAFETY PROVISIONS OF THE FEDERAL FOOD DRUG AND COSMETIC ACT

INTRODUCTION

Widespread interest in substantial reform of the food safety laws is now nearly five years old. Since the major controversy over FDA's decision to propose a ban on saccharin in March 1977 and continuing with the debate over the safety of nitrite, numerous proposals have been developed which try to balance the need to protect the public health while also providing the appropriate level of scientific flexibility and administrative discretion. Some of the proposals have been too simplistic in their attempts to single-mindedly apply emerging concepts like cost benefit analysis. More recently, other comprehensive bills have been developed, like S. 1442, introduced by Senator Hatch and others, that contain a number of new approaches that also are too complex administratively and in some cases too ambitious in the nature of the reforms involved. This bill attempts to focus on the major problems embedded in the current Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act. It is intended to be concise in its approach to issues, and, therefore, to focus the debate. The bill deals with six basic issues:

The effects of the Monsanto decision on the issue of de minimis risk;

The definition and treatment under the law of basic and traditional foods;

The general definition of "safe" as well as the safety standard to be applied under the so-called Delaney Clause;

Conditions under which a food constituent may be phased out of the food supply and factors that should determine the conditions and length of that phaseout;

The development of adequate external peer review mechanisms to ensure the credibility of government scientific findings; and

The simplification of the regulatory process for the development of tolerances for unavoidable contaminants in foods.

I believe the bill takes a properly balanced approach on these issues, and that it represents a significant step forward in true regulatory reform.

A brief analysis of each section follows:

Section 1: Provides that the bill's revisions are to the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act ("FDC Act" or the "Act"). In particular, the bill amends the food safety provisions of the FDA Act. Conforming amendments may be desirable to other sections of the Act, e.g., the color additive and new animal drug provisions of sections 706 and 512, and to the Poultry, Meat and Egg Products Inspection Acts administered by the Department of Agriculture. On issues like the definition of safe, the laws should obviously be in concert. These issues were reserved, however, to focus attention on the major issues at this time.

Section 2(a) reflects the findings of the U.S. Court of Appeals in the so-called Monsanto decision, regarding acrylonitrile packaging materials and other indirect additives that may, under certain conditions, migrate into food products. In these cases, the court held that the FDA has the authority to permit the use of substances that have risks that are so small or so improbable that they can reliably be said to be de minimis. This is important, because it avoids FDA actions against risks of no consequence, which may undermine confidence in the food laws and misapply scarce resources. Although FDA could accomplish the objective here administratively, it seems wise to have an explicit Congressional directive in the matter:

Section 2(b): clarifies that "basic and traditional foods" are not included in the category of food additives. Under section 4, these foods are defined to include "any raw agricultural commodity, including natural spices and flavors, with a history of significant food use in the United States and (2) any such raw agricultural commodity, spice or flavor which has been processed by any method that is generally recognized, among experts qualified by scientific training and experience, as not significantly changing the properties of such raw agricultural commodity, spice or flavor." Under current law, substances like nitrate in spinach, a potential carcinogen, could be construed to force FDA to take action to ban the entire commodity, or to inappropriately subject it to the cumbersome food additive approval process. This is not good public policy, is contrary to the intent of Congress, and, again, may undermine public confidence in the law. These sections, along with Section 6, assure the continued availability of such traditional foods as spinach, potatoes, yogurt, nutmeg, black pepper, etc., unless they are shown to be "ordinarily injurious to health" under the adulteration provisions of the Act.

Section 3: adds a straightforward definition of safe to the FDC Act. The term would mean "a reasonable certainty that the risks of a substance under the intended conditions of use are insignificant." This is a very rigorous standard, but it permits the Secretary to determine that some risks are so trivial as to not warrant regulation. The provision recognizes that the food supply today does not and cannot be free of all risks, and, most importantly, that it is possible with confidence to make the qualitative judgment that some risks fall below a threshold of significance. In making these determinations, the Secretary may, but is not required, to use quantitative risk assessment techniques. The bill requires the Secretary to conclude that the risks, if any, presented by a substance are insignificant, and thereby ensures that the public health is fully protected. Furthermore, this determination must be made to a "reasonable certainty," a strict standard. Finally, under the bill, the burden of proving the safety of a substance would remain with the proponent of its use.

Section 4: defines "basic and traditional foods" and is discussed above, at Section 2(b).

Section 5: gives the Secretary the authority by regulation to phaseout substances from the food supply for periods of up to five years, "upon a determination that no harm to the public health will result from such continued use." The Secretary may exercise this authority in a variety of ways—including a simple deadline for phasing out use of the substance, and, in appropriate cases, limiting the categories of foods in which a substance may be used or the quantities of the substance that may be used in the food or imposing labeling or packaging requirements as a condition of the phaseout. This section also specifies what criteria should be considered in determining the length and conditions of the phaseout. These include the nature and extent of the health risks from use or a ban on use, as the case may be, effects of use of the substance on the nutritional value, cost, and availability of food, use for dietary or other health-related purposes, and the availability of substitutes. It is important to emphasize that the Secretary may set a very short time, or no time at all, under this section, and that economic considerations such as effects on the cost and availability of food only relate to the length and conditions of the phaseout, but not to the actual decision about whether to eliminate the substance. If a substitute is developed during the course of the phaseout, the Secretary may revise the phaseout to provide for use of the substitute. On the other hand, if no substitute becomes available, the Secretary may decide to extend the phaseout period. During the phaseout, the use of the substance in question—in accord with the regulations—will not render a product adulterated.

Section 6: was briefly described above under Section 2(b).

Section 7: amends the Delaney Clause to bring it into accord with the new definition of "safe" described above. It continues to provide a focus in the law for carcinogens, and a presumption against their use, but would not act as a bar against use of a substance where the Secretary determines that the evidence demonstrates that the risks from the substance are insignificant. As is the case in the bill generally, the burden to demonstrate that the risks are insignificant, as well as the overall burden to demonstrate safety, will remain on the proponent of use. The provision does not mandate exclusive reliance on quantitative risk assessment, but requires the FDA to make a rational assessment of all the data, and if the risks are shown to be insignificant, to permit continued use of the substance.

Section 8: clarifies the intent of Congress that all food safety decisions are to be based on a thorough evaluation of the nature and extent of the potential risks of a substance, based on all available evidence.

Section 9: permits, in cases where the Secretary is unable to conclude that the risks of a substance are insignificant, continued use of a substance only in the extraordinary case where there is no practical substitute for it, it has a substantial history of use, and, the health benefits outweigh the health risks. It would not be appropriate, for example, to ban a substance that provided substantial protection against botulism if no other reasonable alternative were available. The limited risk/benefit decisionmaking provided here avoids the distributional questions that arise if costs to one set of people are compared with benefits to others. In this case, the same sets of people are involved. This section would not guarantee that a substance like saccharin could stay on the market. Only if evidence, which would have to be more than merely anecdotal, were presented that the health benefits outweighed the health risks, would saccharin be covered. Health benefits to be considered would include its effects on the nutritional value and availability of food, and use of the substance for dietary management and other health-related purposes.

Section 10: establishes a Food Science Committee, under the auspices of the Federation of American Societies for Experimental Biology, the National Academy of Sciences, or any other independent body that the Secretary may choose and enables the Secretary routinely to obtain expert scientific advice from outside the government on difficult decisions and on general matters relating to the safety of food constituents. The Section maintains the regulatory power of the Secretary; it does not delegate it in any way to an external committee. It demands that the people on the Committee be "qualified by training and experience," that they not be full time employees of the Federal Government, and that they have "adequately diversified experience." The language therefore does not demand that any particular mix of people be appointed, but ensures that the committee members not be drawn from the same academic, industrial or other backgrounds. The Section permits "any interested" person to petition for an external review, including industry and public interest groups, but keeps the authority for decision in the hands of the Government.

Moreover, the Section ensures that resort to the Committee is not obtained on frivolous matters. Before referring a matter to the Committee when petitioned to do so, the Secretary would first have to determine that the scientific questions involved are "genuine and substantial." The Secretary would also have to conclude that resolution of them would be "materially facilitated" by referral to the Committee. Although the Section demands the matters referred to the Committee be handled expeditiously, it places no statutory time limit, but does encourage a report in 90 days. It also permits the Secretary to stay regulatory proceedings until the report of the Committee is received. This Section should go far toward ensuring the credibility of FDA decisionmaking without creating artificial separations of authority in either the scientific review or policy development process.

Section 11: expedites the tolerance-setting process under the statute for unintentionally added substances (food contaminants) that cannot be easily removed or avoided, like PCB's and aflatoxin. Current law makes this such a cumbersome process that it is used infrequently. In its place, a shadow process not explicitly intended under the law is often used, the setting of so-called "action levels." The FDA should be able to inform the public of problems with substances like PCB's in a way that permits the rapid description and handling of the problems in a non-bureaucratic fashion. This Section would permit informal notice and comment rulemaking to replace a formal hearing process and thereby provide an incentive for FDA to adhere to the law as the Congress intended.●

A PLEA FOR IMPOVERISHED CHILDREN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HUTTO) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. HUTTO. Mr. Speaker, in this month's issue of Nation's Business, there is an article entitled, "A Plea for Impoverished Children," written by noted Washington columnist, James J. Kilpatrick. I would like to share with my colleagues this excellent article pertaining to the demise of education in our Nation's public school systems, and include it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

A PLEA FOR IMPOVERISHED CHILDREN

(By James J. Kilpatrick)

This is not, as the title might lead you to believe, a plea for food to be sent to the starving children of Bangladesh, though God knows they need our help. This piece has to do with our own children. They are starving in a different way, but they need help as sorely. My thesis—it is actually Richard Mitchell's thesis—is that 42 million pupils in our public schools are suffering from an educational malnutrition that threatens the very survival of the Republic.

These are serious charges, and Mitchell makes them with deadly seriousness. He is a professor of English at Glassboro State College in New Jersey. He is also the editor, publisher, typesetter and printer of the Underground Grammarian, a monthly publication in which he inveighs against the abuse of language by persons—especially professors—who should know better. More to the point, he is the author of the recently published The Graves of Academe (Little, Brown), which ought to be a best-seller but probably won't be. Mitchell has stepped on too many toes.

His view of the educational landscape is depressingly familiar. Once upon a time—and that time wasn't so very long ago—our public schools taught mostly solid stuff. Children learned to read, chiefly by the phonics method, and they cut their teeth on books with some meat in them. Children learned arithmetic in the old-fashioned way. Early on, they learned something of history and geography. In high school they wrote themes; they memorized great chunks of poetry and drama; they had a go at foreign languages. Even in the great cities, disciplinary problems were few. The teachers were there to teach, and the pupils were there to be taught, and that was the size of it. The system worked. Whether the students went on to college or went to work in shops and offices and factories, they had a foundation to build on.

The past 50 years have wrought terrifying change. There are exceptions, of course, but Mitchell's purpose is to paint the broad picture. These days the curriculum is rotten at the core. Hurricanes of permissiveness and egalitarianism have swept away most of the old academic disciplines. The themes, the diagramed sentences, the memory work, the tedious exercises in geometry, the courses in Latin, the elements of geography, the basic structure of names, dates, facts, events, the chronologies of kings—little of this remains. The hours that once were devoted to such instruction have been nibbled away. We have field trips now, and driver education, sex education, drug education, nutrition education. We have everything across a smorgasbord but an education.

Mitchell does not blame the classroom teachers for this wretched course of events. Many of them are as victimized as the children in their charge. He blames the top-heavy educational establishment—the teachers' colleges, the producers of bland but profitable textbooks, the armies of coordinators, facilitators, consultants, counselors and assistant supernumeraries who feed upon the swollen budgets for public education. He blames the school boards that are suckers for gaudy innovations. He blames the state legislatures that yield to clamorous pressure groups.

Here we have the trickle-down theory in its worst application. The teachers' colleges (again, with exceptions) are manned by second-raters whose livelihood depends upon the teaching of superfluous courses. Ex-basketball coaches get doctoral degrees, based upon dissertations on Comparative Storage Systems for Athletic Equipment, and go on to become superintendents of schools.

The products of this system impose their incompetence on the prospective teachers in their charge and the teachers, like Typhoid Marys, infect the little children. We get high school graduates who lick their pencils, gaze at the ceiling for inspiration and spell Congress with a K.

Mitchell is an angry man. He writes with clarity, wit and grace, and he provides hilarious examples of educationists at work, but there is no mistaking his theme. He fears for the future of our nation. There always will be a small cadre of brilliant students—young men and women who make it despite the public schools—but what of the rest? There may be something to be said, though probably not much, for high school courses in " intercultural appreciation, " but such courses are pitifully poor substitutes for basic instruction in foreign languages. We are never going to maintain world leadership if we produce a generation of thumb-suckers and tube-watchers, unable to read a daily newspaper or to recognize the inherited values of Western civilization.

The Graves of Academe is not comfortable reading. It is damned uncomfortable reading. But if I were to nominate one book of the hundred-odd new titles I read in 1981 as Book of the Year, this would be my choice. Read it and weep—and then get as angry as Richard Mitchell.●

ACCURATE BUDGET PROJECTIONS

THE SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. ALEXANDER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend for my colleagues' edification the study of President Reagan's budget which has been released today by the House Budget Committee. The analysis of the President's budget by Chairman JIM JONES and his committee is excellent.

Of particular interest to me are the deficit projections of the Congressional Budget Office which are printed on page 10 of the House Budget Committee report.

This year has demonstrated that CBO's economic projections are more accurate than the administration's. It is, therefore, very important when we are considering President Reagan's budget that we realize that the deficit for fiscal year 1982 could well be $10.4 billion more than that projected by the administration. In fiscal year 1983, the deficit could well be $65.5 billion higher than the administration projects. Overall, for the period of fiscal 1982 through fiscal 1985, CBO projects $317 billion more in deficits than does the administration.

In order to be fiscally prudent, we should rely on the budget deficits projected by CBO when we determine our budget and tax policy.

I therefore am inserting those deficit statistics printed on page 10 of the House Budget Committee's report entitled "President Reagan's Fiscal Year 1983 Budget (A Summary and Analysis prepared by the staff of House Budget Committee) February 1982."

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE PROJECTIONS

The following table compares the administration's deficits with those projected by CBO in its Baseline Budget Projections. The two differ partly because the administration has more optimistic economic assumptions (especially in fiscal year 1984 and fiscal year 1985). The primary difference is that the CBO baseline does not assume changes in currently legislated spending or tax policy, while the administration is proposing net spending cuts and tax increases.

DEFICITS

[In billions of dollars]

Fiscal year	Administration	CBO baseline	Difference
1981 actual	57.9	57.9
1982	98.6	109.0	10.4
1983	91.5	157.0	65.5
1984	82.9	188.0	105.1
1985	71.9	208.0	136.1

DEFICITS: HISTORICAL PERSPECTIVE

The deficits proposed by the administration are the largest ever; the following table lists the 10 largest deficits.

Rank	Fiscal year	Deficit	Administration
1	1982	98.6	Reagan.
2	1983	91.5	Reagan.
3	1984	82.9	Reagan.
4	1985	71.9	Reagan.
5	1976	66.4	Ford.
6	1980	59.6	Carter.
7	1981	57.9	Reagan.
8	1943	54.9	Roosevelt.
9	1978	48.8	Carter.
10	1945	47.5	Roosevelt.

The size of the economy has changed significantly over the last half century; therefore the administration's analysis measures the deficit as a percentage of Gross National Product (GNP). By this standard, the World War II era far surpasses any other; the fiscal year 1943 deficit reached 31% of GNP. Since that period, however, the 10 largest deficits as a percent of GNP have been:

DEFICITS AS A PERCENTAGE OF GNP SINCE 1948

Rank	Fiscal year	Percent	Administration
1	1976	4.0	Ford.
2	[1] 1982	3.2	Reagan.
3	1975	3.1	Ford.
4	1968	3.0	Johnson.
5	[1] 1983 & 1959	2.7	Reagan and Eisenhower.
6	1977	2.4	Carter.
7	1978 & 1980	2.3	Carter.
8	[1] 1984 & 1971	2.2	Reagan and Nixon.

DEFICITS AS A PERCENTAGE OF GNP SINCE 1948—Continued

Rank	Fiscal year	Percent	Administration
9	1972	2.1	Nixon.
10	1981	2.0	Reagan.

[1] Proposed.●

YURI ORLOV, 5 YEARS A PRISONER OF CONSCIENCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FASCELL) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, this week much of the world's attention is focused upon the reopening of the Madrid Review Conference of the Helsinki Accords on Security and Cooperation in Europe. Coincidentally, this week also marks the fifth anniversary of the arrest of Dr. Yuri Orlov, founder of the Moscow Helsinki Monitoring Group, an organization dedicated to observing and reporting on the status of human rights in the Soviet Union as they pertain to the Helsinki Final Act, to which, of course, the Soviet Union is one of the 35 signatories.

The response to Dr. Orlov's sincere efforts to monitor Soviet compliance with the Helsinki accords might be equated to the conditioned responses that the great Russian psychologist Pavlov elicited from his canine laboratory subjects—the stimulus is a genuine discussion of human rights in the Soviet state, the response is the knock on the door by KGB agents, the house search, arrest, and trial on the usual trumped-up charges: In Yuri Orlov's case, article 90 of the Soviet Criminal Code, "Anti-Soviet Agitation and Propaganda." In May 1977, he was sentenced to 7 years confinement at a "strict regime" labor camp, to be followed by 5 years internal exile somewhere in the vast reaches of the Soviet Union.

At the moment, Yuri Orlov is located at the Perm Labor Camp No. 37, in a separate internal prison where he has been periodically incarcerated for resisting some of the more arbitrary acts of the prison authorities.

I am sure that I need not detail the conditions in a Soviet labor camp. For a man in the fragile health of Yuri Orlov, a 7-year sentence in a labor camp comes perilously close to a death sentence. He suffers from kidney and prostate inflammation, low blood pressure, rheumatism, dizzy spells and headaches—exacerbated, undoubtedly, by the fact that his overseers have not yet seen fit to furnish him with the eyeglasses necessary for the closeup work that he is required to perform as part of the camp regime—sewing potato sacks. He is kept in a cold prison cell with inadequate clothing and bedding, on a diet that would take its toll on a robust man of half Dr. Orlov's 57 years.

According to Yuro Orlov's wife, Irina Orlova, her husband has been told that he will never leave the labor camp. If the KGB is unsuccessful in its attempt to rid itself of an inconvenient prisoner of conscience, it would not be for lack of trying.

But physical deprivation is not the only war of attrition conducted against this world-renowned physicist. There is the mental attrition that has been expressed to Dr. Orlov by his captors' comment: "You can forget about being a scientist." Even during those brief moments of respite from camp activity, he is harassed in his attempts to carry out his scientific research, his books and notes confiscated, mail intercepted, permission refused to contribute to scientific journals.

All this for simply establishing a nongovernmental body committed to monitoring the Soviet Government's compliance with the human rights principles of the Helsinki final act.

It probably goes without saying that other Soviet and eastern bloc Helsinki group monitors have shared, if only to a somewhat lesser degree in some cases, the fate of Yuri Orlov. Dozens of members of Helsinki groups that were formed in the euphoria of Détenté and the Helsinki conference, are now behind bars, in labor camps, or in exile. Of the 16 original Moscow Helsinki group members, only 3—Elena Bonner, Naum Neiman, and Sofya Kalistratova—enjoy the relative liberty extended to any Soviet citizen. And who can say where or when the ax will fall next? I have been reliably informed that criminal proceedings have been initiated against Sofya Kalistratova, and that two human rights advocates, Fedor Kizelov and Oleg Popov, have already been called in by the KGB for "discussions" with regard to the Kalistratova case.

Mr. Speaker, it behooves us, the Members of this body, to reflect upon the commitment that the United States and 34 other nations made to human rights through the principles of the Helsinki final act. We must insist on conscientious observance of the agreements set forth in that document by all the signatories. This is not an interference in the internal affairs of a sovereign nation, merely an insistence that commitments made should be commitments fulfilled. We must not forget the fate of the imprisoned and persecuted Helsinki monitors, and we must demand, through the principles of Helsinki, on justice for Yuri Orlov.●

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

By unanimous consent, permission to address the House, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered, was granted to:

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. DOUGHERTY) to revise and extend their remarks.)

Mr. COLLINS of Texas, for 30 minutes, today.

Mr. DERWINSKI, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. LEE, for 30 minutes, today.

Mr. JEFFORDS, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. FRENZEL, for 20 minutes, today.

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. DYSON) to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material:)

Mr. FORD of Michigan, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. CROCKETT, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. GONZALEZ, for 15 minutes, today.

Mr. ANNUNZIO, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. COELHO, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. BINGHAM, for 10 minutes, today.

Mr. GORE, for 15 minutes, today.

Mr. HUTTO, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. ALEXANDER, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. FASCELL, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. ADDABBO, for 5 minutes, on February 10.

Mr. ANNUNZIO, for 60 minutes, on February 17.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

By unanimous consent, permission to revise and extend remarks was granted to:

Mr. BEREUTER, to revise and extend his remarks in support of House Joint Resolution 391 in the RECORD immediately preceding the vote on House Joint Resolution 391.

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. DOUGHERTY) and to include extraneous matter.)

Mrs. SNOWE.

Mr. MCDADE.

Mr. LEBOUTILLIER in two instances.

Mr. SCHULZE.

Mr. WINN.

Mr. EVANS of Delaware.

Mr. DUNN.

Mr. MICHEL in two instances.

Mr. PASHAYAN.

Mr. NAPIER in three instances.

Mr. COLLINS of Texas in three instances.

Mr. GOODLING.

Mr. GRISHAM.

Mr. WOLF.

Mr. MOORHEAD.

Mr. PARRIS.

Mr. CARNEY.

Mr. WAMPLER.

Mr. KEMP.

Mr. SAWYER.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO in two instances.

Mr. OXLEY.

Mr. EVANS of Iowa.

Mr. GREEN.

Mr. FINDLEY.

Mr. DANIEL B. CRANE.

Mr. GILMAN.

Mr. DORNAN of California.

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. DYSON) and to include extraneous matter:)

Mr. MAZZOLI in two instances.
Mr. CROCKETT in two instances.
Mr. ECKART.
Mr. BEILENSON.
Mr. MOFFETT.
Mr. STOKES.
Mr. WILSON in two instances.
Mr. BEDELL.
Mr. SANTINI.
Mr. ASPIN.
Mr. DE LUGO in two instances.
Mr. GORE in two instances.
Mr. FOLEY.
Mr. OAKAR.
Mr. EDGAR in two instances.
Mr. AUCOIN.
Mr. CORRADA.
Mr. SMITH of Pennsylvania in two instances.
Ms. FERRARO.
Mr. WEISS.
Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois.
Mr. SOLARZ.
Mr. GAYDOS in two instances.
Mr. SHELBY.
Mr. RICHMOND.
Mrs. SCHROEDER in two instances.
Mr. YATRON in two instances.
Mr. DWYER.
Mr. MOAKLEY.
Mr. LELAND.
Mr. OBERSTAR.
Ms. MIKULSKI.
Mr. PEYSER.
Mr. ROYBAL in two instances.
Mr. SYNAR.
Mr. HUBBARD.
Mrs. CHISHOLM.
Mr. DELLUMS in two instances.
Mr. GRAY.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED

Joint resolutions of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S.J. Res. 130. Joint resolution designating February 22, 1982, the 250th anniversary of the birth of George Washington, a "Day of National Celebration"; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service; and

S.J. Res. 141. Joint resolution designating February 7 through February 19, 1982, as "National Crime Prevention Week"; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 36 minutes p.m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Wednesday, February 10, 1982, at 11 a.m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

3028. A letter from the Secretary of Defense, transmitting the Department of Defense annual report for fiscal year 1983, pursuant to 10 U.S.C. 133(c); to the Committee on Armed Services.

3029. A letter from the Secretary of the Army, transmitting a report that certain weapon systems have exceeded a baseline unit cost by more than 25 percent, pursuant to section 917(c) of Public Law 97-86; to the Committee on Armed Services.

3030. A letter from the Chairman, Council of the District of Columbia, transmitting D.C. Act 4-147, "Taxicab Act of 1981," pursuant to section 602(c) of Public Law 93-198; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

3031. A letter from the Chairman, Council of the District of Columbia, transmitting D.C. Act 4-148, "District of Columbia Automobile Financing and Repossession Act of 1981," pursuant to section 602(c) of Public Law 93-198; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

3032. A letter from the Chairman, Council of the District of Columbia, transmitting D.C. Act 4-149, "Elevator Code Amendment Act of 1981," pursuant to section 602(c) of Public Law 93-198; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

3033. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of State for Congressional Relations, transmitting notice of a proposed manufacturing license agreement for the coproduction of certain defense equipment in Sweden (Transmittal No. MC-5-82), pursuant to section 36(d) of the Arms Export Control Act; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3034. A letter from the Acting Assistant Secretary of State for International Organization Affairs, transmitting reports received from the United Nations Joint Inspection Unit during the last quarter of 1981, pursuant to section 301(e)(3) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, as amended; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3035. A letter from the Attorney-Adviser for Treaty Affairs, Department of State, transmitting copies of international agreements, other than treaties, entered into by the United States, pursuant to 1 U.S.C. 112b(a); to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3036. A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize appropriations to the Patent and Trademark Office in the Department of Commerce, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

3037. A letter from the Chairman, U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, transmitting a report on the decline of black farming in America, pursuant to section 104(c) of Public Law 85-315, as amended; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

3038. A letter from the Inspector General of the Department of Health and Human Services, transmitting a report on the investigation of allegations of violations of law in the Office of Refugee Resettlement, San Francisco, pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 1206(b)(5)(A); to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

3039. A letter from the Director, Office of Personnel Management, transmitting an interim report on the operation of the Senior Executive Service, pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 3135 and 4314(d); to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

3040. A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize appropriations to the Secretary of Commerce for the programs of the National Bureau of Standards for fiscal years 1983 and 1984, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Science and Technology.

3041. A letter from the Chairman, U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission, transmitting a report on the evaluation of the Commission's management controls and reporting of consulting services contractual arrangements for fiscal year 1981, pursuant to section 307(b) of Public Law 96-304; jointly, to the Committees on Appropriations and Energy and Commerce.

3042. A letter from the Chairman, U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission, transmitting the Commission's fiscal year 1983 budget request, pursuant to section 27(k)(1) of Public Law 92-573; jointly, to the Committees on Energy and Commerce and Appropriations.

3043. A letter from the Secretary of Energy, transmitting a comprehensive program-by-program analysis of the Department of Energy, pursuant to section 1001 of Public Law 95-91; jointly, to the Committees on Government Operations and Energy and Commerce.

3044. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a report on the promotion of energy-efficient land use management (EMD-82-1, December 21, 1981); jointly, to the Committees on Government Operations, Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, Energy and Commerce, and Ways and Means.

3045. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a report on electric power regulation and management (EMD-82-8, December 21, 1981); jointly to the Committees on Government Operations, Agriculture, Energy and Commerce, and Interior and Insular Affairs.

3046. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a report on impediments to U.S. involvement in deep ocean mining (EMD-82-31, February 3, 1982); jointly to the Committees on Government Operations, Foreign Affairs, Interior and Insular Affairs, Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and Ways and Means.

3047. A letter from the Secretary of Energy, transmitting the annual report for fiscal year 1981 on the West Valley demonstration project, pursuant to section 4 of Public Law 96-368; jointly, to the Committees on Science and Technology, Energy and Commerce, and Interior and Insular Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

Mr. FROST: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 357, resolution providing for the consideration of H.R. 5118, a bill to provide water to the Papago Tribe of Arizona and its members, to settle Papago Indian water rights claims in portions of the Papago reservations, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 97-430). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. FROST: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 358, resolution providing for the consideration of H.R. 861, a bill to amend the National Trails System Act by designating additional national scenic and historic trails, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 97-431). Referred to the House Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 5 of rule X and clause 4 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BAILEY of Pennsylvania (for himself and Mr. GUARINI):

H.R. 5483. A bill to amend the Communications Act of 1934 to provide that the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. shall not be divested of its ownership of any local telephone company, or of its holdings in any telecommunications manufacturing or research operations, for a period of 2 years; to the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

By Mr. BONKER:

H.R. 5484. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to provide for comprehensive services under the medicare program, and for other purposes; jointly, to the Committees on Ways and Means and Energy and Commerce.

By Mr. DOWNEY:

H.R. 5485. A bill to extend by 5 months (through September 1982) the period within which a child over age 18 must have been already enrolled at the college level in order to qualify (after July 1982) for child's insurance benefits under title II of the Social Security Act as a postsecondary student; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

H.R. 5486. A bill to repeal certain provisions of the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981 which reduce the crude oil windfall profit tax; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

H.R. 5487. A bill to repeal the special leasing rules of the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981 which permit transfers of tax benefits; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. EDWARDS of California (for himself, Mr. MOORHEAD, Mr. MINETA, Mr. PASHAYAN, Mrs. SCHROEDER, and Mr. WAXMAN):

H.R. 5488. A bill to amend title 17 of the United States Code with respect to home video recording and video recording devices and media and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. EVANS of Iowa (for himself, Mr. ROBERTS of Kansas, and Mr. MORRISON):

H.R. 5489. A bill to amend the Commodity Credit Corporation Act to promote the exchange of materials produced abroad and needed in the United States for agricultural commodities produced in and exported from the United States through normal commercial trade channels; jointly, to the Committees on Agriculture, Armed Services, Energy and Commerce, and Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. FRANK:

H.R. 5490. A bill relating to the duty on certain knives (commonly known as "snap blade tools") having movable blades; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GORE:

H.R. 5491. A bill to amend the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act to revise the provisions for regulation of food additives and other food constituents, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

By Mr. GREEN:

H.R. 5492. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide that certain sales of condominiums or stock in cooperative housing corporations will qualify for the one-time exclusion of gain from sale of principal residence; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. JEFFORDS:

H.R. 5493. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to limit the amount of living expenses while away from home which Members of Congress may deduct; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LEE (for himself, Mr. HOLLAND, and Mr. WORTLEY):

H.R. 5494. A bill to establish a fair and consistent national policy for the resolution of claims based on a purported lack of congressional approval of ancient Indian land transfers and to clear the titles of lands subject to such claims; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

Mr. LOWRY of Washington:

H.R. 5495. A bill to amend the Immigration and Nationality Act to require that Federal refugee assistance be provided for not less than 100 percent of cash and medical assistance costs required during the first 36 months that refugees are in the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McDONALD:

H.R. 5496. A bill limiting the source of supplemental funds for unemployment assistance; jointly, to the Committees on Appropriations and Ways and Means.

By Mr. MOORHEAD (for himself, Mr. GRAMM, Mr. LOEFFLER, Mr. TAUZIN, Mr. BROYHILL, Mr. COLLINS of Texas, Mr. DANNEMEYER, Mr. CORCORAN, and Mr. BROWN of Ohio):

H.R. 5497. A bill to reform the Federal regulation of energy use and allocation, and for other purposes; jointly, to the Committees on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs and Energy and Commerce.

By Mr. SCHULZE:

H.R. 5498. A bill to apply duty-free treatment to p-hydroxybenzoic acid; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SHANNON:

H.R. 5499. A bill to continue until the close of June 30, 1986, the existing suspension of duties on Bis (4-aminobenzoate)-1,3 propanediol (trimethylene glycol di-p-aminobenzoate); to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SMITH of Alabama:

H.R. 5500. A bill to rescind tax benefits provided to Members of Congress for living expenses during 1981; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. TRAXLER:

H.R. 5501. A bill to amend the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act to change the conditions of eligibility for, and the amount of, financial assistance made with respect to agricultural production losses caused by disaster; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. WEBER of Minnesota:

H.R. 5502. A bill to rescind the tax benefits provided during 1981 to Members of Congress for living expenses; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. WOLF (for himself, Mr. PARRIS, and Mr. TRIBLE):

H.R. 5503. A bill to amend title 23 of the District of Columbia Code to make liability in civil actions arising from fresh pursuit into the District of Columbia by members of a peace unit of a State determined by the laws of such State; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. DE LA GARZA (for himself, Mr. WAMPLER, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. ALBOSTA, Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. ANTHONY Mr. ARCHER, Mr. AUCOIN, Mr. BEARD, Mr. BEDELL, Mr. BENEDICT, Mr. BEREUTER, Mr. BEVILL, Mr. BONIOR of Michigan, Mr. BOWEN, Mr. BROWN of California, Mr. BROWN of Colorado, Mr. BROYHILL, Mr. CAMPBELL, Mr. CARNEY, Mr. CHAPPELL, Mr. CHAPPIE, Mr. CLAUSEN, Mr. COELHO, Mr. COLEMAN, Mr. COLLINS of Texas, Mr. CONTE, Mr. CORCORAN, Mr. CORRADA, Mr. COURTER, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. DAUB, Mr. DUNCAN, Mr. DUNN, Mr. EMERSON, Mr. ENGLISH, Mr. EVANS of Georgia, Mr. EVANS of Iowa, Mr. FAUNTROY, Mr. FAZIO, Mr. FINDLEY, Mr. FISH, Mr. FITHIAN, Mr. FLORIO, Mr. FOGLIETTA, Mr. FOLEY, Mr. FORSYTHE, Mr. FRENZEL, Mr. FROST, Mr. FUQUA, Mr. GEJDENSON, Mr. GILMAN, Mr. GINGRICH, Mr. GOLDWATER, Mr. GUNDERSON, Mr. SAM B. HALL, Jr., Mr. HANSEN of Idaho, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. HATCHER, Mr. HIGHTOWER, Mr. HILER, Mrs. HOLT, Mr. HOPKINS, Mr. HORTON, Mr. HUCKABY, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. JEFFRIES, Mr. JONES of Tennessee, Mr. JONES of North Carolina, Mr. KINDNESS, Mr. LAGOMARSINO, Mr. LEE, Mr. LEWIS, Mr. LOEFFLER, Mr. LONG of Louisiana, Mr. MADIGAN, Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois, Mr. MATTOX, Mr. McEWEN, Mr. McHUGH, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. MITCHELL of New York, Mr. MONTGOMERY, Mr. MOORE, Mr. NAPIER, Mr. NATCHER, Mr. NEAL, Mr. NICHOLS, Mr. O'BRIEN, Mr. OBERSTAR, Mr. OXLEY, Mr. PANETTA, Mr. PASHAYAN, Mr. PEPPER, Mr. RAHALL, Mr. RAILSBACK, Mr. RANGEL, Mr. RICHMOND, Mr. ROBERTS of South Dakota, Mr. ROBERTS of Kansas, Mr. ROSE, Mr. ROTH, Mr. SAWYER, Mr. SHUMWAY, Mr. SKEEN, Mr. SKELTON, Mr. SMITH of Oregon, Mr. SMITH of Iowa, Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska, Mrs. SNOWE, Mr. STANGELAND, Mr. STENHOLM, Mr. STUMP, Mr. SUNIA, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. TRAXLER, Mr. VOLKMER, Mr. WATKINS, Mr. WEAVER, Mr. WEBER of Minnesota, Mr. WHITEHURST, Mr. WHITLEY, Mr. WHITTAKER, Mr. WHITTEN, Mr. WILSON, Mr. WINN, Mr. WOLF, Mr. YATRON, and Mr. YOUNG OF ALASKA:

H.J. Res. 404. Joint resolution to proclaim March 18, 1982, as "National Agriculture Day"; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

By Mr. WRIGHT:

H. Con. Res. 268. Concurrent resolution providing for an adjournment of the House from February 10 to February 17, 1982, and an adjournment of the Senate from February 11 or February 12 to February 22, 1982; considered and agreed to.

By Mr. HOWARD:

H. Con. Res. 269. Concurrent resolution to express the sense of Congress that nuclear war represents the world's greatest potential health hazard, that the arms race between the United States and the Soviet Union be halted through a mutual, verifiable agreement, and that all nuclear weapons in the world should be eliminated; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. BOLLING (for himself and Mr. QUILLEN):

H. Res. 359. Resolution providing amounts from the contingent fund of the House for expenses of investigations and studies by Committee on Rules in the 2d session of the 97th Congress; to the Committee on House Administration.

By Mr. DINGELL:

H. Res. 360. Resolution providing amounts from the contingent fund of the House for expenses of investigations and studies by the Committee on Energy and Commerce in the 2d session of the 97th Congress; to the Committee on House Administration.

By Mr. PEPPER (for himself and Mr. RINALDO):

H. Res. 361. Resolution providing amounts from the contingent fund of the House for expenses of investigations and studies by Select Committee on Aging in the 2d session of the 97th Congress; to the Committee on House Administration.

MEMORIALS

Under clause 4 of rule XXII, memorials were presented and referred as follows:

258. By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, relative to the Tennessee-Tombigbee Waterway project; to the Committee on Appropriations.

259. Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of California, relative to American prisoners of war in Southeast Asia; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GINN:

H.R. 5504. A bill for the relief of Captain Raul B. Perez, U.S. Navy (retired); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PARRIS:

H.R. 5505. A bill for the relief of Walter Reed Martindale, III; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SMITH of Oregon:

H.R. 5506. A bill for the relief of Victoriano Perches-Nevarez; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ADDITIONAL SPONSORS

Under clause 4 of rule XXII, sponsors were added to public bills and resolutions as follows:

H.R. 25: Mr. GINGRICH and Mr. LONG of Louisiana.

H.R. 116: Mr. FAZIO, Mr. RAHALL, Mr. DUNCAN, Mr. WHITLEY, Mrs. BYRON, and Mr. LOWRY of Washington.

H.R. 231: Mr. MATSUI.

H.R. 401: Mr. JONES of Oklahoma.

H.R. 459: Mr. NEAL, Mr. BENJAMIN, and Mr. AKAKA.

H.R. 768: Mr. MATTOX.

H.R. 852: Mr. FAZIO, Mr. CLAY, Mr. BAILEY of Pennsylvania, and Mr. HOWARD.

H.R. 1531: Mr. ROE.

H.R. 1648: Mrs. SCHROEDER, Mr. JOHNSTON, and Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois.

H.R. 1659: Mr. WHITTAKER, Mr. HUNTER, Mr. DAUB, Mr. DERWINSKI, Mr. ROBERT W. DANIEL, Jr., Mr. BARNARD, Mr. EVANS of Georgia, Mr. PHILIP M. CRANE, and Mr. SKEEN.

H.R. 1660: Mr. MCDONALD.

H.R. 1918: Mr. OXLEY.

H.R. 1919: Mr. FORSYTHE, Mr. MOFFETT, Mr. YOUNG of Alaska, Mr. FOGLIETTA, Mr. ERTEL, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. JACOBS, Mr. WEBER of Minnesota, Mr. FAZIO, and Mr. HOWARD.

H.R. 2414: Mr. FOGLIETTA.

H.R. 3083: Mr. BOWEN and Mr. ALEXANDER.

H.R. 3252: Mr. CONTE, Mr. WON PAT, Mr. COURTER, Mr. PICKLE, Mr. BOLAND, Mr. DOWNEY, Mr. HAGEDORN, Mr. STATON of West Virginia, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. MAVROULES, Mr. MADIGAN, Mr. MINISH, Mr. BEDELL, Mr. FARY, Mr. SENSENBRENNER, Mr. DOUGHERTY, and Mr. BONKER.

H.R. 3269: Mr. DWYER, Mr. OTTINGER, Mr. DUNN, Mr. FORD of Michigan, Mr. FORSYTHE, and Mr. SAWYER.

H.R. 3298: Mr. HILLIS, Mr. JACOBS, Mr. HAMILTON, Mr. LOWERY of California, and Mr. LOEFFLER.

H.R. 3416: Mr. SAWYER and Mr. EVANS of Georgia.

H.R. 3485: Mr. MCCOLLUM and Mr. DREIER.

H.R. 3824: Mr. OXLEY and Mr. SCHULZE.

H.R. 4015: Mrs. HECKLER, Mr. MITCHELL of New York, Mrs. SCHNEIDER, Mr. STANTON of Ohio, Mr. MARRIOTT, Mr. ROEMER, Mr. FORD of Tennessee, Mr. D'AMOURS, Mr. NOWAK, Mr. MINETA, and Mr. EARLY.

H.R. 4066: Mr. AKAKA.

H.R. 4070: Mr. BRODHEAD, Mr. HEFTEL, and Mr. ERTEL.

H.R. 4154: Mr. KOGOVSEK, Mr. ADDABBO, Mrs. BOUQUARD, Mr. BOWEN, Mr. FISH, Mr. EDGAR, Mr. HORTON, Mr. SMITH of New Jersey, Mr. MATSUI, Mr. BONIOR of Michigan, Mr. FAZIO, Mr. SMITH of Pennsylvania, Mr. FASCELL, Mr. FUQUA, Mr. CORRADA, Mr. LUNGREN, Mr. GOODLING, Mr. HANSEN of Utah, Mr. DAN DANIEL, Mr. LONG of Maryland, Mr. SHAMANSKY, Mr. EVANS of Georgia, Mr. DYMALLY, Mr. OTTINGER, Mr. SUNIA, Mr. FROST, Mr. MARKEY, Mr. RANGEL, Mr. FAUNTROY, Mr. WILSON, Mr. MINISH, Mr. LAFALCE, Mr. VENTO, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mrs. FENWICK, Mr. ROE, Mr. O'BRIEN, Mr. FARY, Mr. HEFTEL, Mr. DWYER, Mr. WHITEHURST, Mr. FLORIO, Mr. LOWRY of Washington, Mr. WORTLEY, Mr. PEPPER, Mr. FOGLIETTA, Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. LEACH of Iowa, and Mr. TAUKE.

H.R. 4158: Mr. EDGAR.

H.R. 4449: Mr. SHUMWAY, Mr. ROUSSELOT, Mr. MCDONALD, Mr. YATRON, and Mr. FAZIO.

H.R. 4461: Mr. MOLLOHAN, Mr. SYNAR, and Mr. ERTEL.

H.R. 4554: Mr. MCCLOSKEY, Mr. DANNEMEYER, Mr. MCCLORY, Mr. ROGERS, Mr. STENHOLM, Mr. WILSON, and Mr. FINDLEY.

H.R. 4680: Mr. NEAL, Mr. EDWARDS of Alabama, Mr. PATTERSON, Mr. MILLER of California, Mr. ANDERSON, and Mr. EVANS of Iowa.

H.R. 4728: Mr. ROE, Mr. SOLOMON, Mr. BADHAM, Mr. EVANS of Georgia, Mr. SAWYER, and Mr. DAUB.

H.R. 4784: Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. CONYERS, and Mr. GARCIA.

H.R. 4786: Mr. CORCORAN, Mr. YATRON, Mr. PATTERSON, Mr. D'AMOURS, Mr. BARNES, Mr. WHITEHURST, Ms. OAKAR, Mr. FUQUA, Mr. FINDLEY, Mr. BROOMFIELD, Mr. FORD of Michigan, Mr. MURTHA, and Mr. RHODES.

H.R. 4858: Mr. BENJAMIN.

H.R. 4898: Mr. ROTH and Mr. BOWEN.

H.R. 4931: Mr. ROBERT W. DANIEL, JR., Mr. STOKES, Mr. SUNIA, Mr. BREAUX, Mr. BEVILL, Mr. MARLENEE, Mr. MCCOLLUM, Mr. STATON of West Virginia, Mr. SNYDER, Mr. WILLIAMS of Ohio, Mr. SOLOMON, Mr. RUDD, Mr. PHILIP M. CRANE, Mr. ROBERTS of South Dakota Mr. DAUB, Mr. WALKER, Mr. EMERSON, Mr. CRAIG, and Mr. BEARD.

H.R. 4977: Mr. BIAGGI, Mr. SOLOMON, Mr. UDALL, and Mr. LOWRY of Washington.

H.R. 4999: Mr. JAMES K. COYNE, Mr. FIELDS, and Mr. DUNCAN.

H.R. 5030: Mr. HUGHES.

H.R. 5055: Mr. SIMON, Mr. RAILSBACK, Mrs. HOLT, and Mr. DYMALLY.

H.R. 5114: Mr. KASTENMEIER and Mr. MILLER of California.

H.R. 5115: Mr. KASTENMEIER and Mr. MILLER of California.

H.R. 5128: Mr. FORSYTHE, Mr. KINDNESS, Mr. BARNARD, Mr. FRENZEL, Mr. MCCLORY, and Mr. BLILEY.

H.R. 5131: Mr. ROEMER and Mr. WASHINGTON.

H.R. 5142: Mr. FAZIO.

H.R. 5168: Mr. SENSENBRENNER, Mr. LENT, Mr. FIELDS, Mr. ROBERTS of South Dakota, Mr. BEVILL, Mr. PORTER, Mr. GOODLING, Mr. NICHOLS, Mr. PARRIS, Mr. HANSEN of Idaho, Mr. GOLDWATER, Mr. HILER, Mr. OXLEY, Mr. NAPIER, Mr. WEAVER, Mr. LEWIS, Mr. COATS, Mr. MCCLORY, Mr. WOLF, Mr. LEBOUTILLIER, Mr. GREGG, Mr. GINGRICH, Mr. STANGELAND, Mr. YATRON, Mr. GUNDERSON, Mr. CRAIG, Mr. JAMES K. COYNE, Mr. ROBERTS of Kansas, Mr. DAN DANIEL, Mr. DANNEMEYER, Mr. FORSYTHE, Mr. WALKER, Mr. MOLLOHAN, Mr. EVANS of Georgia, Mr. BURGENER, Mr. SOLOMON, Mr. SMITH of Oregon, Mr. STATON of West Virginia, Mr. SILJANDER, and Mr. LAGOMARSINO.

H.R. 5192: Mr. BAILEY of Missouri, Mr. BEDELL, Mr. BEREUTER, Mr. CARMAN, Mr. CARNEY, Mr. DE LUGO, Mr. DERWINSKI, Mr. DUNN, Mr. EMERSON, Mr. ENGLISH, Mr. FISH, Mr. FLORIO, Mr. FOLEY, Mr. FORSYTHE, Mr. GILMAN, Mr. HARTNETT, Mr. HYDE, Mr. JACOBS, Mr. KINDNESS, Mr. KRAMER, Mr. LAGOMARSINO, Mr. LEBOUTILLIER, Mr. LENT, Mr. LOWERY of California, Mr. MARTIN of New York, Mr. MCKINNEY, Mr. MILLER of Ohio, Mr. MORRISON, Mr. NAPIER, Mr. OTTINGER, Mr. OXLEY, Mr. PEYSER, Mr. PORTER, Mr. QUILLEN, Mr. ROTH, Mr. SMITH of New Jersey, Mr. SOLOMON, Mr. TAUZIN, Mr. WATKINS, Mr. WEAVER, Mr. WILLIAMS of Ohio, Mr. WORTLEY, Mr. ZEFERETTI, Mr. CONABLE, Mr. CRAIG, Mr. DANNEMEYER, Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma, Mr. EVANS of Iowa, Mr. FORD of Michigan, Mr. GOLDWATER, Mr. GRADISON, Mrs. HOLT, Mr. HOWARD, Mr. LEHMAN, Mr. LONG of Maryland, Mr. LUNGREN, Mr. NELLIGAN, Mr. PATTERSON, Mr. SMITH of Oregon, Mrs. SNOWE, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. WEBER of Minnesota, Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois, Mr. HILER, and Mr. JOHN L. BURTON.

H.R. 5193: Mr. FAUNTROY, Mr. NAPIER, Mr. FOGLIETTA, Mr. CROCKETT, Mr. DUNCAN, Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois, Mr. BROOKS, Mr. PEPPER, and Mr. SCHUMER.

H.R. 5197: Mr. HIGHTOWER.

H.R. 5251: Mr. MOLLOHAN.

H.R. 5290: Mr. WEBER of Minnesota, Mr. HORTON, Mr. MINISH, Mr. COURTER, Mr. FOGLIETTA, Mr. ROE, Mr. WINN, Mr. MAVROULES, Mr. SCHUMER, Mr. VENTO, Mr. WORTLEY, and Mr. EDGAR.

H.R. 5305: Mrs. BOUQUARD, Mr. ECKART, Mr. EDGAR, Mr. FORSYTHE, Mr. MINISH, Mr. MOFFETT, Mr. OBERSTAR, and Mr. WILSON.

H.R. 5312: Mr. KRAMER, Mr. EVANS of Georgia, Mr. DAN DANIEL, Mr. ROEMER, Mr. LONG of Louisiana, Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois, Mr. WHITLEY, Mr. FIELDS, Mr. LIVINGSTON, and Mrs. BOUQUARD.

H.R. 5330: Mr. LAGOMARSINO.

H.R. 5338: Mr. HARKIN, Mr. GORE, Mr. D'AMOURS, Mr. WOLPE, Mr. SKELTON, and Mr. JONES of Tennessee.

H.R. 5340: Mr. DINGELL, Mr. GINGRICH, Mr. ROTH, Mr. EDGAR, Mr. BEDELL, Mr. SWIFT, Mr. EMERY, Mr. VENTO, Mr. OBERSTAR, Mr. RATCHFORD, Mr. SCHUMER, Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. LEHMAN, Mr. GUARINI, Mrs. SCHNEIDER, Mr. FAZIO, Mr. NEAL, and Mr. PEPPER.

H.R. 5348: Mr. HORTON, Mr. DOWNEY, Mr. DE LA GARZA, Mr. ADDABBO, Mr. STANTON of Ohio, Mr. FAZIO, Mr. YOUNG of Missouri, Mr. BEILENSON, Mr. SAM B. HALL, Jr., Mr. OTTINGER, Mr. LIVINGSTON, Mr. FAUNTROY, Mr. BRODHEAD, Mr. ANNUNZIO, Mr. FROST, Mr. BEDELL, Mr. MILLER of California, Mr. WILSON, Mr. CLAY, Mr. RATCHFORD, Mr. CHAPPELL, Mr. VENTO, Mr. BEVILL, Mr. MARKS, Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. HEFTEL, Mr.

DWYER, Mr. ROE, Mr. SCHUMER, Mr. CORCORAN, Mr. KOGOVSEK, Mr. MITCHELL of Maryland, and Mr. GILMAN.

H.R. 5368: Mrs. CHISHOLM, Mr. EMERY, Mr. LAFALCE, Mr. LOWRY of Washington, Mr. GUARINI, Mr. PEPPER, Mr. MITCHELL of Maryland, Mr. DOUGHERTY, Mr. VENTO, Mr. COURTER, and Mr. MARTIN of New York.

H.R. 5369: Mr. DIXON, Mr. YOUNG of Alaska, Mr. DINGELL, Mr. SCHEUER, Mr. WASHINGTON, Mr. ADDABBO, Mr. MURTHA, Mr. RICHMOND, Mr. SMITH of Pennsylvania, Mr. MATSUI, Mr. KILDEE, Mr. FRANK, Mr. MILLER of California, Mr. JONES of North Carolina, Mr. HORTON, Mr. FISH, Mr. GARCIA, Mr. OTTINGER, Mr. DYMALLY, Mr. DANIELSON, Mr. BROWN of California, Mr. FORD of Michigan, Mr. MINETA, Mr. STARK, Mr. DWYER, Mr. MINISH, Mr. FAZIO, Mr. PERKINS, Mr. RAHALL, Mr. COELHO, Mr. DOUGHERTY, Mr. HERTEL, Ms. FIEDLER, Mrs. CHISHOLM, Mr. CLAY, Mr. WEAVER, Mr. D'AMOURS, Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois, Mr. MITCHELL of Maryland, and Mr. FORD of Tennessee.

H.R. 5396: Mr. CORCORAN, Mr. DOUGHERTY, Mr. ERTEL, Mr. DYMALLY, Mr. FISH, Mr. FORSYTHE, Mr. GUARINI, and Mr. YATRON.

H.R. 5404: Mr. DAUB, Mr. BURGENER, Mr. WEBER of Minnesota, Mr. GREGG, Mr. SCHUMER, Mrs. SCHROEDER, and Mr. JACOBS.

H.J. Res. 151: Mr. BRINKLEY, Mr. HILER, Mr. HOLLAND, Mr. CORRADA, Mr. SHAW, Mr. GREGG, Mr. TAYLOR, Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. DE LA GARZA, and Mr. HOPKINS.

H.J. Res. 197: Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois.

H.J. Res. 297: Mr. JAMES K. COYNE, Mr. ROSENTHAL, and Mr. YOUNG of Florida.

H.J. Res. 304: Mr. GAYDOS, Mr. SAWYER, Mr. SMITH of Alabama, Mr. HAMILTON, Mr. WATKINS, Mr. ERTEL, and Mr. RANGEL.

H.J. Res. 345: Mr. ALBOSTA, Mr. BADHAM, Mr. BENJAMIN, Mr. BENNETT, Mr. BEREUTER, Mr. BRINKLEY, Mr. BROOKS, Mr. BROOMFIELD, Mr. BROWN of Ohio, Mr. BROYHILL, Mr. CAMPBELL, Mr. CHAPPELL, Mr. CLINGER, Mr. COATS, Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois, Mr. CONTE, Mr. CORCORAN, Mr. CORRADA, Mr. ROBERT W. DANIEL, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. DAUB, Mr. DREIER, Mr. DWYER, Mr. DYMALLY, Mr. EDGAR, Mr. EDWARDS of California, Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma, Mr. EMERY, Mr. ERTEL, Mr. EVANS of Georgia, Mr. FARY, Mrs. FENWICK, Mr. FISH, Mr. FLIPPO, Mr. FRENZEL, Mr. GEPHARDT, Mr. GILMAN, Mr. GINN, Mr. GRAMM, Mr. GRAY, Mr. GUARINI, Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT, Mr. HANCE, Mr. HARTNETT, Mr. HIGHTOWER, Mr. HILER, Mr. HOLLENBECK, Mr. HOPKINS, Mr. HOWARD, Mr. HUNTER, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. JENKINS, Mr. LAGOMARSINO, Mr. LEE, Mr. LENT, Mr. LEVITAS, Mr. LIVINGSTON, Mr. LOEFFLER, Mr. LOTT, Mr. MARTIN of New York, Mr. MARTIN of North Carolina, Mr. MATTOX, Mr. MAVROULES, Mr. MCCOLLUM, Mr. MCDADE, Mr. MCDONALD, Mr. MCEWEN, Mr. MILLER of California, Mr. MINETA, Mr. MINISH, Mr. MITCHELL of New York, Mr. MONTGOMERY, Mr. MORRISON, Mr. O'BRIEN, Mr. OBERSTAR, Mr. PARRIS, Mr. PASHAYAN, Mr. PAUL, Mr. PEYSER, Mr. ROUSSELOT, Mr. SANTINI, Mr. SCHUMER, Mr. SHUSTER, Mr. SIMON, Mrs. SNOWE, Mr. SNYDER, Mr. SOLOMON, Mr. ST GERMAIN, Mr. STANGELAND, Mr. STOKES, Mr. STUMP, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. UDALL, Mr. WEBER of Minnesota, Mr. WHITE, and Mr. YATRON.

H.J. Res. 359: Mr. SOLARZ, Mr. DOUGHERTY, Mr. LEE, Mr. OXLEY, Mr. WON PAT, Mr. BOLAND, Mr. ALBOSTA, Mr. O'BRIEN, Mr. GILMAN, Mr. SAWYER, Mr. GRISHAM, Mr. KEMP, Mr. RICHMOND, Mr. JOHN L. BURTON, Mr. OBERSTAR, Mr. SHAW, Mr. MONTGOMERY, Mr. WEAVER, Mr. OTTINGER, Mr. PEPPER, Mr. HOWARD, Mr. MINETA, Mr. BENNETT, Mr. WORTLEY, Mr. LEBOUTILLIER, Mr. DOWDY, Mr. FRENZEL, Mr. BEVILL, Mr. DUNN, Mr. SHELBY, Mr. GINGRICH, Mr. HAGEDORN, Mr. COELHO, Mr. BROYHILL, Mr. WHITEHURST, Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. MITCHELL of New York, Mrs. HOLT, Mr. HOLLAND, Mr. SUNIA, Mr. ENGLISH, Mr. HILLIS, Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR., Mrs. BOUQUARD, Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois, Mr. BLANCHARD, Mr. CLINGER, Mr. MOLLOHAN, Mr. HERTEL, Mr. LUNGREN, Mr. PORTER, Mr. MICA, Mr. DAVIS, Mr. HATCHER, Mr. HOLLENBECK, Mr. VENTO, Mr. YOUNG of Florida, Mr. ROBINSON, Mr. ROEMER, Mr. FROST, Mr. NAPIER, Mr. UDALL, Mr. SOLOMON, Mr. CLAUSEN, Mr. MILLER of Ohio, Mr. BAFALIS, Mrs. SNOWE, Mr. ROBERT W. DANIEL, JR., Mr. JACOBS, Mr. FOGLIETTA, Mr. GUARINI, Mr. SMITH of Oregon, Mr. DICKS, and Mr. STUMP.

H.J. Res. 364: Mr. LOWERY of California, Mr. MARTIN of Illinois, Mr. WILSON, Mr. WEBER of Ohio, Mr. CORCORAN, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. DONNELLY, Mr. PATTERSON, Mr. ERDAHL, Mr. EVANS of Delaware, Mr. HUCKABY, Mr. RAILSBACK, Mr. BROYHILL, Mr. MCDONALD, Mr. FIELDS, Mr. SNYDER, Mr. MARTIN of North Carolina, Mr. OXLEY, Mr. ERLENBORN, Mr. CAMPBELL, Mr. SKELTON, Mr. DENARDIS, Mr. SMITH of Oregon, Mr. MCEWEN, Mr. STUMP, Mr. YATRON, Mr. BEVILL, and Mr. ATKINSON.

H.J. Res. 375: Mr. FROST, Mr. BONER of Tennessee, Mr. HUGHES, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. FARY, Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. WON PAT, Mr. ROBERTS of South Dakota, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. MCCLORY, Mr. GINN, Mr. CONTE, Mr. NELLIGAN, Mr. DONNELLY, Mr. APPLEGATE, Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. COLEMAN, and Mr. ECKART.

H.J. Res. 381: Mr. MATSUI, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. WHITEHURST, Mr. HUTTO, Mr. KEMP, Mr. OBERSTAR, Mr. ROE, Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. MINETA, Mr. OTTINGER, Mrs. HOLT, Mr. FAUNTROY, Mr. FAZIO, Mr. DYMALLY, Mr. LUNGREN, Mr. EVANS of Georgia, Mr. FORD of Michigan, Mr. SUNIA, Mr. HARKIN, and Mr. LAGOMARSINO.

H.J. Res. 387: Mr. YATRON.

H.J. Res. 388: Mr. CORCORAN, Mr. DOUGHERTY, Mr. ERTEL, Mr. DYMALLY, Mr. FISH, Mr. FORSYTHE, Mr. GUARINI, and Mr. YATRON.

H.J. Res. 398: Mr. BEREUTER, Mr. LAFALCE, Mr. CARNEY, Mr. SOLOMON, Mr. DREIER, Mr. GUARINI, Mr. NELLIGAN, and Mr. MCDONALD.

H. Con. Res. 1: Mr. ROSE.

H. Con. Res. 100: Mr. SHUSTER, Mr. SILJANDER, Mr. STENHOLM, Mr. DAUB, and Mr. MARKEY.

H. Con. Res. 195: Mr. ENGLISH.

H. Con. Res. 219: Mrs. HOLT, Mr. MCDONALD, Mr. MOFFETT, Mr. MOAKLEY, Mr. WON PAT, Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. HILER, Mr. STATON of West Virginia, Mr. HUBBARD, Ms. FERRARO, Mrs. SCHNEIDER, Mr. DYMALLY, Mr. ASHBROOK, and Mr. BENJAMIN.

H. Con. Res. 232: Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois, Mr. D'AMOURS, Mr. WEISS, Mr. BARNES, Mr. DWYER, Mr. DIXON, and Mr. HOYER.

H. Con. Res. 243: Mr. MCHUGH, Mr. WIRTH, Mr. OBERSTAR, Mr. BEDELL, Mr. CORRADA, Mr. EDWARDS of California, Mr. ROE, Mr. DERWINSKI, Mr. WOLPE, Mr. FASCELL, Mrs. FENWICK, and Mr. PEPPER.

H. Con. Res. 251: Mr. KEMP, Mr. LEBOUTILLIER, Mrs. BOUQUARD, Mr. HYDE, Mr. PRITCHARD, Mr. DYMALLY, Mr. WOLPE, Mr. WEBER of Minnesota, Mr. COURTER, Mr. FORSYTHE, Mr. WEBER of Ohio, Mr. WYDEN, Mr. BROWN of California, Mr. SILJANDER, Mr. MOAKLEY, Mr. HARKIN, Mrs. FENWICK, Mr. EVANS of Georgia, Mr. SMITH of Alabama, Mr. WORTLEY, Mr. WON PAT, Mr. MILLER of Ohio, Mr. ASHBROOK, Mr. CRAIG, Mr. SENSENBRENNER, Mr. CORRADA, Mr. BENJAMIN, Mr. FAUNTROY, Mr. WAXMAN, Mr. ROE, Mr. FLIPPO, Mr. LANTOS, Mr. DICKINSON, Mr. FITHIAN, Mr. FROST, and Mr. LEACH of Iowa.

H. Con. Res. 255: Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois, Mr. BAILEY of Pennsylvania, Mr. FLORIO, Mr. LANTOS, Mrs. BOGGS, and Mr. MITCHELL of Maryland.

H. Res. 252: Mr. SHAMANSKY, Mr. SMITH of Pennsylvania, Mr. BOLAND, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. HEFTEL, Mr. FARY, Mr. STOKES, Mr. DYMALLY, Mr. FAUNTROY, and Mr. ECKART.

H. Res. 269: Mr. MOAKLEY, Mr. WON PAT, Mr. MCDONALD, Mr. HILER, Mr. HUBBARD, Mr. PEPPER, Mr. WOLPE, Mr. STATON of West Virginia, Ms. FERRARO, Mr. HYDE, Mr. BIAGGI, Mr. DYMALLY, Mr. ASHBROOK, Mr. WEBER of Minnesota, Mrs. FENWICK, and Mr. COURTER.

DELETIONS OF SPONSORS FROM PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under cause 4 of rule XXII, sponsors were deleted from public bills and resolutions as follows:

H.R. 1362: Mr. CLAY.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII,

343. The SPEAKER presented a petition of Gary R. Carr, Panacea, Fla., and others, relative to Secretary of the Interior James G. Watt; which was referred to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

AMENDMENTS

Under clause 6 of rule XXIII, proposed amendments were submitted as follows:

H.R. 4481

By Mr. SENSENBRENNER:

—Page 7, line 2, insert "and programs for the construction of prisons, jails, and other detention facilities" before the semicolon.

Page 13, line 7, strike out "and".

Page 13, after line 7, insert the following new subparagraph:

(B) in paragraph (3) by inserting ", other than construction projects involving prisons, jails, and other detention facilities" before the semicolon, and

Page 13, line 8, strike out "(B)" and insert in lieu thereof "(C)".

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

HUMAN RIGHTS IN LATIN AMERICA

HON. ANTHONY TOBY MOFFETT

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. MOFFETT. Mr. Speaker, almost everywhere we look in the world today, we see the devastating effects of the Reagan administration's deemphasis of human rights. In South Africa, the Philippines, El Salvador, Chile, Guatemala, and even Poland and the Soviet Union, the administration's approach of placing human rights near the bottom of the list of foreign policy priorities has helped to worsen the plight of people in those nations.

While I was pleased by the recent release of a comprehensive human rights report by the State Department, I was disturbed by some of its findings. For example, while the State Department report recognizes the incidence of torture and murder of innocent civilians in El Salvador, it seems to downplay the extent to which government forces are responsible for these atrocities.

In its 1981 "Report on Human Rights in Latin America," the Council on Hemispheric Affairs, a prestigious nonprofit organization which monitors human rights in the Western Hemisphere, named El Salvador and Guatemala as the worst human rights violators in the hemisphere. With U.S. military aid to El Salvador increasing, and the possiblity of U.S. armed intervention looming ominously on the horizon, I feel it is important for us to put into perspective exactly what type of regime we are supporting.

I am inserting for the RECORD the Council's summary of the human rights situation in Latin America for 1981, along with the specific country reports for El Salvador and Guatemala. I urge my colleagues to examine these reports, in hopes that the good work of the Council in revealing human rights violations in Latin America, and in El Salvador and Guatemala in particular, may have a positive impact on U.S. policy in the Western Hemisphere.

HUMAN RIGHTS IN LATIN AMERICA—1981 ANNUAL REPORT

(Prepared by the Council on Hemispheric Affairs)

The observance of human rights is particularly central to the political life of Latin America. The region has historically suffered a high incidence of authoritarian government, weak political traditions and strong military establishments which characteristically restrict the personal and political freedom of the citizenry and violate human rights that are universally recognized as inalienable. Even given the region's dreary history in this respect, the calendar year 1981 was marked by an alarming deterioration of human rights in the Western Hemisphere, as both the number and the seriousness of the abuses committed by such regimes rose dramatically.

This report presents a brief overview of the status of human rights in most Latin American nations during the past year, commenting on important social, political and military factors germane to the respect or disrespect of basic constitutional guarantees of life, liberty and political freedom. The report was compiled in the last six months by this organization's research staff, and draws on a wide variety of domestic and international sources for its information. Because of restrictions imposed by limited space and a lack of extensive on-site investigations, it does not attempt to provide an exhaustive statistical analysis of human rights violations in any given nation. Rather, it seeks to give the reader a balanced and informative summary of the status of human rights in Latin America, and to describe important developments in the past year.

(The Council on Hemispheric Affairs also drafts more extensive and detailed country-by-country studies of human rights which will be issued over the first half of 1982.)

INTRODUCTION

Basic civil liberties, including the right to life, liberty, and the freedom of personal and political expression, suffered a drastic setback in 1981. In more than a dozen regional nations, even the most fundamental rights—life and the inviolability of the person—were violated by the government-condoned practice of harassing, torturing and murdering political opponents of those in power. In six other nations, personal and political freedoms were restricted to varying extents by government actions.

These reverses were directly linked to policies adopted by President Reagan, particularly the "quiet diplomacy" approach to human rights issues. Seemingly obsessed with the East-West dimension of hemispheric relations, the Reagan administration substituted militaristic, security-related considerations for a genuine concern for human life, with a catastrophic effect on the lives of Latin Americans. Candidate Reagan berated the Carter human rights policy for its inconsistency and alleged bias against pro-U.S. authoritarian regimes, but his own policy suffers from the same double standard in reverse. He properly attacks human rights violations in Poland as well as lesser misdeeds in some Latin American leftist states while remaining silent in the face of crimes by right-wing regimes that cry out for condemnation.

In its first six months in office, the new administration completely reversed the Carter administration's human rights policy that had, in a surprisingly short time, reversed this nation's reputation as the world's bully. The Carter human rights policy won recognition around the world for representing the best rather than the worst of U.S. ideals. More than that, it worked in Latin America as nation after nation responded to the moral and material pressure by lessening, or at least pretending to lessen, pulling out the fingernails of its own citizens.

Citing the need to protect Latin America from presumed communist insurgency, Reagan has allied the U.S. with almost all of the most violent regimes in the hemisphere. In doing so, he has sanctioned atrocities and human rights abuses by providing these governments with essentially unconditional support. In spite of its spirited opposition to big government, the Reagan presidency quickly arrayed itself with governments which are almost totalitarian in their control over every aspect of society.

The Council on Hemispheric Affairs (COHA) found that serious human rights violations increased to the point of being a grave cause for alarm in at least twelve nations during 1981. In a number of other countries, previously acceptable human rights records were marred by abuses which slipped them into the "mixed" category. Only a handful of nations, according to COHA's findings, maintained good records or significantly improved their practices during the past twelve months.

Central America, a focus of international concern over human rights in 1980, continued to be the site of the most serious and widespread violations, as the civil violence wracking El Salvador and Guatemala escalated to unprecedented levels. Named by COHA last year as the hemisphere's worst violators of human rights, the governments of these two nations intensified their violent policies and in 1981 together accounted for 25,000 to 30,000 civilian deaths—nearly double the 1980 total, and far outnumbering the number of victims of political violence in the whole of Latin America.

A comparable death toll in the United States would have claimed well over 500,000 lives.

As a consequence, Guatemala and El Salvador have been selected in 1981 as the hemisphere's worst human rights violators for the second consecutive year.

Colombia, at present led by a nominally democratic government, suffered one of the most precipitious declines in the respect for human rights in 1981. The increasing influence of the Colombian military in government affairs, and the inherent mediocrity and opportunism of the two main political parties, gave cause for concern that the situation may deteriorate further in 1982. COHA has called for increased international attention to be focused on Colombia's human rights practices during the coming year.

The Southern Cone nations of Argentina, Chile and Uruguay, where international pressure and the Carter human rights policy were most successful in winning a reduction of abuses during the late 1970's once again reverted to their previous patterns of repression, and renewed efforts to polish their tarnished international image by words rather than deeds.

The nations under leftist or revolutionary socialist rule in Latin America, placed in a separate and more sinister category by the Reagan administration's ideological fervor, actually compiled a mixed human rights record. Cuba, and Grenada, to a varying extend, placed restrictions on the political and personal expression of their citizens but managed to avoid the brutal torture and murder of political opponents which has made right-wing Latin American regimes infamous. Their status has remained the same—negative on human rights, but no significant deterioration. Micaragua, which in terms of human rights witnessed a steady decline in its commitment to pluralism through much of the year, now seems to have pulled itself back and there are hopeful signs that government authorities are again aiming for a relatively open society.

What follows is a country-by-country review of the 1981 human rights situation in Latin America:

CENTRAL AMERICA

El Salvador

The massive level of human rights abuses in El Salvador during 1980 excalated to still more tragic levels in 1981, as the social fabric of the nation disintegrated under the pressure of civil conflict and as the government's repressive tactics became institutionalized. More than 12,000 civilians were killed in 1981, according to the Legal Aid Office of the San Salvadoran Archdiocese, which compiled testimonies from relatives and friends of victims. Because many murders go unreported (due to survivor's fears of retribution), the actual number of victims is believed to be higher. Some estimates have placed the overall death toll for this year as high as 17,000. Almost all sources agree that the vast majority of these killings are attributable to the combined armed forces (Army, Treasury Police, National Guard, and National Police) and to right-wing paramilitary organizations acting with the armed forces' complicity.

While managing to survive in office, President Jose Napoleon Duarte has had virtually no success in limiting the abuses committed by a substantial sector of the armed forces or in placing legal limitations on the activities of several right-wing paramilitary organizations. His inability to prosecute the detained National Guard members implicated in the murder of four U.S. religious women a year ago, and to provide for even minimal security for visiting foreigners, let alone moderate local political leaders, is convincing evidence that while he may reign, he certainly doesn't rule. In effect, Duarte is little more than a figure head president who agilely serves two often disparate masters: Washington and his own security forces.

The daily violence in the countryside has reached such proportions that most international observers, as well as some Salvadorans and U.S. officials, now agree that the plans to hold elections in March 1982 are no longer feasible because of the danger to candidates who dare to campaign and the restrictions imposed on the electoral process by the Duarte government.

One human rights problem that is growing more serious every day, is the plight of the hundreds of thousands of refugees who have been forced to leave their homes due to the violence. the U.N. High Commission for Refugees (UNHCR) estimated in August that as many as 300,000 Salvadorans have been displaced as a result of the country's conflict, and that 100,000 more have fled to neighboring Honduras and Guatemala for safety.

Living conditions for these refugees are often subhuman. Their presence has already overtaxed the limited resources of local centers to support them. Beyond the threat of starvation, however, the refugees face a continued danger from the Salvadoran armed forces and paramilitary, which carry on a campaign of harassment and terror against refugee encampments.

There have been numerous documented cases of collaboration between Honduran and Salvadoran military units in which hundreds of refugees—mostly women, small children, and the elderly—have been gunned down while attempting to flee the advance of Salvadoran troops. Reports from the Honduran border area by an independent U.S. fact-finding mission in November indicated that Salvadoran paramilitary squads cross freely into Honduran territory to randomly harass, kidnap and murder nationals living in camps along the border.

The Duarte government has failed not only in its feeble attempts to bring to justice the military officials responsible for the murder of four U.S. Catholic missionaries, but has also failed to prosecute the two men believed guilty of the murders of two U.S. agrarian reform advisers the following month, as well as establish the fate of a free-lance U.S. journalist who disappeared from his hotel around the same time. Despite the evidence of Salvadoran military complicity in these and other acts of terrorism against U.S. citizens, the Reagan administration has pushed for increased levels of U.S. assistance to the Salvadoran armed forces during 1982, virtually guaranteeing that the levels of violence and abuse by the Salvadoran authorities will climb still higher.

Guatemala

Guatemala is the site of the most serious decline in the human rights situation in all of Latin America. Since the CIA orchestrated a military coup which deposed Guatemala's last reform-minded government in 1954, this Central American nation has been ruled by a series of military or military-controlled regimes with a reputation for unusual brutality. The year 1981 marked a new high in the level of government-sponsored murder, torture and repression that is shocking even for this violence-prone nation.

The latest available, if difficult to establish, estimates indicate that at least 9,000—and possibly as many as 12,000—civilians have been killed since January, with the average daily death toll having risen well above fifty in the last few months. Even supporters of the Guatemalan regime do not deny that the overwhelming majority of civilian deaths are attributable either to the armed forces or to secret "death squads," financed by wealthy industrialists and owners of agricultural estates, which are coordinated by top military officials from a room in an annex to the Presidential Palace.

Journalists, Indian peasants, labor leaders, students, teachers, centrist politicians, and professionals are the primary targets of what can only be described as a government extermination campaign against the nation's moderate alternative. Only a tiny percentage of those killed were in any way associated with Guatemala's four main guerrilla organizations; most sources indicate that there are about 3,000 guerrillas active in the country—or less than one-third of the minimum number of civilians killed in 1981 alone.

Increasing levels of government repression in the countryside, however, have only made it easier for guerrilla organizations to attract recruits from among Guatemala's large and traditionally politically inert, Indian population. COHA has received a constant flow of information throughout the year from a variety of official sources, and from cable traffic originating in several Western embassies in Guatemala City, of government counterinsurgency—or "search and destroy" missions—in rural areas which resulted in massacres of entire villages.

In February, for example, 169 peasant deaths at the hands of security forces were confirmed in the department of Chimaltenango; it is believed that many more were actually killed. From June 16 to 19, fifty villagers from El Arbolito in the northern department of El Peten were killed, and hundreds more fled across the border into Mexico. On July 19, government troops killed between 150 and 300 villagers at Coya in Huehuetenango. In a number of these incidents, U.S.-supplied helicopters were used to bomb and strafe communities whose misfortune was to be situated in areas where guerrillas were active.

Reagan administration actions have provided the Guatemalan government and right-wing death squads with a virtual endorsement of their tactics. The suspension of U.S. military assistance imposed during the Carter years is being eroded—a clear violation of congressional intent—and administration officials have repeatedly spoken of the need to help Guatemala combat "an international communist conspiracy."

A possible explanation for the Reagan administration's blind eye towards the most blatant case of human rights violations in the hemisphere is that a number of top administration officials, including Deputy White House Chief of Staff Michael Deaver, Ambassador-at-Large Vernon Walters, and State Department Special Consultant Lt. Gen. Gordon Sumner (Ret.), have had close personal and business ties with many of the Guatemalan officers responsible for the abuses. It is also widely alleged that the Reagan presidential campaign was the beneficiary of illicit contributions from Guatemalan businessmen and politicians anxious to have a friend in the White House.●

TRIBUTE TO JULIETTE E. ABRAHAM

HON. JIM DUNN

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, the State of Michigan, the Republican Party, and our entire Nation has loss an outstanding individual. Julie Abraham of East Lansing, Mich. died January 25, 1982, at the age of 63. Her willingness to volunteer and her service not only to her political party, but to all human beings, can serve as an example to Americans everywhere. I wish the House of Representatives to take special note on this occasion.

At the time of her death, Julie Abraham was serving as Michigan's Sixth Congressional District Republican chairman, a title she retained since 1975. She also was membership chairman of the Ingham County Republican Party, a position she held since 1975 and prior to that from 1969 to 1973. She also served as a delegate to the Republican National Convention in 1972 and 1976. A dedicated volunteer, her loyalty was displayed time and again by the long hours of work she put forth to accomplish any task, no matter how difficult or tiring. Her knowledge and capabilities gave her the power to be a true leader.

But to suggest that her passing on will be a loss for only her party would be a mistake. Foremost an American, she was a great believer in democratic ideals and our political process. She was particularly active with younger Americans, and encouraged all youths to take an active role in the Nation's decisionmaking process. All who knew her selfless charity and kindness will also recognize the void her death has left us. To describe an individual as a "special person" in these times has become an overworked cliché. But there is no other way to refer to Julie Abraham.

Her loyalty, devotion, and willingness to help others, demonstrated each day, command our respect. She was truly a credit to her community and the Nation. To her husband, Eddie, and her entire family, I wish to extend my deepest sympathy.●

MUSHROOM LABELING

HON. RICHARD T. SCHULZE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. SCHULZE. Mr. Speaker, on January 26, 1982, I introduced two companion bills, H.R. 5353 and H.R. 5354, that will provide information to consumers about the origin of processed mushrooms they buy.

H.R. 5354 amends the Tariff Act of 1930 to require that containers of imported preserved mushrooms disclose on their labels, in English, the country in which the mushrooms were grown. Current law requires only that the label identify the country which last processed the mushrooms. This situation can be most misleading to the consumer, who may not know that the processed mushrooms offered for sale were actually grown in a country other than the one that provided the final processing before importation to the United States.

H.R. 5353 amends the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act to require that containers of mushrooms not grown within the United States disclose on their labels the country in which the mushrooms were grown. H.R. 5353 is intended to address the labeling of mushrooms moving in interstate commerce and would require American producers to comply with its terms.

H.R. 5354 addresses the marking of containers of mushrooms entering the United States from foreign sources.

In my view, the American consumer has a right to know what he or she is buying. We have a right to know whether the products offered to us are grown by American farmers who are subject to inspections and sanitation requirements of the highest stringency. It is well known that the procedures in effect in many parts of the world would not pass muster in this country. It is a plain fact that overseas farming operations can operate at lower cost than their American counterparts, if the foreign operators pay little or nothing to their workers, or use methods or chemicals that would be outlawed here.

Other economic problems confront the American mushroom grower. The principal threat looming on the horizon is the ability and willingness of the People's Republic of China to surge and dump their canned mushrooms in our processed mushroom market, thereby destroying the domestic producer. The Chinese motivation is plain: that country desperately needs hard currency to pay its debts and buy foreign-made products. To get this currency, the Chinese are willing to sell below their costs in order to force out their competition, first the other foreign producers, and then the American producers.

The International Trade Commission has conducted more than one investigation into the plight of the American mushroom industry. In August 1980, the ITC ruled that imported mushrooms were entering the United States at such a rate as to be a "substantial cause of serious injury" to the American mushroom industry. Subsequently, a series of tariffs were imposed in order to stem this unprecedented assault on our domestic growers.

Today, Mr. Speaker, that assault continues, and it comes primarily from the People's Republic of China.

During the third quarter of 1981, China increased its share of the total imports to the United States by nearly 300 percent over the same quarter of the previous year. In 1978, China exported only a negligible number of mushrooms to the United States. During the 1980 marketing year, it exported over 20 million pounds, and in so doing, it became the largest single supplier of imported mushrooms to our country.

Should this trend continue, the American mushroom industry will undoubtedly become irreparably damaged while foreign competition is also reduced. The possibility of a single supply source is not farfetched. An entire American industry is threatened by attack from a nonmarket economy industry that has our farmers in its sights.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that when the American consumer learns the truth, he will support his local mushroom farmer. What I ask Congress to enact is merely a requirement for truth in labeling. If the consumer has the facts, he can make his own choice. I urge the support of my colleagues for these bills.●

DEBORAH BAKER NAMED SOUTH CAROLINA JUNIOR MISS

HON. JOHN L. NAPIER

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. NAPIER. Mr. Speaker, what we are doing here in the Halls of Congress, in essence, is preparing the way for future generations of Americans. Youth is the promise of tomorrow. Youth is, and always will be, the greatest resource our Nation possesses. It is with pride that the Sixth Congressional District of South Carolina will be represented throughout South Carolina and many parts of the Nation by a young and vivacious high school senior from my hometown of Bennettsville. Miss Deborah Till Baker was recently selected as South Carolina's Junior Miss. In honor of that occasion, I would like to present the following news account for consideration and ask that it be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Mr. Speaker, I wish Miss Baker much success as she competes in America's Junior Miss competition in Mobile, Ala., this summer.

[From the Marlboro Herald-Advocate, Dec. 7, 1981]

DEBORAH BAKER NAMED SC JUNIOR MISS

Miss Deborah Till Baker, 17-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene H. Baker Jr. of Bennettsville and the late Joanne Kinney Baker, was selected South Carolina Junior Miss in Sumter Saturday night. She is the granddaughter of Mrs. John F. Kinney of Bennettsville and the late Judge Kinney.

The Bennettsville High School senior represented Marlboro County in the program. Deborah is senior class vice president, a member of the Beta Club, and was elected BHS Homecoming Queen last month. She is also a former Miss Marlboro Academy.

Deborah vied for the title with 57 other high school senior Junior Misses from across the state. During the week-long competition her host family was Mr. and Mrs. Buddy Sharpe of Sumter.

The Junior Miss Scholarship Program is sponsored by local sponsors and by national sponsors. Chart House Inc., Coca-Cola USA, Clairol, Kraft Foods and Simplicity Patterns.

On Wednesday Deborah was interviewed by the judges. On Thursday and Friday nights, she competed in poise and appearance, creative and performing arts, and physical fitness preliminaries.

Deborah won the physical fitness preliminary Friday night and was the $300-scholarship winner for overall poise and appearance.

Each contestant's transcript of grades, scores and honors was evaluated by a qualified panel of educators.

The emphasis of the Junior Miss Program at all levels is on excellence in scholarship, poise and personality, character, physical well-being, creativity, and in dealings with fellow humans.

Deborah was awarded a $1,250 scholarship to the college of her choice for becoming S. C. Junior Miss. She plans to enroll next fall as a freshman at Winthrop College at Rock Hill, which also awards her further scholarship funds.

Deborah will represent S. C. in the 25th annual America's Junior Miss competition in Mobile, Ala., this summer. The program is not a beauty pageant, but seeks to recognize, reward and encourage excellence in young people by presenting college scholarships and other awards to outstanding high school senior girls. Each year more than $2 million in college scholarships and other awards are offered to Junior Miss participants at the local, state and national levels.

In keeping with the claim that this contest is a scholarship program rather than a beauty pageant, Billy M. Harris of Sumter, chairman of the S.C. Junior Miss Program and manager for Deborah as the new state Junior Miss, says the young woman chosen state winner is never crowned queen. Instead, Deborah and her predecessors were given a pewter medallion, trophy, bouquet of roses, a lettered sash for her gown and a two-week all expense paid trip to Mobile for the National Program, the final night of which will be broadcast on network television.

In addition to Mr. and Mrs. Baker, those attending the event in Sumter were Deborah's brothers, Hartwell Baker III and Rob Hinson, of Bennettsville; her paternal grandfather, Hartwell Baker, and Mrs. Joan Ervin of Cheraw; Mr. and Mrs. John E. McIntyre, George McIntyre, Miss Phyllis Roberts, and George Chandler (preliminaries) of Clio; and Mr. and Mrs. Arch Fowler of Columbia.

Deborah's BHS faculty advisor and sponsor, Miss Alisa Goodman of Bennettsville, and her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Bill Goodman of Rockingham, N.C. were also among those there for the final event.

Upon Deborah's arrival in Bennettsville Sunday afternoon she was met by an official motorcade and was transferred to a convertible with city police escort. At McDonald's she was greeted by City Administrator Milby Gibson who presented her with a bouquet of red roses. Hubert Meggs, Jr., president of the Marlboro County Chamber of Commerce, and Mrs. Linda Leviner, secretary to the Chamber, presented a bouquet of red poinsettias.

She was joyfully greeted and congratulated by numerous of her high school friends, family and family friends.

IN AMERICA, THE PEOPLE RULE AND NOW THEY DEMAND ACTION AGAINST CRIME

HON. JOHN LeBOUTILLIER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. LeBOUTILLIER. Mr. Speaker, this past week I read a very disturbing editorial in the Irish Echo. It seems the people (whom we allege to represent), no longer have confidence in the ability of their elected officials to deal with the Nation's crime problem. Quite frankly, I concur with the author of this editorial. Despite the outrage of millions of American citizens, Congress and other legislative, judicial, and executive authorities have consistently ignored their responsibility to represent the will of the people.

It has been said that there is no greater force than an idea whose time has come. The following piece suggests that the idea this time around is that the people must act to get things done and not rely on lawmakers. That is a very sobering thought, and I urge my colleagues to consider it carefully. The editorial follows:

[From the Irish Echo, Jan. 16, 1982]

CRIME—OUR NO. 1 PROBLEM

As 1982 gets underway crime remains the major concern of the man and woman on the street. It is a world wide problem facing virtually every nation, but here we will concern ourselves with its implications to life in our own nation.

Throughout the United States the effect of the escalating crime rate has virtually changed the way we live our lives. Patterns of travel, of commerce, of entertainment have been drastically changed in the past several years.

As a matter of simple fact all of us have had to change the way we do things because society—and that too is all of us—has been unable to control the rapacious criminal population among us. It is up to the public to solve this problem because the politicians never will. Most politicians talk a good game but when it comes to action they are almost useless. Most of them react to organized pressure groups which represent few people and ignore the vast majority of people.

In the coming weeks we will make a number of proposals aimed at bringing the violent crime epidemic under control. In these proposals we will advocate the restoration of the death penalty for murder, rape and arson; a national hand gun control law; and the hiring of many more policemen.

All of these proposals have been ridiculed in the past by the small pressure groups that get politicians to do what they want while ordinary citizens suffer the consequences of rampant crime.

We believe it is time to overcome these small pressure groups which allow crime to continue in America and we intend to press for action to bring about the will of the people.

It is time Americans were once again able to walk in the streets of their nation without fear.●

SOCIAL SECURITY BENEFIT CUTS—6 MONTHS LATER

HON. JAMES M. SHANNON

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, this summer President Reagan rammed over $35 billion in budget cuts through the Congress. One of these cuts eliminated social security survivor benefits for all future college students except for a few beneficiaries currently in their senior year in high school who are able to enroll in college before May of this year.

I deeply regret that a majority of my colleagues voted to eliminate these payments to students whose parents have die, become disabled, or retired. This is the cruelest sort of benefit cut, one which goes into effect almost immediately without giving those students who were counting on receiving this income the chance to make other preparations.

The suffering and confusion has only been exacerbated by the Social Security Administration, which has been unwilling to notify current high school seniors of a way in which, under current law, they can prevent the termination of their benefit payments.

I wish to submit an article by Mike Barnicle that was recently printed in the Boston Globe. Mr. Barnicle describes some of the day-to-day human tragedies that are the result of the ill-conceived and unfair budget cuts contained in the Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1981. Six months after the act was signed into law, its harmful impact on social security beneficiaries and their families is becoming increasingly clear.

THE INNOCENT SURVIVORS

(By Mike Barnicle)

His father died on Jan. 8, so by Jan. 22, Jim Burns, the vice president of the senior class at Peabody High School, had dropped out of school and was over at North Shore Community College, where he enrolled as a freshman. He had to do this, the 17-year-old did, because last fall a majority of the men and women in the Congress of the United States voted to cut back on the benefits paid to survivors under the Social Security Act.

"He had to leave high school in order to get the benefits," Jack Wilson, the boy's home room teacher and senior class adviser was saying. "We've had about a dozen kids this year here at Peabody High who have had to leave high school for the same reason."

The Social Security Act, nearly 50 years old, became law during hard times. It has been a witness through the years to the fact that government is best when it tries to care for those unable to care for themselves.

Last fall, President Ronald Reagan, a man in his 70s who has spent decades living in the middle of luxury, comfort and wealth, kept urging the Congress to cut nearly everything in the budget except money for Pentagon toys. Among high-priority items to be slashed was the Survivor's Benefits program.

It used to be that if your father died, you would get a Social Security benefit check until you reached 18. The checks averaged about $225 a month. You could continue getting a benefit check until age 21 if you were enrolled in college.

Under Reagan's government, all of this has changed. Now, you have to be enrolled in college by May 1982, in order to obtain the benefits. Thus, the case of Jim Burns.

"But I just found out today that Jim isn't eligible to go to North Shore Community College," Judy Burns, the boy's mother was saying Friday. "The new law reads that you had to be getting the benefits in September of 1981 to qualify. Jim's father just died three weeks ago, so on Monday he'll have to go back to Peabody High.

"I had called the Social Security office about it at first and they gave me the wrong information. That's why Jim dropped out and enrolled in college in the first place. It makes me sick but I guess there's not a damn thing I can do about it. It really did bother him to have to leave his school but he's a sensible kid and he knew he had to do it."

"Who'd you vote for?" she was asked.

"Reagan," Judy Burns answered.

"What do you think now?"

"I don't know," she said. "I can't believe this is how he wanted it to work. I can't believe that he's really aware of how much he's hurting people, middle-class people. I guess you'd have to say I'm disillusioned.

"I voted for him because I thought that we had to end all this reckless government spending. But you don't realize the impact of things like this until it hits home. The thing that bothers me almost more than anything is that the people at Social Security didn't even inform me correctly."

"It has two effects," the teacher Wilson, said. "It has an effect on the kids who had to leave. On Friday, Jim was a high school senior and on Monday he's a college freshman. Most kids have a whole summer to prepare for that. He had a weekend.

"A parent has died and that's why they have to leave school. That's disturbing enough. You miss a lot if you miss your last year. There's a great deal of social activity in their senior year.

"It also affects the seniors who are still in school," Wilson said. "There are a lot of close, emotional relationships in this senior class. The other kids are disturbed too."

Much of the direction of government in the last 12 months has been aimed at dismantling programs that have helped the multitudes. Tell the political mind that cutting a budget is popular and all you will get is a reaction: no thought, no wondering about who gets hurt and how much they get hurt. Just the reaction and the lunge to cut spending, any spending at all, so long as it appears to be popular with the handful of millionaires who run the country from Wall Street and the White House.

Major items of interest here are things like food stamps, welfare, college loans and survivor's benefits. The military get everything they want because they use the magic word, "Russia" and the congressmen get an automatic $75-a-day expense allowance to write off on their taxes and Jim Burns gets to go back and forth from college to high school in the space of three weeks and a benefit check that runs out in June.

Reagan, who appears as amiable as a game-show host when seen on the television, does nothing to displease the wealthy. He is the President of people who don't have to worry about things like illness or college tuition.●

A SKEPTIC CONVINCED MINIMUM TILLAGE FARMING SAVES TOPSOIL

HON. BERKLEY BEDELL

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. BEDELL. Mr. Speaker, we have taken great strides toward solving the serious problem of topsoil loss on America's farmlands. However, unless we act responsibly, we still face a future whose landscape may include drastically reduced farm production because of soil erosion.

I speak with a sense of urgency when I ask Congress and farmers across the Nation to recognize the need for agricultural practices that utilize conservation techniques. According to the Council for Agricultural Science and Technology (CAST), we are losing approximately 4 billion tons of topsoil per year. This may eventually raise costs and reduce yields for our farmers, thus decreasing the quantity of vital food supplies available to the Nation and for export.

We possess today the know-how to decrease topsoil loss by up to 75 percent, according to CAST, without losing land productivity or profit. I am speaking of minimum-tillage farming and no-till ridge planting, as explained in the book by Ernest E. Behn, "More Profit With Less Tillage." One of my constituents from Iowa, Glenn Tjossem, wrote me exclaimed his success with this exciting new technique.

Glenn writes:

Concerning till planting on the ridge, like the doubter in a recent article, I also thought, "It might work on your farm, but our low gumbo fields would be different," but now find I was wrong. After a few years of using "till plant on the ridge," our sons who are now taking over the farming ask, "Why didn't you do this 10 years ago!" My only reply is, "I didn't think it would work in our gumbo type soil. We're never too old to learn!"

He explains:

In our operation we save at least 8,000 gallons of diesel fuel, and about 72 man days on a 12 gallon per hour tractor per year. We have traded off our large 4 wheel drive tractors, as the power requirement of this method is less than ½ of conventional method. These are a few of the benefits of "till planting on the ridge" but the main reason is that there is no visible loss of soil or water in our rotation of corn and soybeans, the soybean being the big problem with erosion, especially on the loess soil type we have here.

Glenn continues:

About half of the land we farm is contoured, and the slopes there are terraced. We think we now have terraces we do not need. In Behn's book he mentions, "If the slope isn't over 3 or 4 percent no terraces are needed," as this system puts a small terrace over 30 inches. With more rolling land, this system would work well in conjunction with terraces.

I was excited by the comments in Glenn's letter, especially since they come from a self-processed doubter. His examples of fuel and time savings, the need for less powerful machinery, few terraces—on top of conserving soil and water, should certainly persuade the rest of us.

Congress plays a central role in influencing the Nation's farm production. Present policies often encourage excessive erosion for short-term, maximum production, and this results in soil deterioration. I urge Congress to redirect its emphasis on agricultural policy toward soil conservation. Farmers should be encouraged to adopt this method of farming to assure a future of productive land use in America.●

SYNFUEL FOLLY

HON. HANK BROWN

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. BROWN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, last week, 13 colleagues and I introduced H.R. 5404, legislation to abolish the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. We concluded that during a time when we face massive budget deficits, the sort of corporate welfare for major energy companies represented by the Synthetic Fuels Corporation could not be justified.

Stephen Chapman, writing in the February 4, 1982, edition of the Chicago Tribune, came to exactly the same conclusion. I commend his comments to my colleagues with the hope you will join me in the effort to abolish the Synthetic Fuels Corporation, which Mr. Chapman so accurately describes as a "monument to bureaucratic folly."

Ronald Reagan was the candidate who promised a free market in energy, unencumbered by the help or hindrance of a meddlesome bureaucracy. So why does the Synthetic Fuels Corporation still exist? And why does the President tolerate it?

On the campaign trail, Reagan was unequivocal in blaming the government for the nation's energy problems. "Free enterprise can do a better job of producing the things that people need than government can," he declared. "The Department of Energy . . . hasn't produced a quart of oil or a lump of coal."

This is not the type of thinking which created the Synthetic Fuels Corporation (SFC). A reaction to the 1979 gasoline shortage, it was supposed to spawn a full-scale industry capable of producing up to 2 million barrels of oil per day. It also promised to be one of the century's most extravagant boondoggles, with a projected price tag of $88 billion.

Such figures inspired horror in the faint-hearted. But to the bold visionaries responsible for the program, it was proof of America's resolve to be free of OPEC. "The scope of this project," boasted President Carter, "is greater than the sum total of the interstate highway system, the Marshall Plan and the space program combined." In the most optimistic dreams of its founders, this mammoth enterprise would have taken more than a decade to achieve the unimpressive goal of reducing the nation's demand for conventional oil by 11 percent.

Those dreams are not likely to be fulfilled, though the SFC has fared better under Reagan than anyone had a right to expect. Last year he decided not to dismantle the SFC or slash its budget, ignoring the pleas of budget director David Stockman. It can spend up to $14.8 billion over the next three years—though by making only loan and price guarantees, it could postpone the cost for several years.

The White House, however, has not yet declared the agency "operational," which would give it control of the synfuels projects currently supervised by the Energy Department. Nearly three years after the first gasoline lines appeared in California, the SFC has yet to award a single contract for the production of synthetic fuel.

The energy picture, of course, has changed dramatically since the panic of '79. Then everyone assumed that OPEC's stranglehold on the world oil market would guarantee steadily rising prices through the 1980s. The only way to guard against that threat, Congress and the Carter administration agreed, was to wean ourselves off of imported oil. One means was synthetic fuel—oil and gas made from shale, coal and tar sands.

In practice, things haven't worked out as expected. Instead of continuing their upward spiral, oil prices have remained more or less fixed for two years. Prices in the U.S. were supposed to skyrocket following Reagan's decontrol of oil and gasoline prices shortly after he took office, but they didn't. Since the end of 1979, in fact, the real price of oil (adjusted for inflation) has actually fallen.

The road ahead also looks reasonably smooth. Last summer Business Week reported that "oil company planners, energy economists in the U.S. and elsewhere, and even some OPEC officials are predicting steady—or possible—declining—world oil prices for the rest of this year and only a minimal increase at best in 1982 and the years beyond." Sheikh Yamani himself admits, "Within the next few years, there are no factors of any kind allowing an increase in the oil price. Such an action would be suicidal."

So why do we need the Synthetic Fuels Corporation? Its original purpose was to free us from our dependence on imported oil. But OPEC's own price increases have done much to accomplish the same thing. Since 1977, our oil imports have fallen by 34 percent.

Moreover, the prime reason for reducing that dependence—namely the prospect of soaring prices—has likewise vanished. If we can have conventional oil at stable prices, we don't need for more expensive substitutes. And the threat of blackmail from any major oil producing nation, never terribly credible, has diminished along with our demand for their product. There is always the chance that one of the Arab nations will be forced, by war or revolution, to halt production. But that is why we have a Strategic Petroleum Reserve which the administration intends to fill.

The SFC should be especially offensive to an administration that believes in the free market. Its only function is to encourage, through price and loan guarantees, and possibly through direct subsidies, the production of fuels too expensive to compete with existing energy sources. If they could be produced at competitive prices, synfuels would need no federal assistance.

During the 1980 campaign, Reagan earned much derision from Jimmy Carter with his insistence that the free market could solve most of our energy problems, if the government would only let it. Since then, in fact, if has done just that. Reagan has been vindicated, Carter discredited. Maybe the President wants to keep the SFC as a monument to bureaucratic folly. If so, he has discovered the only useful purpose it will ever serve.●

TERRORISTS ATTACK

HON. CHARLES PASHAYAN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, Saturday, January 29, the Turkish General Counsel in Los Angeles, Kemal Arikan, was shot to death in a senseless act of terrorism. A group calling itself the Justice Commandos of Armenian Genocide claims responsibility for the action, and Los Angeles police have arrested suspected assailants.

As an American of Armenian descent, I totally abhor the incident that took place in my home State, and I am not alone in my denouncement.

The United Armenian Commemorative Committee's central California region has issued a statement regarding this incident that I should like to share with my colleagues. That statement reads:

We are all deeply disturbed and shocked by the murder of a Turkish diplomat in Los Angeles. We condemn it as a vile act of cowardice.

All such violence, no matter what the provocation, is abhorrent to all civilized people everywhere, and cannot be "explained" away.

Such dastardly acts of violence are especially repulsive to Armenian-Americans in Fresno, and all terrorists, no matter what groups, nationality, ethnic identity or political persuasion they profess, are, as President Reagan said, cowards.

It is wrong for the Turkish government to deny the first Genocide of the 20th Century—and it is equally wrong for anyone to resort to murder to undo a previous murder.

Our sympathy and prayers go out to the slain diplomat's family and we pray, along with all people seeking justice and peace, for an end to such senseless violence!●

TIME FOR THE UNITED STATES TO TAKE A BREATHER ON EL SALVADOR

HON. ROMANO L. MAZZOLI

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, like most Americans, I am concerned about the tragic situation in strife-torn El Salvador. It appears that both sides in this conflict are guilty of some of the most inhumane treatment of innocent people that the world has ever seen.

Recent days have yielded news accounts detailing a level of violence, bloodshed, and carnage almost beyond comprehension. I am convinced that it is time for the United States to terminate military assistance to the Government of El Salvador since it is clear that some of this material is being used to further the bloodshed and destruction.

Recently, a network analyzed the administration's alternatives in dealing with El Salvador as unacceptable on the one hand—referring to the possibility of a Marxist takeover—and undesirable on the other hand—referring to the support of a government that appears to be unable—or, as some aver, unwilling—to halt the slaughter of its innocent citizens.

Certainly the choices and options of El Salvador are not easy. But, the presence of military equipment makes it unlikely that nonmilitary or diplomatic options to end the war will be explored fully and completely.

Mr. Speaker, what is now needed is a step back, a deep breath, an end to the killing so that the parties can get on with the talk of peace.

That is why I have added my name to House Joint Resolution 399, legislation introduced by my colleague from Massachusetts Representative GERRY STUDDS, which seeks to suspend military assistance to the Government of El Salvador.

House Joint Resolution 399 could provide the halt—the change in mood and tempo—needed to achieve a lasting peace in El Salvador.●

TRIBUTE TO MR. TSUROMOTO

HON. DON EDWARDS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to commend and congratulate Mr. Matsutaro Tsuromoto on the occasion of his 90th birthday. Mr. Tsuromoto will mark his 90 years on March 2, 1982, and I would like to bring attention to his accomplishments.

Mr. Tsuromoto, a native of Japan, emigrated to the United States in 1909 at the age of 16, and soon thereafter settled in the Mount Eden area of Alameda County. It was here he began his legacy of establishing an extensive sharecropping network of strawberry farmers. His farming influence was further manifested through his participation in the San Francisco-Central California Berry Growers Association, as a board member, and as president of the East Bay Farming Corp. His agricultural interests were not confined to growing strawberries, as he farmed the T. & M. Vineyard in Cortez, Calif., and maintained 100 acres of property there at the young age of 27.

As a U.S. citizen, Mr. Tsuromoto has contributed extensively to his community. In 1930, he established and was superintendent of the Alvarado Japanese Language School, always concerned that English be mastered in order to succeed in this country. He served on the Alameda Budhist Church District Council, and on the Alvarado Japanese Association Board.

Mr. Tsuromoto has had a full and rewarding 90 years. He is now the father of 4, grandfather of 11, and great-grandfather of 4. For all of his efforts, Mr. Tsuromoto recently received the Japanese governmental decoration, the Order of the Sacred Treasure, Sixth Class.

I would like to add my commendation and congratulations for all of Mr. Tsuromoto's achievements that have comprised his 90 years and to extend to him a hearty and sincere wish for a very happy birthday.●

ASSASSINATION OF THE TURKISH CONSUL GENERAL IN LOS ANGELES

HON. CHARLES WILSON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, It is with outrage and consternation that I have read the news of the assassination of the Turkish Consul General in Los Angeles on January 28, 1982, by Armenian terrorists.

This is not the first assassination to occur with respect to Turkish officials in our country. In 1973, the Turkish Consul General and the Turkish Consul were killed in Los Angeles by an Armenian American. Since 1973, 21 Turkish diplomats and/or members of their families have been killed in Western Europe and Australia. However, this marks the first incident of its kind since 1973 on American soil.

The organization claiming responsibility for the killing, as well as for the bombing of General Consul Kemal Arikan's home last fall, is the Justice Commandos of Armenian Genocide. If you recall the intercommunal warfare between the Turks and Armenians during World War I, you will remember that they resulted in the deaths of majority of the Armenians in the Ottoman Empire and resulted in 500,000 Armenians fleeing to Russia and Lebanon. They also resulted in the deaths of several hundred thousand Turks. These terrorists claim "revenge" by killing Turkish diplomats.

If we could accept their arguments, we would return to the law of the jungle and Hobbesian conditions, and our streets would become the battleground for foreign vendettas. Furthermore, these Armenian terrorists attack the diplomats of our trusted NATO ally: Turkey. Their sister group, ASALA (Armenian Secret Army for the Liberation of Armenia) is strictly Marxist and wants to attach Eastern Anatolia to Soviet Armenia.

May I again comdemn in no uncertain terms the dastardly killing of the respected Turkish diplomat and may I at this juncture insert into the RECORD the speech of His Excellency Sukru Elekdag, Ambassador of Turkey to the United States at Mr. Kemal Arikan's funeral.

REMARKS OF DR. SUKRU ELEKDAG AT THE FUNERAL OF KEMAL ARIKAN

Kemal Arikan, the Los Angeles Consul General of the Turkish Republic, on the 28th day of January, while discharging his duties, fell victim to a dastardly crime in this city.

In addition to bringing profound sorrow to Mr. Arika's family, his friends and his colleagues, his loss has brought grief to the Turkish Nation, whose valued son has fallen in its service.

Kemal Arikan, the Consul General of an allied and friendly country to the United States, his family, and his entire consular staff, had been carrying out their duties here in Los Angeles under constant threat and harassment. Kemal Arikan's residence was bombed, his office was bombed, and his life threatened repeatedly.

Kemal Arikan is the third Turkish Diplomat to have been murdered in Los Angeles. In 1973, Turkish Consul General Baydar and Deputy Consul General Demir were shot down by an Armenian. During the ensuing period, 17 Turkish diplomats or members of their immediate families were murdered in different parts of the world by Armenian terrorist organizations. In other words, the chain of killing and shedding of innocent life that was initiated here in Los Angeles, has, after claiming so many victims, come full circle.

Persons claiming to represent the Justice Commandos of the Armenian Genocide have taken responsibility for the assassination of Kemal Arikan. The same organization has also claimed responsibility for the murders of the Turkish Ambassador to the Vatican, Taha Carim, the wife of the Turkish Ambassador to Spain, Necla Kuneralp, retired Ambassador Besir Balcioglu, the Turkish Consul General in Sidney, Australia, Sarik Ariyak, and his aide Engin Sever.

The Armenian Justice Commandos have also declared that, together with ASALA, an Armenian Communist terrorist group, they have assassinated Ahmet Benler, son of the Turkish Ambassador to the Netherlands, and Yilnar Dalcan, Press Counselor in Paris.

Last week's murder of Kemal Arikan is clear evidence that Armenian terrorists have expanded their network in the United States to intensify their wanton, criminal acts here. It would be a big mistake to dissociate Kemal Arikan's murder either from all those which preceded it or from the acts of terrorism to which General Dozier and Charles Ray, the American military attaché in Paris, were subjected. These and other recent terrorist acts are related and part of a larger phenomenon, an integral plan to weaken and subvert the societies of the Free World.

ASALA, the Armenian Secret Army for the liberation of Armenia, for example, is an avowed Communist organization whose declared mission is to detach a strategically important part of Turkey and annex it to Soviet Armenia. It is clear that ASALA receives support from other, non-Armenian, terrorist organizations in Europe and the Middle East and from Marxist-Leninist entities. These groups share a common objective—the destruction of these societies in which Western ideals and liberties can flourish.

It should not be forgotten that these terrorist organizations, in many instances, attempt to appear to champion the illusory goals of various groups whenever they can use such goals and groups for their own dark purposes. The pretext for the murder of Kemal Arikan, as with the murders of his predecessors here in 1973, reportedly is to avenge a grievance which stems from misrepresented events of almost 70 years ago. The continued propagation of this distortion of history breeds vengefulness from generation to generation and plays into the hands of Armenian terrorists.

In Turkey, there are tens of thousands of people whose parents and other close relatives perished because of Armenian actions during the tragic incidents of 1913 in the midst of World War I. But, these Turks have chosen to lasso bitterness and to adopt a spirit of peaceful reconciliation. It is senseless to open the wounds of 70 years ago when the world has been striving to heal the wounds of the far more recent Second World War.

One would hope that the Armenians of goodwill will condemn terrorists who shed innocent blood in 1982 and repudiate their actions. Likewise, we should be alert to brand as counterfeit those condemnations of terrorists that in the same breath rationalize it. These are especially disturbing when they are uttered by public officials.

The reopening of ancient wounds is also senseless because the Turkish Republic, whose foundation was constructed over the ruins of the Ottoman Empire after World War I, today is a strong, robust state of 46,000,000, a valued member of the Western world, and a staunch ally of the United States. Turkey has the power, the capacity, and the will to preserve the integrity of its homeland and to protect it from the designs of its enemies.

Americans, no less than Turks, cannot tolerate terrorism. The security of the public domain is a primary requirement for a free society, whether in the cities of Europe or in cities such as Los Angeles.

Terrorism is a dreadful plague of our era and a scourge to be eradicated. If the Western world is unable to deal with it, our societies will be disabled. It behooves all civilized countries to work for an effective cooperation in the fight against international terrorism.●

JOHN D. CAEMMERER, 1928-82

HON. JOHN LeBOUTILLIER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. LEBOUTILLIER. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep sadness that I note the passing of one of the most influential leaders of my home State of New York, State Senator John D. Caemmerer.

Senator Caemmerer died on February 7, and his death is deeply mourned by his constituents, friends, legislative colleagues, and officials throughout America who have profited from his leadership in the field of transportation.

Senator Caemmerer was elected to the New York State Senate in 1966, and emerged from relatively obscure freshman status to become one of the most influential and highly-regarded leaders in the State. Senator Caemmerer was the most active and influential chairman of the Senate's Transportation Committee that the Senate has ever seen, and his imprint on New York's mass transit legislation is deep and everlasting.

"When I started to call for operating subsidies in 1968," The New York times recalled Caemmerer as saying, "I was looked on almost as a socialist in my own party."

Senator Caemmerer's prescient views on the cold, hard facts of subway operations saved the decrepit New York mass transit network from total collapse. His stands on this issue in particular, and on many others in general, reflected a strong intellectual and moral independence. Senator Caemmerer was not merely a legislator; he was a statesman. New York came first. Public welfare came before politics. Quality came before anything else. John Caemmerer was a firm believer in the age-old truism, "Good government is good politics."

New Yorkers will miss John Caemmerer's unflagging and committed fight for better transportation and better State government. His constituents will miss his heartfelt attention to their needs. American transportation policymakers will miss his invaluable input. His friends and family will miss his good cheer, compassion, and bravery.

John Caemmerer is survived by his wife, Joan, who played an active part in the Senator's public career. To her and his five children, I express my deepest sympathies.

We mourn the loss of John Caemmerer; we will never forget the lesson that he taught all of us about good government.●

HORRY HONORS VETS

HON. JOHN L. NAPIER

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. NAPIER. Mr. Speaker, America owes a great debt of gratitude to its 30 million veterans. It is also comforting to note that, in many instances, our veterans continue their leadership roles when they return to civilian life. One such individual who has shown a commitment to the betterment of his fellow human beings, and veterans especially, is Bill Davis of Galivants Ferry, S.C. Mr. Davis was recently recognized for his contributions to the improvement of his community, especially in education and agriculture.

As chairman of the Horry County Board of Education, Bill Davis has provided unequaled leadership in the quest for quality education there for more than a quarter of a century. His activism has been contagious also in agriculture, an industry in which he is highly esteemed for his successful management of one of the largest farm operations in the Sixth Congressional District. He is a national leader in the tobacco industry.

I offer the following news article for the RECORD, and Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend Bill Davis as an exemplary citizen and public servant, active in the affairs of his fellow man and a positive force for good in the Sixth Congressional District, in South Carolina, and in the Nation.

[From the Horry Independent, Nov. 17, 1981]

HORRY HONORS VETS

American Legion posts in Conway and Aynor gathered on Veterans Day Nov. 11 to pay tribute to those who have defended the nation.

In Aynor, several hundred people braved nippy winter weather to observe the Aynor American Legion Post 81's Veteran's Day Parade and celebration.

In Conway, American Legion Post 111 marked the annual observance by presenting its distinguished service award to Bill Davis of Galivants Ferry.

Despite a nippy wind and occasional showers, citizens of Aynor gathered to pay homage to American veterans. A parade of dignitaries, beauty pageant contestants and veterans wound through the streets of the town.

Later, Edward T. Pendarvis, past department commander of the American Legion, gave the keynote address.

"This country owes a debt of gratitude to its fighting men and women that can never be repaid," said Pendarvis, a Charleston real estate developer. "America's the greatest nation in the history of the world not because of our great resources, but because of the men and women who live here and who have made their indelible stamp."

Among the special guests at the Aynor celebration were Gold Star mother Stella Tyler and World War I veterans Bruce Altman and Mack Johnson.

Bill Davis, chairman of the Horry County Board of Education, received Post III's highest public service award at a banquet Wednesday night attended by several hundred legionnaires and their wives.

Capt. George Stein, UNS (Ret.), head of the Naval Junior ROTC unit at Conway High School, was the guest speaker.

Davis was cited for his long history of service to the community by Dave Altman who presented the award.

Special guests included Mr. and Mrs. Bill Leftridge, American Legion Zone 4 Commander of Florence.

General manager of Holiday enterprises, Davis has served on the local, state and national levels. A native of Aynor, he has been chairman of the board of education for 26 years. he also serves as president of the Horry County Farm Bureau.●

BUSING: A CHESS GAME WITH NO WINNERS

HON. WAYNE GRISHAM

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. GRISHAM. Mr. Speaker, last week the Senate passed the strictest antibusing language ever approved by either House of Congress. While I applaud this action by our colleagues, I am concerned that these provisions do not go far enough.

The Federal Government does not have the right to dictate where our children should and should not go to school. We must pass a constitutional amendment to guarantee the right of our children to attend their neighborhood school.

The American people are not the kind of people who will tolerate a government that fails to heed their warnings.

They are not the kind of people to sit in Washington and deny them the opportunity to decide for themselves whether or not busing their children is the answer.

They are not the kind of people who will let us sit in silence while miles away a handful of "experts" move their children around as if they were merely pawns in a master chess game—where no one ever wins.

But they are the kind of people who will refuse to elect representatives who will continue to misrepresent them.

And they are the kind of people who will refuse to relinquish that for which they have fought the hardest—to decide what is best for their children.

They are that kind of people for one reason, Mr. Speaker. It is because all their lives they have been promised that all they need do is raise up their voices so that we can hear them. They are raising their voices today, and it is time that we listened. I ask my colleagues to hear those voices and sign the discharge petition which will bring this resolution to the floor of the House.●

NEOPACIFISM, ANTIAMERICAN STYLE

HON. ROBERT H. MICHEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, one of the more disturbing and dangerous trends in international affairs in recent years has been a revival of a kind of pacifism in Europe and, to a lesser degree, in the United States. I say a kind of pacifism because it is apparent that what we might call the neo-pacifists direct their criticism at the United States much more than they do at the Soviet Union. There are, of course, elements of hate-America in this movement, mingled with a genuine fear of a nuclear war, and—to what degree no one is certain—Communist manipulation of naive and uninformed people.

Recently the Wall Street Journal published an article by John Boland which showed how one leftist think tank is trying to exploit pacifist feelings in the United States. The Institute for Policy Studies, a group that directs considerable energy and intellectual talent to criticism of the foreign policies and defense policies of the United States, while ignoring the Soviet Union, recently held a conference at which the question of anti-American pacifism was enthusiastically endorsed. John Boland gives a chilling and accurate picture of the leftist mentality at work.

We cannot afford to ignore the move toward pacifism in our country. Already the cause of an anti-American pacifism has received support from otherwise respectable sources, such as church leaders. The aim of this movement, whether it is directly stated or hidden, is the unilateral disarmanent of the United States.

This would be a disastrous calamity for the human race. We cannot simply dismiss this move to disarm our Nation and weaken the will of the West. The arguments of the anti-American pacifists have to be countered openly and effectively. I hope we are doing this in our tax-supported worldwide information programs.

At this point I wish to insert in the RECORD "Peace, War and the Institute for Policy Studies," from the Wall Street Journal, February 5, 1982:

[From the Wall Street Journal, Feb. 5, 1982]

PEACE, WAR AND THE INSTITUTE FOR POLICY STUDIES

(By John Boland)

WASHINGTON.—Among Washington think tanks, the Institute for Policy Studies sets a mean pace. It criticizes the United States as engaging in militarism, imperialism and domestic repression, assails multinational corporate power, and provides a forum and political lobbying arm for Third World liberation movements. A recent colloquium at the Institute's headquarters here brought together about a hundred persons, including fellows from IPS and its Transnational Institute affiliate, at least three congressional staff members, a U.S. coordinator for Palestinian organizations and a number of university students. The theme was "Prospects for Peace and War," and the purpose was to try out ideas for building a major U.S. disarmament movement. That cause already has enlisted dozens of other groups, from pacifist Catholic bishops to the Soviet-influenced World Peace Council.

While the campaign resembles the Vietnam-era resistance movement, its ambitions are far grander: nothing less than the Atlantic Alliance's demise, a neutral Europe and U.S. disarmament.

Soviet militarism aroused little alarm. Amid chatter about the "reaction" and "viciousness" of the Reagan administration, about capitalism's "hegemonic presumptions," Fred Halliday, a Transnational fellow, tried to explain Soviet missile deployment against Western Europe. "All the Russians have done with the SS-20 is try to catch up," said Mr. Halliday. Agitation in Europe by an "unflinching neutralist and pacifist movement," opposing the basing of NATO nuclear weapons, Mr. Halliday observed, could mark a breakthrough against East-West "bloc logic," and hasten the alliance's dissolution, "which in my view is what should happen."

"The idea that we're going to win the arms race is absurd," declared Richard Barnet, a former official in the Kennedy administration, and a founder of IPS in 1963. "The hopeful element in all that is that by turning on the rhetoric, Reagan has scared the American people and the allies more than the Russians. That's done more for the European peace movemet than anything else." Citing a poll finding that 47 percent of the American people expect a nuclear war within five years, Mr. Barnet added: "That the security policy developed by the administration is disbelieved by so much of the population suggests great possibilities for an American peace movement. The possibilities will increase as we see the economic damage of the arms race."

Marcus Raskin, co-founder of the Institute, urged a moral campaign to put nuclear weapons "outside the frame of reference of any strategic defense of the United States." Building them and aiming them at cities, he insisted, could be treated as a "war crime." American scientists could be pressed to take a "Hippocratic oath" refusing to build nuclear weapons.

One early test for that kind of thinking is the United Nations Second Special Session on Disarmament, scheduled for June 9 to July 7 in New York. A favorable public and media response to demonstration and pulpit-pounding surrounding that session will encourage IPS and other groups that the U.S. may be receptive to a peace mobilization. In coming months, the Institute plans to train speakers for campus road shows in hopes of having a disarmament bandwagan rolling by fall.

Is all this wishful thinking? Especially given Afghanistan, Poland and the public's seeming rightward drift? Skeptics within the IPS orbit argue that two major elements needed for a neutralist movement are lacking in the United States; exploitable fear of a limited nuclear conflict in one's backyard, a theme the left has been drumming home in Europe; and the nationalistic exhilaration of kicking Americans and their weapons out.

With the audience generally sympathetic, some speakers felt free to let their hair down more than they do when writing for the Nation and the New York Times oped page. There was general agreement, for example, that the disarmament message couldn't be sold on its merits all the time, but such issues as economic burdens and unemployment would help recruit support. Chester Hartman, a visiting fellow at IPS, referred to "savage" domestic budget cuts in food stamps, Medicaid, public housing and other welfare programs. By identifying the cost of C-5 transport planes and other military hardware in terms of numbers of people cut from social benefits, he suggested, the left could excite resistance. "Don't forget that this becomes a two-way argument," he counseled. "The more money we succeed in pulling to domestic uses, the less will be available for getting those C-5s built and our rapid deployment force around the world."

Issues of Soviet expansion and repression were deflected with denunciations of U.S. support of the "murderous oligarchs of El Salvador" and of plots for intervention against the struggling democrats in Nicaragua. Declared Fred Halliday: "The hypocrisy of the Reagan government on Poland is just beyond belief," because while assailing repression there the U.S. has been aiding El Salvador, Pakistan, the Sudan and other repressive right-wing regimes. "The actual level of repression is less" in Poland, according to Mr. Halliday, than in "20 or 30" of the U.S. and Britain's allies. A bit later, IPS fellow Michael Moffitt referred in passing to Third World countries that are "more democratic in the burgeois sense"—as opposed to those that have been liberated.

One schism disrupted things. Fred Halliday announced that if Western Europe had rejected U.S. Pershing II missiles in return for the Polish government's granting Solidarity a role, Poland wouldn't be under martial law. The suggestion of NATO complicity in Poland evoked an outburst from one of left journalism's elders, I. F. Stone. Condemning the Soviet Union's sentencing of members of the Helsinki watchdog committee, Stone cried: "Why did they have to send these few brave people to Siberia? What were they so afraid of? . . . The rigidity of this regime is a disgrace. They've destroyed socialism morally." On Poland, he snapped: "You can't blame it on Reagan. It's a big event. . . . These cliches are not good enough for reaching our fellow citizens and urging caution."

Fred Halliday was wounded. "It's not cliche," he said. "It's a central theme of the European peace movement—shared responsbility."

Mr. Stone wasn't present for later sessions, so he missed a ringing apology for Soviet expansion by Saul Landau, a TNI fellow recently returned from conferring with Sandinista officials in Nicaragua. Said Mr. Landau: "Anti-Sovietism is the key to the [Cold War] ideology. It's one of the great divisors within the progessive movement, and we have to deal with it. . . . The Soviet Union has been the one insurance policy of successful [Third World] revloutions."

Mr. Landau, who a few years ago told a Cuban friend that he planned to dedicate himself to "making propaganda for American socialism," saw hope for advance of the liberation cause. The language of Catholic priests in denouncing economic injustice and the language of Marxist-Leninist guerrillas are identical, Mr. Landau observed.●

CARDINAL DEDICATES NEW ST. JOACHIM'S CHURCH

HON. JOSEPH F. SMITH

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. SMITH of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute to the parishioners of St. Joachim's Church, which is located in my district. The history of this church, which stretches over 100 years, is one of service to the community and concern for the needy people of the area.

Tragedy struck this church in 1979 when fire destroyed the church building. On December 13, a Mass of Dedication was celebrated for their new edifice. For this occasion, the Catholic Standard and Times published the following article, which pays tribute to the clergy who have served there and the people who have worshipped there:

[From the Catholic Standard and Times, Dec. 10, 1981]

CARDINAL DEDICATES NEW ST. JOACHIM'S CHURCH

Cardinal Krol will be the principal celebrant of a Mass of Dedication this Sunday, Dec. 13, at 3 p.m. when the new St. Joachim's Church in the Frankford section of Philadelphia is formally opened. The Cardinal will be assisted by 14 concelebrants, and he will also take part in a formal procession into the new church.

(St. Joachim's was destroyed by fire on June 8, 1979.)

The dedication of the new building is the latest chapter in the long history of St. Joachim's; the parish celebrated its 100th anniversary in June of 1974. Here are excerpts from the parish history booklet published when the parish celebrated its 100th birthday.

June 28, 1874, was another torrid day in Frankford. The thermometer was inching upward (it would eventually reach 89 degrees) and beads of moisture formed on the brows of the large crowd of people gathered on Pine St. On the outer edges of the crowd, the horses stood passively, their work half over. They had carried some important guests to the ceremony.

For the members of St. Joachim's Church, the day marked both an end and a beginning. The cleared ground on which they were standing once supported their old church, the first St. Joachim's built in 1845. It had been only nine years ago that the tall steeple had finally been fixed onto that first building at a cost of $8,000. But the parish soon outgrew those first modest beginnings.

Now, Archbishop James Frederic Wood was here on Pine St. (later to become Church St.) laying the cornerstone for the new edifice, a $90,000 gothic structure which would be regarded in an 1886 newspaper article as "one of the finest in the state and a lasting monument to the liberality of pious Catholics."

An intensive 1974 search for the cornerstone laid that day more than 100 years ago has failed to turn up the precious stone, which was freshly cut and polished that day by Bishop William O'Hara of Scranton, who preached to the large crowd at the ceremony.

Father Nicholas J. Walsh, pastor of St. Joachim's a century ago, wasn't thinking about 1974 when he watched the cement being troweled on the cornerstone that warm summer day. He had been pastor for two years and early in his tenure had gathered together his congregation to plan a new building. The old church had been condemned as unsafe and unfit for worship.

The Catholics in the Northeast, for whom St. Joachim's served as the only accessible church, needed a new building. Needs had changed. In 1845, the first church had a population of about 100 people, coming from Fox Chase, Jenkintown, Bustleton, Holmesburg and Tacony. Now there were thousands of worshipping Catholics.

Father Walsh, who came to St. Joachim's from Pottsville in 1872, began by building a temporary chapel on the site later occupied by St. Joachim's School. The temporary church built, the last Mass was said Sept. 15, 1873, in the old church, at one of the side altars because the main altar had already been removed. Down came the old church.

Before the new St. Joachim's was completed, Father Walsh was gone, transferred to St. Charles Borromeo, Philadelphia, in 1877. His work was carried on by the new pastor, Father John P. Byrne, who mixed patience and enthusiasm as the work and the financing of the new structure dragged on.

But finally, the last stone was fitted into place and the final polished walnut pew installed. The new St. Joachim's was dedicated on Oct. 17, 1880, with a sermon by Father B. A. Maguire, S.J., one of the most celebrated orators of his time. Pope Leo XIII sent his blessing and congratulations and Archbishop Wood officiated.

The school was completed in 1885 and cost at least $25,000. It has a capacity of 1,200 students.

As the population of Philadelphia's Catholics grew, fed by the large influx of immigrants, many of them Irish and German, the newly-erected Catholic Church in Frankford found its parish list swelling. By 1886, St. Joachim's had nearly 4,000 worshippers and the outlying districts it once served were gradually obtaining their own churches.

St. Joachim's was a jewel in the quaint, row-home community of Frankford. On one side of the new church building stood the rectory, a patchwork of buildings from the 1850s and 1870s. On the other side, the convent for the Sisters, Servants of the Immaculate Heart of Mary, who were in care of the school. The older convent had been opened in 1866, at an expense of over $12,000.

To the rear of the new church was the old cemetery, which preceded the Catholic possession of the land and provided a note of eternity for the parishioners who filed into the Lord's House. The graveyard had been purchased by the church in 1861 and it was in this cemetery that Father John P. Byrne, who had watched a parish mature in its new facilities, was laid to rest after a lengthy illness. He died Aug. 29, 1891.

One month later, on Sept. 24, 1891, there came to St Joachim's a tall, portly priest with an arisocratic air, a man who was to dominate the scene at St. Joachim's Church for the next 34 years—Father Francis P. Fitzmaurice.

Under Father Fitzmaurice, St. Joachim's thrived. By 1897, the church boundaries had shrunk from the original far-reaching limits to those mentioned in a church calendar of that year: "South to Venango St. north to Dark Run Lane and east to Frankford Creek."

Father Fitzmaurice added more and more refinements, including an imposing bell tower, constructed by a local contractor, James J. Murphy.

In 1925, at the age of 77, Father Fitzmaurice died. In obedience to the pastor's last request, his body was buried in the cemetery behind the church, without ceremony.

Soon afterward, the parishioners contributed toward a $2,145 memorial to the dead pastor. A moving plaque, entitled "An Appreciation," noted:

"He was with us so long that, like growing children in thinking of their parents, we never entertained the thought of his ceasing to be."

And finally, the memorial said: "Our love for him was reverence and our reverance for him was love. He is gone. His memory shall ever be with us. In the Firmament of our lives as a star of the first magnitude, his worth shall always shine."

St. Joachim's was driven through the next quarter of a century, through the Great Depression and World War II, by a dynamic priest with the build of a jockey and the tenacity of a Crusader—Father John B. Dever, a short, wiry man who managed tall feats in this third and final pastorate.

Father Dever had been born in Stoughton, Mass., received his priestly training in St. Charles Borromeo Seminary at Overbrook.

Succeeding Father Dever was Father Thomas A. McNally, a Kensington native who had attended St. Charles Seminary and was ordained in 1915.

His service to St. Joachim's was short, but full. It was Father McNally who began the rebuilding of the rectory at Church and Griscom Sts. He died on Dec. 2, 1952, before the work on the priests' house was finished.

Within a short time, Father James A. Donnelly, a West Philadelphia native and also a graduate of St. Charles Seminary, was named pastor of St. Joachim's.

Father Donnelly's return as pastor to St. Joachim's was a happy note, but it lasted only a short time. He died July 17, 1954, after a three-week illness. He was 59 years old.

In its next pastor, St. Joachim's was blessed with a priest whose piety and concern for the total church community earned him an undying respect and devotion. Father Francis A. Fagan, a man from Bethlehem, Pa., had been ordained a priest in 1924 by Dennis Cardinal Dougherty.

In June of 1971, St. Joachim's welcomed its new pastor, Father William L. Cotterall, a West Philadelphia native who attended St. Charles Seminary and was ordained June 7, 1941.

Father Fagan remained as pastor emeritus, providing a gentle counsel and comfort to the parish until he died on Oct. 13, 1972.

On June 29, 1978, the Oblates of St. Francis de Sales were given the responsibility of administering to the needs of the parishioners of St. Joachim's. Father Anthony F. Silvestri, O.S.F.S., was appointed pastor. His assistants were Father John J. Bradunas, O.S.F.S., and Father Francis J. McGuire, O.S.F.S.●

HUGHES' CRIME BILL CAN MAKE A DIFFERENCE

HON. RON de LUGO

OF THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. DE LUGO. Mr. Speaker, this week, our colleagues will have the opportunity to support a bill that can significantly reduce the rate of crime in each of our communities. H.R. 4481, the Justice Assistance Act of 1981, offers this Congress its best chance to make a difference in reversing the steadily increasing rate of crime that many of us so often lament, yet seldom do anything about.

This legislation, which we have our colleague, BILL HUGHES, to thank for, would provide our State and local governments with $170 million in fiscal years 1982 and 1983 to combat crime. These funds will not be used to supply local police departments with exotic, expensive, and often unneeded equipment. It will not fund esoteric psychological studies of lefthanded pickpockets. It will give your community funds for proven programs that show results in reducing crime.

The bill will limit the use of these grants to the following categories:

Community anticrime programs;

Disruption of commerce in stolen goods and property;

Arson;

White collar crime, organized crime, and public corruption;

Career criminal and witness/victim programs; and

Several other areas that directly impact on reducing crime.

I know, from speaking with law enforcement officials in my own area—the U.S. Virgin Islands—that this bill would be a tremendous help in reducing crime. I believe that if my colleagues will check with their local police officials and sheriffs that they would find as widespread support for this bill as I did.●

VOLUNTARY HELP FOR 10-YEAR-OLD EXCEEDS EXPECTATIONS

HON. JOSEPH M. McDADE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. McDADE. Mr. Speaker, the capacity of the American people to volunteer to help individuals in need is again demonstrated by an event in Scranton, Pa., involving Bobby, a bright and enthusiastic 10-year-old who is a victim of cerebral palsy.

The story of Bobby and his new foster parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Walsh, has been told in a series of articles by Joseph X. Flannery, special writer for the Scranton Times, who has commented:

My instinct when I approach almost any story is to be a skeptic. Accept little on faith is my usual journalistic creed. However, I have to admit that all my cynicism dissolved recently when I met Joseph and Catherine Walsh and heard their appeal for help.

The people, organizations, and businesses of Scranton have set an example in responding voluntarily to help a member of the community, and their actions warrant wide attention. Accordingly, I ask that the following accounts from the January 10, 17, and 21 editions of the Scranton Times be printed in the RECORD at this point.

[From the Scranton Times, Jan. 10, 1982]

COUPLE WITH GROWN FAMILY TO ADOPT HANDICAPPED BOY

(By Joseph X. Flannery)

Joseph M. and Catherine Walsh have raised their family of four children, and like most grandparents their age could begin looking forward to taking things a little easier for the rest of their lives.

Instead, they are taking on the permanent job of raising a 10-year-old child who cannot talk, walk or use his hands.

Love is the key element of this story now unfolding at the modest Walsh home at rear 1320 Wyoming Ave. Unless one understands that love, one cannot comprehend why the Walshes, both of whom are 51, would want to adopt Bobby, a quadriplegic totally dependent upon others for his every need.

Love is also the reason why Mrs. Walsh has begun a campaign to raise the $5,000 needed to buy Bobby a sophisticated electronic device that would enable him to dramatically expand his already surprising ability to communicate with others.

The Walshes figure the key to a productive life for Bobby is an education. But without communication skills, his education would be limited.

Bobby, despite his physical handicaps, is not mentally retarded in any way. A happy and amazingly well-adjusted child, he used a very fundamental system of communicating to learn to read and do arithmetic at about a third-grade level.

He also has developed some physical skills that have amazed persons who had said the youth would be immobile the rest of his life. From a prone position, he can rise to a kneeling position—a feat that he loves to demonstrate for visitors. Similarly, he has developed some hand and arm control, too, although not enough to change his legal classification as a quadriplegic.

The Walshes currently are Bobby's foster parents and they hope to formalize his adoption by March.

The couple points out the youngster has reached the limits of his education under his present system of communicating. With the new device, however, they say he might some day go on to college.

"This new machine could give Bobby a chance to develop the normal mental abilities God gave him," said Mrs. Walsh. "The alternative is to frustrate him forever," she added.

The machine the Walshes are planning to buy is one of 10 devices now being manufactured by Prentke Romich Co., a firm in Shreve, Ohio, that has a division specializing in equipment for handicapped persons. Called "Express 3," it is an updated version of a communications machine for the handicapped that the company has been producing for years.

Bobby, a victim of cerebral palsy from birth, was an infant in a foundling home when the Walsh family first saw him. One of the Walsh children, Kathy, was a volunteer worker at the home and she fell in love with the tiny tot. In time, she started taking him home for weekends—a step that caused her love affair with Bobby to spread to her parents and three brothers. From that point on, Bobby has been part of their family life.

The child spent a number of years in institutions, with the Walshes being his informal "foster family" that took him into their home for weekends, holidays and other occasions. Finally, 16 months ago, the Walsh couple became the legal foster parents.

"Soon he will be ours," Mrs. Walsh said as Bobby—totally aware of all conversation around him—jumped up and down from his kneeling position to express his joy over the prospect.

Among the institutions Bobby has stayed at is the Home of the Merciful Saviour for Crippled Children in Philadelphia. It was there that he was taught how to communicate through a system of numbers, letters and words that appear on a large wooden tray attached to his wheelchair.

However, the Walshes and those working on his education at the Northeast Educational Intermediate Unit orthopedic classroom at the Easter Seal Building on Scranton-Carbondale Highway, Blakely, feel that he has reached the limits of learning under his present communication system and that the new machine, "Express 3," holds the key to his future progress.

Thus, Mrs. Walsh is busy these days writing letters to persons and organizations that she thinks might be willing to contribute money to a "Bobby Fund" to buy the machine that would enable the child—with the movement of his head—to cause letters, numbers, words and even sentences to be printed and vocalized through a built-in tape recorder.

With this machine, a handicapped person can learn to communicate sufficiently to absorb as much knowledge as his intelligence will permit.

"We don't know how far Bobby could progress, but we want him to have the chance," said Mrs. Walsh. For that reason, she said, she is forgetting her pride and begging people to help.

The Walshes cannot do it themselves. They are a family of modest means and barely get by on Mr. Walsh's job at McKinney Manufacturing Co.

"But I'm going to get this money for Bobby if I have to go to the president of the United States," Mrs. Walsh said.

[From the Scranton Times, Jan. 17, 1982]

CARING STUDENT COLLECTS $617 FOR BOBBY FUND

(By Joseph X. Flannery)

Dave Hollander, the 19-year-old college student who launched a one-person campaign last week to raise money for the Bobby Fund, concluded his efforts with a total of $617 collected.

Hollander solicited the money to help Joseph M. and Catherine Walsh, rear 1320 Wyoming Ave., buy a special electronic machine that they need to enable their foster child, Bobby, 10, to communciate.

Bobby, a victim of cerebral palsy, cannot speak, walk or talk, but the Walshes are adopting him and want to buy the $5,000 machine that will enable him to "talk" through movements of his head that result in words and sentences to be printed and verbalized.

Hollander, a freshman at Keystone Junior College, read about Bobby in The Sunday Times and decided to start the collection. Without being asked, he started his one-person campaign and collected the $617, mainly from businesses in the downtown area.

On his final day of collecting, Hollander also toured City Hall with a letter of introduction from Mayor James Barrett McNulty. On that foray, he picked up $48.

In addition to the cash that Hollander collected, he said that about 25 persons also pledged that they would send donations either to the Walshes or to the Scranton Kiwanis Club, the organization which has undertaken to sponsor the formal fund drive.

Donations to that organization can be sent in care of the Scranton Chamber of Commerce Building, where the Kiwanis office is located.

[From the Scranton Times, Jan. 21, 1982]

FUND CONTINUES TO GROW TO MEET BOBBY'S FUTURE NEEDS

(By Joseph X. Flannery)

During the past two weeks, Catherine Walsh has cried a lot.

The 51-year-old grandmother has shed happy tears, however, because it seems every day brings her more good news.

Mrs. Walsh and her husband, Joseph M., of rear 1320 Wyoming Ave., are the foster parents of 10-year-old Bobby, a cerebral palsy victim who cannot talk, walk or use his hands.

Two weeks ago today, Mrs. Walsh said she was "scared to death" because she and her husband had made a down-payment on a $5,000 machine that Bobby needed to increase his communicating skills. An anonymous donor had given them $500 to order the machine, but they didn't have the slightest idea where they would get the rest to pay for it when it arrives in March.

It was then that The Sunday Times told of the couple's plans to legally adopt Bobby, making him their lifetime responsibility, and of their problem of getting money to buy the expensive electronic device that the child needs for his future education and social development.

The rest is a matter of history. In two weeks, over $10,000 was raised by many persons for the Bobby Fund and donations still are coming into the Walsh home at the rate of about $200 a day.

This is not "extra" money, however. William Nellis, who is Scranton Kiwanis Club charity chairman and head of its Bobby Fund, has agreed that the first $5,000 in donations will be used to buy Bobby's communications machine. Then the balance will be put in trust to be used in later years for Bobby's needs.

Over the past two weeks, the Walshes have received hundreds of notes and letters with donations. However, one that was received at their home on Friday with a $50 donation really touched the emotions of Mrs. Walsh and caused her to shed a few more tears of happiness.

It was from a woman that Mrs. Walsh assumes would not want her name published. But she said that the thoughts in it were "so beautiful" that she wanted to share them with the public.

The writer described herself as a sister of a "special person" who also is named Bobby and who has suffered from a neurological disease that has baffled medical science for most of his 23 years. Now, the letter adds, he is starting to show some improvement.

The letter continued: "God is answering our many prayers. Now this contribution is my simple way of saying thanks. I give it in Jesus' name.

"I believe that while these 'special children' appear very unfortunate to us who are healthy, they do have a special mission to carry out. They are like angels on earth, touching the lives of many persons.

"I will pray for your Bobby and for his loved ones. God bless you."

Mrs. Walsh said that only persons who are close to handicapped persons and love them dearly can relate to each other the way the letter writer expressed her thoughts.

"That's exactly how we feel about our Bobby," she said, adding: "He brings joy into every life he touches."

Donations for the Bobby Fund are being received at the Walsh home in care of the Scranton Kiwanis Club at the Scranton Chamber of Commerce Building.

The largest donations to the fund to date were $2,400 from the workers and management of McKinney Manfacturing Co. where Mr. Walsh is employed; $1,500 from Scranton Kiwanis Club and $500 each from local businessman Ralph Lomma and from an annonymous donor. In addition, Keystone Junior College student Dave Hollander took up a collection among businessmen that netted over $600; Bell Telephone Co. employees raised $500 with luncheon and bake sale and county government workers took up a collection that totaled $500.

Mrs. Walsh also reported that the Dunmore Women's Club held an auction at a meeting last week and raised $65, with the money being sent by Mary Hiller, and the Greater Green Ridge Neighbors, represented by Brian Quinn, sent $50. She also reported that La Festa Italiana, the organization which holds a festival every year at the Couthouse Square, has included the Bobby Fund in a group of 11 charities which have been earmarked for donations from the proceeds of last fall's festival.

Mrs. Walsh said that all money that she is receiving is being turned over immediately to Nellis, the Scranton postmaster who deposits it in the special bank account that has already been set up in Bobby's name. "Donors should know that every cent that is given for our Bobby will be used to meet his special needs," she added.●

A SALUTE TO MY FRIEND, DICK BOLLING

HON. ROBERT McCLORY

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 28, 1982

● Mr. McCLORY. Mr. Speaker, the late President John F. Kennedy, writing of Senate Republican Leader Robert A. Taft, said, "Bob Taft never became President of the United States. Therein lies his personal tragedy, and therein lies his national greatness." As a Republican Member commenting on the career of my Democratic friend, the gentleman from Missouri, I will take the liberty to say, "RICHARD BOLLING never became Speaker of the House. It might be for him a personal disappointment, but it cannot diminish the impact he has had on his party and on this House."

Only two Members of the 97th Congress (the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. WHITTEN, and my good friend from Illinois, Mr. PRICE), have served here longer than RICHARD BOLLING's 17 terms. Early in this career, he was a protege of Sam Rayburn, learning from that master of the House the nuances of leadership and legislative procedure. Named to the Rules Committee in 1955, Bolling became an advocate of reform and was one of the leaders in the 1961 effort to enlarge the membership of the Rules Committee to make it a more hospitable forum for civil rights and social legislation.

As a student of the House and author of two acclaimed studies of the Congress, RICHARD BOLLING helped to set the agenda for the era of legislative reform which so dominated our attention during the 1970's. As chairman of the Select Committee on Committees in the 93rd Congress, he has successful in bringing about substantial modernization of our committee system. He played a key role from his post of the House Rules Committee in achieving the agreement necessary to gain passage of the Congressional Budget Act.

An advocate of strong party leadership in Congress, BOLLING, as chairman of the Rules Committee, has sought to make that panel responsive to the needs of his party. Although we have often disagreed over partisan and policy issues, one can only have respect and admiration for DICK BOLLING's zeal and dedication.

Twice in his career RICHARD BOLLING has sought unsuccessfully to enter the ranks of the Democratic floor leadership. Five years ago, he was a candidate for the post of Democractic majority leader. He was defeated, but only after the closest congressional leadership election for either party in this century. That was surely a great disappointment to RICHARD BOLLING; but, as he completes his distinguished congressonal career, RICHARD BOLLING should take pride in the fact that the House of Representatives has been changed decidedly because of his work and that it will continue to bear his mark far into the future. It has been a pleasure and an honor to serve with him in the House these 20 years.●

ADDITIONAL FUNDS NEEDED TO CONTINUE AID TO UNEMPLOYED

HON. RON de LUGO

OF THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. DE LUGO. Mr. Speaker, in the very near future this House will consider House Joint Resolution 391, emergency legislation to provide $2.3 billion in supplemental appropriations to aid the States and territories in continuing unemployment compensation benefits. With over 9 percent of our Nation's workforce unemployed, it should come as no surprise to my colleagues that the funds we provided last summer for this purpose under Gramm-Latta II, have run out.

This legislation would provide:

$1.9 billion to permit the Treasury to make advances to the unemployment trust fund to provide states with resources to pay extended benefits to unemployed workers;

$133 million for grants to states to cover higher costs of processing and paying an increased number of unemployment insurance claims; and $210 million to restore financing for employment security agencies to provide the staff needed to help the unemployed find jobs and administer the requirement that unemployment compensation recipients accept suitable jobs when they are offered.

In my own district, the U.S. Virgin Islands, we have had an unusually high level of unemployment, approaching seven percent of the workforce. Fortunately, our local Department of Labor has sufficient funds at this time to continue its services. However, should our economy continue its present decline we may not always be in such an enviable position.

I urge my colleagues to support this vital and urgently needed legislation.●

REAGAN'S PROPOSED FAMILY PLANNING REGULATIONS

HON. TED WEISS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, the administration's proposal to require parental notification when teenagers are provided with prescription birth control devices would thrust government into an area of personal privacy where it does not belong. The regulations would also place in needless jeopardy the physical and mental health of our Nation's young people and impose undue stress on their relationships with their families.

I believe that this is another example of the administration's eagerness to legislate morality, to interfere with personal decisions of individuals, and to inject government into the sensitive and private arena of family life. Instead of removing government from the lives of our citizens and protecting individual rights, the administration seems determined to tell Americans just how they must live their lives. This proposed regulation would use, and abuse, government authority to require codes of personal conduct on all young people and their families, without respect for their individual circumstances and beliefs.

Proposals for mandatory parental notification when teenagers use contraceptives have been rejected by the Congress for good reason. Teenage sexual activity and family planning are sensitive issues that are better handled on an individual basis, without rigid rules. Meaningful family communication and strong family relationships can only be harmed by the administration's prescriptions, however well intended. Because of the delicate nature of this issue, Congress carefully amended title X of the Public Health Service Act last year to "encourage family participation" to the "greatest extent possible". The drafters of this proposed regulation appear to have ignored congressional intent.

The proposed rule will not discourage sexual activity, it will only discourage responsible planning of that activity. It will result in more unintended teenage pregnancies and more abortions. Tragedy is the certain conclusion.

Teenage pregnancy is already an epidemic in this country. A staggering 1.2 million teenagers become pregnant each year, three quarters of them unintentionally. For most, pregnancy at an early age brings nothing but hardship and heartache. The harsh reality of teenage pregnancy often includes limited employment and educational opportunities, hasty and short-lived marriages, welfare dependence, and great health risks. There is no justification for condemning more young people to face this unpromising future.

Family planning activities funded under title X have been tremendously successful in helping to reduce pregnancy rates among sexually active teenagers. In 1979 alone, more than 400,000 unintended pregnancies were averted through the national family planning program. Participation in the program as currently structured is high. However, a recent survey revealed that 25 percent of teenagers currently attending family planning clinics would stop coming if their parents were to be notified. But only 2 percent of these young adults say they will forgo sexual activity.

In our country, the availability of family planning services has improved the quality of human life, strengthened family relationships, and promoted personal responsibility and choice. Let us not deny these services and their valuable benefits to our youth by implementing this ill-conceived regulation.

Last Friday's New York Times printed an editorial on the proposed regulation. I would commend it to the attention of my colleagues.

SQUEALING ON TEENAGERS

Sex sells jeans, perfume and cars. Conversely, jeans, perfume and cars sell sex. The audience at a raunchy revue is not applauding the costumes, nor do wine and cheese attract the customers to the kind of party that sells "marital aids" instead of Tupperware. The pursuit of a "good sex life" is sanctioned not only by millions of Americans but by the I.R.S., which allows a tax deduction for sex counseling. This is life in the United States.

Now imagine a place in which no one under 18 has ever seen television, movies, newspapers or magazines . . . in which all parents are married, in perpetuity and in bliss . . in which sexual feelings emerge simultaneously with the taking of wedding vows. This is not life in the United States. Yet much of the nation prefers to treat children as if it were.

The need for that pretense is understandable. Most parents hope their children will delay sexual activity until maturity; many are shattered when they discover otherwise. But 350,000 teen-agers will bear children out of wedlock in 1982. Several hundred thousand others will undergo abortions. Some of these are poor, others affluent; all have been raised in a time of sexual revolution.

Since there is no reason to think this revolution will ever be wholly reversed, there is a national responsibility to insure that it does not consume children and adolescents.

Ideally, teen-agers who want contraceptive advice will feel free to talk to their parents first. But often such discussion is painful, indeed impossible. Family planning services like Planned Parenthood provide a neutral ground in which to talk, and to listen. In 1979, the Alan Guttmacher Institute estimates, such services averted some 400,000 unintended teen-age pregnancies. They might have averted more if their clients had come sooner; most had been sexually active for a year.

Now the Reagan Administration is considering a law to force subsidized family planning agencies to notify the parents whenever teen-agers under 18 seek contraceptive drugs and devices. Parents, they say, should be informed about prescriptions that affect their children's health.

There is no contraceptive, however, that affects an adolescent's health as adversely as pregnancy. Teen-agers are five times as apt to die of pregnancy-related causes as from using the pill. (They are also at the least risk of any age group from the pill.) Nor is there anything more likely to drive teen-agers away from a family-planning agency than the knowledge that it is required to squeal on them.

Most agencies do in fact encourage youngsters to tell their families about the clinic visits, and a majority of the teen-agers do so. But a recent study by the Guttmacher Institute found that a fourth of them would stop applying for prescription contraceptives if their parents had to be notified. Only 2 percent said they would stop sexual activity.

Thoughtful parents have to be saddened by the precocity of adolescent sexual behavior. But what is that sadness compared with the tragedy of a child propelled to childbirth or abortion by Government interference in the counseling program? Weigh these alternatives and see why the best, most loving action a parent can take is to tell the Government to butt out.●

HOLD THE LINE ON COAL R. & D. CUTS

HON. NICK JOE RAHALL II

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, in President Reagan's proposed fiscal year 1983 budget for the fossil energy research and development program, only $106.9 million is being allocated with $91 million of this sum for coal technology development. Last year, the Congress appropriated $416.9 million for fossil energy research and development programs, which was already a drastic reduction from fiscal year 1981's level of $1.134 billion.

The reason given for these reductions is that the administration intends to support only long-term, high-risk technology activities. Fitting this description appears to be nuclear technologies. The President's proposed budget for nuclear fission and nuclear fusion accounts for 87 percent of the total energy technology budget with $1.4 billion slated for fiscal year 1983.

Last year, when this administration's favoritism toward nuclear energy became apparent, I stated that synthetic fuels development fit into the President's definition of the Federal Government's role in energy research and development. Judging from the state of the synthetic fuels industry today, the private sector certainly does not seem capable of developing these technologies without Federal support. With the decline of this industry, America is losing another opportunity to reduce its dependency on foreign oil.

But surely, it would seem the administration would recognize the importance of basic coal research and development. In consideration of the abundant reserves of coal with which this country is blessed, it would seem prudent to make every effort to facilitate technologies to burn it in the cleanest way possible. While many in the private sector engage in such research, they can never bring new technologies to the commercial stage because the Federal Government is constantly changing the rules of the game.

It takes about a 10-year payback period before an investment in energy research and development will be profitable. Yet, the Clean Air Act can change every 4 years or so and under these circumstances, the private sector is never certain which technology will be required. For example, when the 1977 Clean Air Act amendments were enacted, they favored rigid discharge electrodes and fabric filters, eliminating the previous use of weighted wire precipitators. Then, in 1979, another technology was eliminated when EPA determined that spray dryers should be used to control sulfur dioxide emissions, making this technology more competitive than wet scrubbers. Thus, the Federal Government actually discourages private investment in coal research and development and therefore, must take up the slack.

One impact of reduced coal technology funding I would like to bring to my colleagues' attention concerns university programs. In a recent letter sent to me by Dr. Dayne Aldridge, director of West Virginia University's Energy Research Center, he stated that—

If all DOE funding were eliminated from our fiscal year 1981 effort, support would be almost halved. Most affected would be projects in fluidized bed combustion, oil and gas and coal characterization. I estimate that 140 less graduate students would have been supported. This translates to 50 to 75 less masters and doctoral graduates per year in areas critical to coal.

Following is a table sent to me by Dr. Aldridge showing the effect of DOE funding on West Virginia University's energy research programs:

EFFECT OF DOE FUNDING ON WVU ENERGY RESEARCH PROGRAM—BASED ON ACTIVITY DURING FISCAL YEAR 1981

Area	Funding source
	State	State other [1]	Federal	DOE [2]	Industry	Total
Coal conversion and utilization	$208,289	$86,437	$2,795,335	$2,616,995	$580,089	$3,670,150
Coal mining and processing	293,919	6,607	2,489,333	.....	148,544	2,938,403
Petroleum and natural gas	1,630	204,195	1,603,638	1,603,638	10,110	1,819,573
Basic research	210,712	.....	1,392,105	896,324	44,000	1,646,817
Alternative energy sources, conservation and education	23,690	771,338	504,477	465,345	153,696	1,453,201
Other	34,259	.....	979,100	.....	5,000	1,018,359
Energy-related health research	3,565	.....	904,991	470,807	.....	908,556
Reclamation and pollution	73,830	19,552	501,043	267,042	145,088	739,513
Policy, economic and social issues	54,196	33,487	111,999	23,924	85,000	284,682
Energy research and development	106,939	.....	.....	.....	.....	106,939
Administration	69,325	.....	.....	.....	.....	69,325
Energy transportation and transmission	34,427	.....	.....	.....	24,145	58,572
Total	1,114,781	[1] 1,121,616	11,282,021	6,344,075	1,195,672	14,714,090

[1] Most of these funds come from DOE but "pass through" a State agency such as the fuel and energy office.
[2] Figures are a portion of "Federal"—not part of total.

MAJ. GEN. ROLAND DEL MAR

HON. BALTASAR CORRADA

OF PUERTO RICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. CORRADA. Mr. Speaker, it is with a sense of deep loss that I announce to my esteemed colleagues the death, in Washington, D.C. at the age of 73 of Maj. Gen. Roland Haddaway del Mar, U.S. Army, retired, a native of Attica, Ind., brought-up in Winnetka, Ill., who was much loved, admired, and respected by the Puerto Rican community.

He served in the Pacific during World War II and later in the occupation of Japan.

He also served in Korea, Germany, Italy, and Puerto Rico. He retired in 1966 and received the Distinguished Service Medal, the Legion of Merit, and the Bronze Star during his military career.

I had the privilege of meeting this soldier and statesman briefly here in Washington some time ago. He was undoubtedly a man of many virtues—not the least of which was his innate ability to make friends.

He came to Puerto Rico in May 1961 as Commander of the Antilles Command, U.S. Army, Caribbean, and stayed until April 1963. During that short time he established excellent relations with the local community.

One of his first actions was to learn Spanish, which he spoke fluently. He frequently visited remote parts of the island, not only for official inspection missions, but also for personal enjoyment and for speaking engagements before different military and civilian groups.

During his tour of duty in the Antilles he was named "Commonwealth Boss of the Year" by the Puerto Rican Secretaries Association; and "Man of the Year" by the Public Relations Society of Puerto Rico, for his outstanding achievements in that field. He was also awarded the Puerto Rico National Guard Distinguished Service Medal in recognition of his constant support of the PRARNG. Finally, it was also while commanding the Headquarters Antilles Command—with the rank of brigadier general—that he received his promotion to major general in August 1962.

As a result of this promotion he was reassigned to Fort McNair, in Washington, D.C., as the Director of the Inter American Defense College.

In the Nation's Capital, General del Mar kept in close contact with the Puerto Rican social, cultural, and civic groups, never missing the occasion to attend their many activities. Both the General and Mrs. (Elizabeth) del Mar became immensely popular and well loved in those circles. As a philanthropist, he never forgot Puerto Rico. Through the Del Mar Foundation, left by his father the late Charles del Mar, every year at Christmas time the General sent donations to different charitable and humanitarian groups on the Island.

This man, who learned to enjoy the best of two cultures, was buried at Arlington National Cemetery. He is survived by his wife Elizabeth, his daughter Maureen Braddock, of Alexandria, and a grandson.●

TRIBUTE TO LOIS GRAFF

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, in order to be selected to the all-Ohio School Board, an individual must have proved outstanding service and dedication to the schools and youth of our State. Lois M. Graff, a mother of three as well as a professor at Baldwin-Wallace College, is such a person. Recently it was announced that she will represent the northeast Ohio region.

Twice President of the Parma School Board in the last 11 years, Mrs. Graff's accomplishments also include being a certified public accountant and providing invaluable expertise in developing the first 5-year financial and educational plans of the board.

I salute the Ohio School Board for picking a woman as deserving as Mrs. Graff for this honor.●

RIGHT TO CHOOSE AN ABORTION

HON. PATRICIA SCHROEDER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, Mrs. William Hart from Elk Mountain, Wyo., sent me a speech her youngest daughter, Heidi, age 17, gave in a competition in Wyoming.

It is a speech advocating women's right to choose an abortion.

I urge my colleagues to read it. It is young women like Heidi Hart that will have to bear the consequences on any restrictions of the availability of abortions. If legislation is passed that makes abortions illegal, then Heidi and her generation will have to live out the nightmare of back alley abortions that today they only read about in stories of "way back when."

PRO-ABORTION

"I cannot understand the new view that life begins at conception. If this is true, * * * why is it not customary to hold religious rites for a dead fetus after a miscarriage? Why only after birth? It is obviously a concept trumped up to add righteous clout to the arguments of anti-abortionists."

This is the view held by Katherine Hepburn and me. I feel abortion should remain legal in all aspects, and especially those cases involving rape, possible death of the woman, teen-age pregnancies and incest.

Imagine this: A woman walking home is attacked and raped. Because of this violation of her body, she is impregnated. She has probably also been mentally harmed by this experience. Why should she be harmed more, possibly irrevocably, by having to carry this child given to her by a criminal who took her by force? Wouldn't it be better to save this woman's sanity than to save the child that is not wanted? If she did have this child, it could end up a criminal just like its father. Or worse, it could end up mentally sick because of the stress the mother had to go through during the pregnancy. This child could also end up going from foster home to foster home all through its adolescent life. Wouldn't it be better to save this child from this hell?

Most people condone abortion in cases involving possible death of the woman but why can't they condone it in other cases? I'll tell you why!! Anti-abortionists say that abortion violates some age-old and God-given law. They say this to scare women and harass legislators. But with one look at the history books shows you that they are either lying or are terribly misled with their views.

Until 100 years ago no one punished abortion in the early stages of the pregnancy—not even the Catholics punished it!! Lawrence Lader made the statement in "Abortion" that "the Greek city states and ancient Rome, the foundations of western civilization, made abortion the basis of a well-ordered population policy."

The Christian church gave the fetus a soul, and after 18 centuries of debate the church took the conveniently loose view that the fetus became animated by the rational soul, and abortion became a crime after only 40 days for a boy, and 80 days for a girl. One problem with this is that no method of sex determination was given.

English common law was fairly tolerant of abortion up until the mother feels the fetus move which usually happens between the fourth and fifth months. In the U.S. for a long time, the common law inherited from England protected the right of abortion in the early stages of pregnancy.

Then, in 1869 Pope Pius IX eliminated the distinction between an animated and nonanimated fetus. Since then, the Catholic church has called all abortion murder and punished it severely. Anti-abortion laws were passed in 1803 in England. Then, in 1821, Connecticut punished abortion of a fetus by poison after the fetus had quickened. A succession of laws soon followed which peaked around 1860 in outlawing all abortions except one needed to save the mother.

There were three main reasons abortion suddenly became a crime. The first was logical: abortion was a dangerous operation because of poor conditions and crude methods. The second wasn't quite as good: as biologists began to better understand conception, women began to use better contraceptives. Many countries looked down on this as they needed a higher population to keep up the number of workers in factories and on farms. The third reason is the most dangerous: it is the idea that sex for pleasure is bad, and that pregnancy is the punishment for pleasure.

This last reason is rather chauvinistic and discriminating. Why should the woman be punished alone? What about the man who had the pleasure with the woman? Why isn't he mentioned? People talk as if it was all the woman's fault, but as the saying goes, "it takes two to tango."

Finally in 1973, the Supreme Court took a step toward legalizing abortion. The Court now affirms that the "right of privacy founded in the 14th Amendment's concept of personal liberty . . . is broad enough to encompass a woman's decision whether or not to terminate her pregnancy." The Court held that up to the first trimester of pregnancy, the decision to have an abortion may be made solely by the woman and her doctor. After the end of the first trimester, the states power to regulate abortion is limited to the establishment of rules governing where and by whom an abortion may be performed. "It is only after the fetus has reached a point of viability that the state may go so far as proscribing abortion except when necessary to save the mother's life or health."

Now legislators are trying to overrule this court decision. Anti-abortionists say that "abortion violates the sacredness of human life." The legislators are being pushed to gain what they, the anti-abortionists, want. Do you realize how many anti-abortionists are men? What do men know about unwanted pregnancy? Have you known of any pregnant men? I haven't. So how do they know what it's like to have an unwanted child?

One aspect of illegal abortions I don't think many people are looking at is the increase of criminals. Those women who get abortions and those doctors who perform the abortions are murderers thus making for more criminals in our court and prison systems if these people are charged and convicted of their crimes.

Another aspect is the increased number of "back-alley" abortions. These can be done by various people and I will tell you of three.

The first person is the "quack" doctor who can't do an operation right. He might do the abortion right, or he could tear up the woman's insides, perhaps ruining her chances of having a wanted child later on. Or he might end up mutilating both mother and child.

The second person is the mother herself doing the abortion. This has been done by many teen-age girls in high school. There was even one case of a high school's sewer being plugged up. When they pumped out the item that was plugging up the lines, they found a few dead, aborted babies. Sickening, isn't it!?! Yet this could begin again if abortion is made illegal. Some adult women have given themselves abortions. One such woman died because she bled to death after she cut open her stomach to take out the baby. Is this what you want? Women killing themselves because of an unwanted child? It's not right!!! Abortion should be kept legal to save the women instead of them killing themselves!!!

The third person could be the woman's boyfriend. He might do the abortion right, but how many women have skilled surgeons for boyfriends? He could also end up killing both the woman and the child making for two possible counts of murder.

Maybe we should all sit back and rationally look at all aspects of abortion. There could be some compromise that both sides could reach. I, however, would still be for abortion in all aspects no matter what! Abortion should be kept legal and a woman's right to control her body. Just think of all the women dying because of self-inflicted abortions or abortions done by unskilled people. Do you want this? Is this what the world would be like? I think abortion would stay legal and that people should leave the government alone so they can work on more important things.●

THE AGONIES OF IRELAND: WHO MAKE UP THE IRA

HON. THOMAS S. FOLEY

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of my colleagues in the House to the continuing series of articles published late last year by the Philadelphia Inquirer on "The Agonies of Ireland."

Again, I share your view that this series prepared by that very distinguished newspaper does give the American reader a balanced and accurate understanding of the problem in Northern Ireland.

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer, Dec. 11, 1981]

AGONIES OF IRELAND: WHO MAKE UP THE IRA?

(By Michael Pakenham)

"I was born in the Bogside. . . . Always, we've got the tail end of everything. . . . I am at least 2,400 years old. The British must leave. There'll be no consummation of the marriage of Catholics and Protestants as long as the British are here."

That is the voice of a youth worker, father of a large family. Among his older children are a lawyer and other professionals. The Bogside, where his home is, is a sprawling area of mostly public housing, comfortable and solid by the standards of American areas of comparable poverty.

It is the largest and most turbulent Catholic residential area of the ancient city which Catholics call Derry and Protestants, the government of Northern Ireland and road maps call Londonderry—and have for more than 300 years. In Derry, unemployment is 33 percent among males, 17 percent among females.

He is a practical man, a prudent and loving one. He is careful to tell a visitor that he is opposed to violence, to killing, and thus to the actions of the Provisional Irish Republican Army. (Though technically sometimes referred to as the PIRA, since there is really no "Official" IRA anymore, it is commonly referred to as the IRA and is called "Provos" and "Provisionals" by both friends and foes.) He is a man of dignity, with a job and his freedom in jeopardy should he declare himself to be with the IRA, which he does not.

If an outsider is prudent and curious and will deal with the carefully coded legalisms which stand between explanation and confession, active members and leaders of the IRA are accessible in Northern Ireland, and eager to talk. Altogether there are, by government estimates, 600 of them; by more generous assessments, perhaps 2,000. But what is more revealing than their carefully considered statements is where they come from and why they come. It is that wellspring of rage which the youth worker speaks of:

"The problem of the Catholic population of Northern Ireland is that of knowing the British must go but still saying: 'Oh, what will happen if they go?' I believe that the acceptance of responsibility is the only avenue to growth, personal or communal. * * * We've got to go through an agony of rebirth."

Since the Catholic civil rights movement began in 1968, he tells his visitor, he has been arrested 30 times by the police, the Royal Ulster Constabulary (RUC), or by the British army. He has been knocked unconscious and hospitalized twice. In Derry today, the RUC has substantially replaced the British army as the main policing force, and the RUC's three top officials there are Catholic. That, he says, has not changed anything very much.

In the 1950s, when he was young, he relates, he helped form the first credit union in Northern Ireland.

"We had no hope, no vision. The Catholic politicians had accepted their subservient roles. We all felt powerless. Individually, people had no say. With the credit union, we felt we should build our own houses and create our own jobs, and not be subservient."

As he talked, he brought in tea and little sweet biscuits and worked with his hands at the muscles of his lower back, now always painful, he says, since a day troops attacked a demonstration he was marching in.

"Before free [secondary] education in 1947, very few Catholics became educated," he said, making a case that the Provo movement is a new and modern thing. "Then a cultural matrix began to be formed. It failed as a civil rights movement. Idealism is a very narrow plateau. Attempts to implement reforms which could have happened in hours took months. Denial of civil rights was a smokescreen over the real objectives of the Protestants with wealth and power—to hold on to power."

Today, he works in a youth program, paid, he knows, by tax monies of which more come from England than from Northern Ireland.

"The British must pay, so long as they're here. The kids are the only hope." He speaks, with what he believes is dispassionate conviction, of the inevitability of the movement among those youths, and of its perils: "The kids are politically sophisticated. They learn quickly how to manipulate the British soldier on the street. But that's a dead end. And the tragedy of that is that an important, visionary political consciousness can die with that and nothing more."

It is clear that to him that would be a grave loss. It also is clear, he says, that there is much to keep the vision alive: "Here, there's a great deal of meaninglessness in unemployment. But every kid around here is going to be part of the revolution, if for nothing else than not to have to say in the future 'I wasn't part of it.' This is the last battle of Irish independence. No family here could put its hands on its heart and say my kid is not a part of the IRA."

There are other voices. There are 478,000 Catholics in Northern Ireland, most of them polarized against their more than one million Protestant neighbors. No one can say how many share the vision of that Derry youth worker. For many, it is dangerous to speak. For others, it is too painful. For many more, not on a breaking edge of the conflict like Derry's Bogside, life simply goes on, and living can be pleasant and prosperous.

It is clear not every Catholic agrees. The voices of Belfast, which with a population of 417,000 (Derry's is 85,000), is the largest city in Northern Ireland, are different. There, among bomb-scarred, stone-shattered, graffiti-smeared, brick rowhouse Catholic neighborhoods—many mere yards from Protestant areas distinguished only by the words of the slogans on the walls—there are different kinds and intensities of bitterness, of fear and yearning. There are poor Protestants, more in Belfast than anywhere else in Northern Ireland. But there also is far more evidence there of the Protestant economic advantage under which Catholics historically have been denied equal access to prosperity—and still are.

In Belfast also, claiming to speak for the great majority of Catholics, there are men like Gerry Fitt. He is a native of Belfast, in his own words, a "working class socialist" for his entire adult life, and one of the two Catholic members of the London Parliament from Northern Ireland (the other 10 are Protestants).

Gerry Fitt has won elections for a quarter of a century, and lives in the neighborhood where he was born, on the Antrim road. His house is scarred by a dozen years of attacks. Its tiny, concrete back yard is protected from bombs by a sloping screen of steel mesh. Standing beneath it, he says:

"This house had been under attack from Loyalists (Protestant militants) in 1968 and '69. But then when the Provos began their shooting war, I was equally opposed to them. . . . I believe they cannot unite Ireland by this campaign. I believe that they have shamed Ireland in the eyes of the world because of the atrocious, vicious murders they've carried out in the name of Ireland. They've brought devastating tragedy into the lives of many, many people.

"I myself have carried nearly a hundred coffins to various graveyards throughout Northern Ireland, victims of the IRA and the Protestant paramilitaries. I make no distinction. . . . I can speak of the IRA because I am a Catholic myself, and I want to see a united Ireland, and it is they I am bitterly opposed to because they have put off the day when a united Ireland could have been foreseen. . . .

"The first British soldier ever to be shot dead [on Feb. 6, 1971] was shot just up the road there. Gunner Robert Curtis. I heard the shot that killed him. I came out and denounced that killing . . . all the murders, whether it be the Provos or the Loyalists or anyone else. I sent four wreaths out to people last week. I've got a running account with a florist to send wreaths to people who have been murdered. . . . It's a hell of a sad commentry, you know, to have a running account."

But, surely, Gerry Fitt was asked, the IRA are socialists, as is he?

"They're not socialists at all, though sometimes they would claim to be. They're fascists."

And, he was asked, what if the Provisionals' dream of a swift British withdrawal of forces were achieved?

"The Catholics in Belfast would be murdered. . . . If you live in Derry or Strabane, it's very easy to get up and say, 'Brits out! Brits out!' If there's any kind of trouble you can run over the border. But if you live where I'm living, you're caught. The Catholics would get slaughtered in Belfast. It would be a whole holocaust." (Belfast is more than an hour's hard drive from the border.)

So Gerry Fitt, M.P., believes in carrying coffins, sending wreaths and pleading. He believes fervently in gradualism, in bringing the two communities of Northern Ireland together, and together with the Irish Republic, by painstaking economic and legal and institutional means. In that, he believes, the bitterest enemy of Irish unification, Irish dignity and human survival is the IRA. And in that, the supporters of the IRA believe him to be more the enemy perhaps than the British—if there is a difference.

In Derry, a mother with two sons in prison for membership in the IRA and alleged acts of terrorism speaks of Gerry Fitt with scorn that strains her loving nature. "So long as the Protestants have the British Army at their backs," she says, speaking specifically of Mr. Fitt's position, "they'll never change. The British established a dependency among many Catholics, as well as Protestants. It's a total dependency, a subservience. That's Gerry's problem. To break away from it would be fairly tough. But then we're talking about the birth of a new country. Things would be at the melting point."

One of her sons, younger than the two in prison, joins in the conversation. He too is warm, and astonishingly mature and informed for a teenager. He doesn't agree with everything his mother says, and shows no hesitation in declaring the differences. On one thing they agree, and need spend no words to prove; their total affection for each other and the rest of their close, articulate family.

His mother said she would not lead her sons into the ranks of the IRA. But she accepts the fact that none of them would tell her of their involvement since "both their lives and their hearts would be in peril." They talk of the young man's older brothers, and visits to them during the IRA hunger strike and before.

"The more you suffer," the young man says, his voice even and expressive, almost musical, a peaceful voice, "the more compassionate you become. The prisoners don't hate the jailers. The relatives hate the jailers more than the prisoners do. The only fear, the great fear, among the prisoners is that something will happen to their relatives and weaken their resolve and their support."

His mother waits until he is done, and speaks of her older sons and their companions in prison and in arms. "The hunger strike was effective," she says, "after 12 years on the way forward. The politicians had never taken us seriously." Her voice grows vibrant, rising quickly with a smile. "We are living in a very exciting period. In the future, historians will look back and say this was the turning point in Irish history."

If such a turning point is imminent, everyone in Ireland except the IRA's supporters today agree what the likely result will be: the slaughter of thousands—or tens of thousands—of Irish, Catholics and Protestants alike. They will be victims of a mutually genocidal civil war precipitated as spiraling terrorism paralyzes all hope of reconciliation.

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer, Dec. 13, 1981]

THE AGONIES OF IRELAND: THE IRA—WHAT IS IT?

In its own terms, today's IRA is the "military" arm of the Provisional Sinn Fein (literally in Irish, or Gaelic: "Ourselves Alone") party. The Provisionals broke away from the less violent "official" Sinn Fein in 1969 and 1970. Thus today, the only significant organization is the Provisional party and its Provisional Irish Republican Army. Though sometimes designated PIRA, it is commonly called the IRA or the "Provos." Its members live and function in both the Irish Republic and Northern Ireland and, significantly, elsewhere.

The original Sinn Fein traced its roots to the ultranationalist movement that was active, and ultimately dominant, in the rebellion that led to the beginning of Irish independence in the 1916-22 period. The IRA had conducted periodic campaigns of violence from the 1920s through the early 1960s.

The Provisionals' roots are deeply set in their passionately declared sense of that history and are profusely nourished by the blood of it. Their fundamental, avowed purpose is to drive all residue of British presence off the island of Ireland and to achieve political and cultural unity and independence.

Both in the IRA's sense of history and its most purposeful strategies, it is fundamentally important to its leaders and members to behave and appear to be recognized as an army. The essence of its self-perception is that Provisional Sinn Fein is the destined government of the legitimate Irish nation. It claims to be devoted to the yet-unfulfilled revolutionary commitment, and thus its military wing is said to be fighting a war, rather than conducting terrorism.

From that derives the insistence that members imprisoned by police authorities in both Northern Ireland and the Irish Republic be accorded "political status"—the internationally established rights of prisoners of war, in strong contrast to the rights of criminals as established by domestic law.

That is what its leaders and members, in public and private statements, say of themselves and their purpose. In pursuit of it, the IRA and a splinter group that calls itself the Irish National Liberation Army have claimed responsibility, since 1970, for shootings and bombings—in Northern Ireland, the Irish Republic and Britain—that accounts for hundreds of deaths and the maiming of thousands of persons.

What is the IRA's purpose? Since it is an outlawed, and thus secret, organization in both the Irish Republic and Northern Ireland, that is sometimes elusive, and passionately controversial. But to take public statements by two senior leaders of the IRA's political front:

Ruairi O. Bradaigh, president of Provisional Sinn Fein, asked whether he was talking about the kind of parliamentary democracy that exists now in Dublin, said: "No. We're talking about a much more democratic system. We would like to see the key industries coming under public control—those that are essential to the life of the community, like banking and finance and so forth. Beneath that, we would like to see a wide range of worker-owned cooperatives in agriculture, industry and distributive trade. And we also see room for private enterprise, but not as great as a role as at present.

Danny Morrison, Provisional Sinn Fein's director of publicity, speaking at an annual party conference in Dublin on Oct. 31, asked delegates rhetorically: "Who here really believes we can win the war through the ballot box?" Then, after a dramatic pause, he raised his arms high and answered himself: "But will anyone here object if, with a ballot paper in this hand and an Armalite [rifle] in this hand, we take power in Ireland?

The British government, including police and military forces in Northern Ireland, are implacably opposed to the IRA, of course. But what of others? Is the Provos' cause not that of the government and people of the Irish Republic, serving the aspirations for a united Ireland?

In the words of the present and previous two prime ministers of the republic, coming from both the major political parties:

Dr. Garret FitzGerald, present prime minister and leader of the Fine Gael (literally, "Race of Gaels") party: "The Provisional Sinn Fein does not recognize our government or our courts. They seek to establish a military dictatorship in this country." And, speaking to the Irish Parliament on Nov. 17, after the IRA's assassination of the Rev. Robert Bradford, a Protestant member of the British Parliament for Northern Ireland, Dr. FitzGerald said: "The IRA has once again shown its utter contempt for human life and for the Democratic process. . . . Its true attitude to democracy and freedom was summed up by a recent statement of an IRA spokesman who, when asked by an interviewer for a foreign newspaper about the wishes of the people in this part of the country concerning an aspect of reunification, replied: 'We call the shots. We don't really give a damn what they want.'"

Charles J. Haughey, Dr. FitzGerald's predecessor as prime minister and now leader of the opposition Fianna Fail (literally "Soldiers of Destiny") party: "All but a tiny minority understand that violence can never bring a solution and that it serves only to perpetuate division and hatred."

Jack M. Lynch, Mr. Haughey's predecessor, speaking as prime minister in 1978: "The terrorist activities of the Provisional IRA are making it impossible to bring [solutions] about. Their activities are, on the contrary, driving people more and more apart. We condemn their cowardly attacks on human lives and property which cause terror and disgust to the overwhelming majority of all Irish men and Irish women. . . . We as a government will employ the full resources of security and of the law available to us in pursuing and bringing to justice those who engage in violence and who embark on a course of savagery like blowing innocent children to bits on their way to school.

Those represent the main political voices in the Irish Republic. But what about the Catholic Church, the moral leadership of the overwhelming predominance of Irish men and women in the republic and of almost one-third of the population of Northern Ireland?

More than a decade ago, on Sept. 12, 1971, the five Roman Catholic bishops of Northern Ireland, including Cardinal William Conway, primate of all Ireland, issued a joint statement, saying in part: "In Northern Ireland at the present time there is a small group of people who are trying to secure a united Ireland by the use of force. One has only to state this fact in all its stark simplicity to see the absurdity of the idea. Who in his sane senses wants to bomb a million Protestants into a united Ireland? . . . This is the way to postpone a really united Ireland until long after all Irish men and women now living are dead."

Then, on Nov. 20, this year, Cardinal Tomas O. Fiaich, archbishop of Armagh and the current primate of all Ireland, put out a statement saying, "Most of the murders have been claimed by the IRA. . . . Participation in the evil deeds of this or any other paramilitary organization which indulges in murder, wounding, intimidation, kidnapping, destruction of property or other forms of violence is a mortal sin which will one day have to be accounted for before God in judgment."

Bishop Edward Daly of Derry wrote in a pastoral letter on Nov. 22 that "no member of our church can remain a member and at the same time remain a member of any organization that decides of its own accord to perpetuate cold-blooded murder as a central part of its strategy, whatever the motives, whatever the ideal."

From afar in America, or among the young in Ireland, north and south, who are unemployed and have little hope for a sense of purpose otherwise, the IRA can—and does—sometimes seem an enticingly romantic band of brothers, dedicated to a noble cause. Even discounting everyone connected with the British government, and every Protestant, it is hard to find support for that romantic, benevolent view among Irish people today.

There is support for the IRA, of course. Irish people who are hard-headed realists—whether they support the IRA or not—recognize that its support is based on a yearning for a civil war that first would "defeat" the Protestants and then turn south to "defeat" the present political forces there in favor of a revolutionary regime.

Beyond ideological judgments, that is a very improbable eventuality. By and large the Irish people are deeply committed to democracy and are far from radical, although economic discrimination by Protestants has radicalized significant numbers of Catholics in the North.

Meanwhile, it is the Irish, Catholic as intensely as Protestant, who suffer from the effects of the IRA's terrorism, and the equally murderous terrorism of the Protestant paramilitaries. If there is to be peace and unity on the island of Ireland, it will only be delayed, or denied, by butchery, polarization or genocidal civil war.●

A TRIBUTE TO W. FRANK MISHOE

HON. JOHN L. NAPIER

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. NAPIER. Mr. Speaker, the true measure of a human being in today's world is not the accumulated worldly assets that person has gathered during a lifetime, but the lives he has touched, the assistance he has lent, the dedication with which he has been motivated.

It is with deep sorrow that South Carolina and the Sixth Congressional District has lost a true friend, a dedicated humanitarian, a man who offered himself in service to the people he loved.

Recently, my friend and adviser, former Senator W. Frank Mishoe of Greeleyville, S.C., passed away at age 62. In those six decades, this man created a vast wake of service to his fellow human beings. He served as a member of the South Carolina Assembly for 6 years and was former mayor of Greeleyville.

A native of Williamsburg County, which will long bear his mark in its social, civil, and economic environments, Mr. Mishoe additionally offered his massive knowledge and expertise to the South Carolina Wildlife Department, where he served as a State commissioner from 1966 to 1968.

This great Nation of ours was founded and will be perpetuated by leaders who willingly and aggressively seek out the opportunities for service to their community, State, and Nation. Among that list of leaders will be the name of W. Frank Mishoe.●

DEFENSE POSTURE STATEMENT

HON. LES ASPIN

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Speaker, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger has now produced his first posture statement on U.S. defenses.

It is very disappointing.

This Secretary's annual posture statement—which is supposed to be the definitive statement of a coherent defense policy—looks like it was drafted by a dozen people working in separate cubicles, and then just stapled together.

It just does not hang together.

In the first section, the Secretary debunks a number of lingering myths, such as those about fighting 1½ wars and 2½ wars. But having swept the myths into the dustbin of history, he fails to provide any philosophical underpinning for the Weinberger approach to defense.

I fear there is no philosophy.

One purpose of the annual posture statement is to take policymaking through a formalized analysis of what the threat is to the United States, then to frame the philosophical response to that threat and then to translate the theory into a defined force structure and the defined force structure into a specific budget.

This posture statement, however, simply lists alleged Soviet threats in one section and then lists proposed American forces in another. There is no indication of how the Pentagon got from one to the other. This gives every indication that the two were treated in isolation, which is the worst possible way to structure our defenses. It leaves defense planning largely to the tender mercies of whatever bureaucracy within the Pentagon is the best infighter.

What do the planned additional air wings provide in terms of military effectiveness? How do those air wings address the threats posed by our opponents. Or how do the air wings address the threats talked about in the posture statement itself?

You will not find the answers to any of these fundamental questions in this year's posture statement.

The audience for the posture statement is, officially, the Congress, the press, and the public. In truth, the audience for the posture statement is the military itself. Drafting the posture statement forces internal disputes to the top where they can be tackled by the civilian and military leadership of the Defense Establishment. It is an intellectual exercise, a very important intellectual exercise. From the congressional standpoint the key issue is not so much, "What is the policy?" but, "Do they have a policy? Do they know what they are talking about? Does it all hang together?"

The answer this year, for the first time, is "No."

The administration is asking for the biggest and fastest peacetime defense buildup since 1940. More than ever it is important that the various pieces of the defense buildup fit together.

But Secretary Weinberger and those in charge at the Pentagon apparantly have not taken this whole exercise very seriously. Judging by the uneasiness in Congress over the size of the deficit and defense spending, they may come to regret that decision.●

MEDFORD CORP. COPING WITH CALAMITY IN OUR NATION'S TIMBER INDUSTRY

HON. LES AuCOIN
OF OREGON
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Speaker, I commend to my colleagues the following article appearing in Portland's Willamette Week newspaper. This story describes how a creative and farsighted firm, the Medford Corp., is coping with the calamity in our Nation's timber industry.

Oregon today faces economic disaster. Unemployment in the State is near 12 percent—only Michigan and Ohio have higher unemployment rates. The unemployment rate where the Medford Corp. is located—Medford, Oreg.—is well over 14 percent.

Like every other timber operator in the State, the Medford Corp. must overcome two highly counterproductive Federal policies. The blame for the first, the lack of a consistent timber sales program, can be placed at the door of the Office of Management and Budget (OMB). For years, regardless of what party was in power, OMB has failed to recognize the most basic fact about the timber industry—that you do not harvest timber the same year it is put up for sale. A typical timber sale in the Northwest takes at least 2 years to complete. When the housing market has been down, OMB decides that there is no need to put additional supply on the market. When housing shoots up, OMB decides to increase the timber sales program to meet the new demand. Unfortunately, this pattern insures that supply will never meet demand. This budgetary roller coaster causes tremendous dislocation in the industry, as experienced in the mid-1970's and as will be the case over the next 5 years.

The second obstacle to economic recovery is our current Jeckle-and-Hyde housing policy. Housing starts have been cut in half from just 1 year ago and those associated with the housing industry, not just those in Oregon, are losing their jobs.

While Federal rules have been modified to allow construction industry pension funds to be invested in mortgages the administration has proposed to phase out FHA and GNMA (Government National Mortgage Association) mortgage insurance. This would devastate what remains of the housing industry because it would destroy an effective program of Government-backed mortgages which are priced lower than mortgage rates.

Industry and working people look to the Congress today to salvage a desperate situation.

What the Medford Corp. is doing is ingenious in the face of current housing policies.

This firm has made a commitment to do whatever is necessary to stay in business so that, when housing does make a comeback, there will be a place where Oregonians can find jobs again.

The firm should be commended for its ingenuity. Of course, not every timber firm can do this. Workers in most of the rest of the industry look to the administration to make a course correction in economic policy—or to the Congress, if the administration fails to do so:

[From the Willamette Week, Dec. 22-28, 1981]

MEDFORD CORP.'S KITCHEN COUNTER

(By Janet Dole)

It's no secret that times are tough for the forest-products industry. In these days of high interest rates and record-low housing starts, mere survival is of paramount importance for an industry that has historically been closely and vitally linked with the ups and downs of the housing industry. But Medford Corp.—a medium-sized forest-products company based in Medford—hopes to do more than survive. Leave the hand wringing and anxious waiting to other companies, because Medford Corporation is planning the biggest expansion in its 49-year history, building a $50 million plant in the Republic of Ireland to manufacture medium-density fiberboard.

The fiberboard is used in furniture and cabinet making and, unlike the lumber and plywood products, in which Medford Corporation has specialized, it is much less affected by the cyclical nature of the American housing market. By using its own resources more efficiently (fiberboard is made from formerly wasted wood chips), tapping into new ones (the Irish plant will use Irish trees), and expanding capacity to sell a product that isn't dependent on building new houses. Medford Corporation is balancing the boom-and-bust nature of the wood-products business. It is a strategy economists call "counter-cycling."

Medford Corporation isn't the only forest-products company working on countercycling. Louisiana-Pacific and Potlatch have recently started making waferboard, a building product made from flaked poplar and cottonwood that resembles plywood but is much cheaper to make. Bohemia Lumber specializes in laminated I-beams. A number of firms are paying more attention to paper products; Crown-Zellerbach is building a plant in Portland that will produce "nonwoven fabrics" (the material from which disposable hospital gowns are made) and Potlatch is making "bleached paperboard" for frozen-food containers and milk cartons.

But Medford Corporation's diversification may be the most timely and successful of the lot. And it's nothing really new to a company distinguished for its willingness to expand creatively for the last 20 years. Since the early 1960s, Medford Corporation's undertakings have shifted from a preponderance of lumber products to include wood products such as plywood and veneer. More recently it has added kitchen cabinets (its Diamond Industries is one of the top kitchen-cabinet makers in the country) and medium-density fiberboard. A $13.5 million fiberboard plant built in 1975 has become one of Medford Corporation's most profitable operations, producing 90 million square feet of three-quarter-inch fiberboard each year (making it one of the top three producers in the world) and accounting for over a quarter of 1980's pretax profits.

Medium-density fiberboard is a reconstituted wood product akin to particle board but with many of the qualities of solid wood. Its ability to be machined and to hold screws make it especially suitable for furniture making. When Medford Corporation announced its plans to build a fiberboard plant six years ago, the venture was viewed as daring because the product was relatively new and hardly recognized by the furniture and cabinet making industries. Since then, the fiberboard has come to enjoy wide acceptance, selling well in America and in European countries such as Germany, France and the United Kingdom, where furniture making is an important industry.

This comprehensive approach to the uses of wood has given Medford Corporation a flexibility that is becoming increasingly important as profits from its "solid-wood side"—basic products such as lumber and plywood—decline. Net income is down by over $4 million for the first three quarters of 1981 compared with the first three quarters of 1980, from $5,358,348 to $1,306,438—a decline of 75 per cent. Earnings went from $2.17 per share to 53 cents. The company's response has been to lay off about 17 percent of its work force—260 employees out of 1,500—and to close its sawmill until conditions improve. Even the Forest Service's decision to extend contracts to harvest Forest Service timber for another two years didn't help matters, since Medford Corporation had already fulfilled 98 percent of its contractual agreements when the extensions were announced in mid-October. If it had known in advance, the company could have harvested more heavily from its own 88,251-acre tree farm instead of using the comparatively expensive Forest Service trees.

Although it has been exporting roughly 25 percent of its fiberboard to Europe, Medford Corporation had not considered manufacturing it there, and certainly not in Ireland, until it was contacted by the government of the Republic of Ireland. If forests in Ireland strike you as a little unlikely, your sentiments are probably similar to those at Medford Corporation when the company was first approached. Apparently, thanks to the efforts of farsighted foresters 30 years ago, Ireland has over a million acres of Sitka spruce, Ponderosa pine and Douglas fir that are ready to be thinned. The Irish government, seeking to use its maturing resource as well as boost its flagging economy, considered a variety of choices, including pulp and paper mills and round-log exports, before concluding that fiberboard manufacturing would meet the twin goals with the least disruption to the environment.

Medford Corporation executives are still not sure what attracted Ireland to their corporation out of the 20 or so medium-density fiberboard producers that exist in the world, but contend that the quick and smooth start of their Medford plant in 1975 may have helped. They also speculate that the company's relatively small size made them a less unwieldy partner than a Weyerhaeuser or a Louisiana-Pacific (corporaions the Irish government probably also considered). Medford Corporation's President Robert Medford thinks it likely that the Irish saw an example of its fiberboard and were impressed. "After all, we're No. 1 in the world in quality," he says.

It took Medford Corporation a year of careful study before the decision to go ahead was announced in January, but it was a decision made in the light of some pretty powerful incentives from the Irish government. The final cost of the plant is estimated to be close to $50 million, but that will be offset by sizable capital grants and irresistibly low interest rates. Medford Corporation will be dealing with the Bank of Ireland, which is able to offer interest rates ranging from close to zero to up to 4 percent because it, in turn, is dealing with a government that is bending over backward to encourage this sort of expansion. For instance, there's Section 84, "comparable to our bond system," according to Medford Corporation's Vice-President of Finance Richard N. Ransdell, under which the bank will receive money directly from the government. There's also a policy of allowing the bank to claim 100 percent depreciation in the first year on equipment it subsequently leases to Medford Corporation; both schemes will enable the bank to offer attractive interest rates.

In addition, the Irish government will make direct capital grants to Medford Corporation, based on a scale that's geared to the number of Irish citizens the new plant will employ. It will also pick up the tab for the transportation to and from Medford, and the training, of the Irish workers who will receive their instruction at the Oregon plant. An exemption from all income tax through the year 2000 and a long-term timber agreement ensuring the Corporation will have a steady supply of raw material also helped sweeten the deal.

Ireland's geographical position and its membership in the European Common Market were compelling considerations. A base in Ireland will greatly enhance Medford Corporation's ability to penetrate the European market. The biggest markets are now in the United Kingdom, Germany, the Benelux countries (Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg), and France. At present Medford Corporation must pay duty charges that run from 11 to 15 per cent on its European deliveries. Since Ireland belongs to the European Common Market, the company's Irish subsidiary will be able to ship throughout Europe and enjoy duty-free access. Although the European market is growing, Ted Bauer, marketing manager of the fiberboard group, says, "We're not enjoying all the sales we would like," because of the strengthening dollar, which has increased by about 35 per cent in value relative to French francs and Dutch guilders, and thus has driven up the price of fiberboard. Once the company begins exporting from Ireland it will be selling in European currencies, which should make fiberboard more affordable Higgins views the move to Ireland as fitting in with an "international mode with respect to company growth." Already an active exporter to Australia, Europe and Pacific Rim countries, Medford Corporation plans to increase its exports when the Irish plant starts producing in the late summer of 1983. The European market will be served by the Irish plant (which will have about the same capacity as the Medford plant), thus freeing more of the Medford-produced fiberboard for shipment to the Pacific Rim.

Medford Corporation officials predict that the housing slump will turn around in 1983, and hope their strategy of diversifying into such products as medium-density fiberboard and kitchen cabinets will see them through. If it works, it's a lead other forest-products firms are likely to sit up and notice.●

COMMENTS ON EL SALVADOR

HON. BOB EDGAR

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. EDGAR. Mr. Speaker, when I traveled to Central America a little over a year ago to investigate conditions surrounding the conflict in El Salvador, I believe that many of my constituents back home would have little interest in this mission or might even resent my spending time in an area far from home. Since I have become involved in speaking out against the Reagan administration's policies in Central America, I have been pleasantly surprised by the interest and concern showed by many of my constituents in Delaware County. I have come to believe that many Americans have a strong interest in human rights, justice, and progressive American policy in El Salvador.

An example of this is the thoughtful letter I recently received from James J. Laverty, of Upper Darby, Pa. I would like to thank Mr. Laverty and the many other citizens who have lent encouraging support to my efforts to draw attention to the problems of El Salvador and American policy there. Mr. Laverty's letter follows:

183 MARLBOROUGH ROAD,
Upper Darby, Pa., February 5, 1982.

Hon. ROBERT EDGAR,
U.S. Congressman,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN EDGAR: I would like to congratulate you and lend my support for your efforts on Tuesday (2/2/82) regarding the President's certification that the Salvadoran Government has made progress in reforms of human rights in El Salvador. Your questioning of our government's capability of monitoring such progress is quite to the point, as was Chairman Barnes' comments in which he stated that he knew of no evidence that reforms were being carried out. In fact, any evidence that is presented to the public by the press and other groups is quite to the contrary.

In early 1981 I had the opportunity to listen to a number of people representing such groups as the Maryknoll Fathers, and the American Friends who had recently returned to the United States from El Salvador. The evidence they presented indicated that the military government was quite repressive: people were taken from their homes for questioning who just never seemed to return; others just disappeared; the archbishop of San Salvador was killed while making his sermon at Sunday mass; and one of the presenters, a Maryknoll priest, had routinely been arrested and beaten.

More recently, I have been following accounts of Salvadoran life documented by journalists of the New York Times. Without recounting these articles in depth, which range from the plight of refugees and village life, to motives and activities of the "rebels" in certain areas of the country. I feel compelled to tell you that I, for one, am convinced that the interpretation of the facts in El Salvador by the Reagan administration, and in particular by Secretary Haig, present a distorted picture of the facts.

As you know, appearing before the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee on Latin American Affairs on Tuesday, Thomas O. Enders, Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs referred to the rebels in El Salvador as a "violent minority" who may capture El Salvador. If this happened, according to Mr. Enders, soon major strategic interests such as the Panama Canal, sea lanes and oil supplies would be threatened.

I take issue with these statements. From all accounts which I have read and heard, and from a good number of years of study of the third world, the "violent minority" in El Salvador has been at the top of the pyramid. The Salvadoran people are a majority, and they have been repressed politically and economically by a very small percentage of the population—those who own the land and control the wealth in that country. As far as threatening American strategic interests, I'm sure that the concerns of the Salvadorn people are more likely to be occupied by such things as their fear of being taken from their homes, and the ever-present problem of feeding their families.

Mr. Enders went on to point out that if the United States "acted decisively now" we could prevent the development of a future threat from the neighboring countries in Latin America. If we didn't act, he implied, the future could well bring "more Cubas: totalitarian regimes so linked to the Soviet Union that they become factors in the military balance, and so incompetent economically that their citizens' only hope becomes that of one day migrating to the United States.

Congressman Edgar, the fact is that for many Salvadorans migration to the U.S. is their only hope TODAY! It is ironic that the Immigration and Naturalization Service, acting on a State Department recommendation, treats Salvadorans not as refugees but as illegal aliens "and therefore they are deported." Recent figures from Immigration and Naturalization indicate that every month close to 1,000 Salvadorans are being sent back to El Salvador. This policy contradicts both the United Nations' 1967 Protocol Related to the Status of Refugees, which the United States has signed, and the United States Refugee Act of 1980. On this score, Congressman Edgar, the American people and the members of the House subcommittee have been fed some things by Mr. Enders that don't easily wash down.

But Mr. Enders' comments carry with them a theme which has been characteristic of the Reagan administration, and in particular of Secretary Haig, which is to view the entire world in East-West terms overlooking a rather large percentage of the world's population living on rather a large percentage of the earth's land—the third world. I contend that these people have their own interests, and among them, is to be treated with dignity by the super powers on the basis of those interests.

El Salvador, as I'm sure you're aware, is not the first country with whom the United States has erred. I do not believe that President Reagan nor Secretary of State Haig are acutally trying to dupe the American people. On the contrary, I feel their actions, in particular with El Salvador, have been based not on deception but on ignorance. This ignorance is based on ideological dogma which overlooks the reality of things.

Despite Secretary of State Haig's allegation that the Soviet Union and Cuba are responsible for the guerrilla movement there, Russians and Cubans are not dying in El Salvador, but instead those who make up the majority of the population, and their deaths are at the hands of the "violent minority" in control!

That people are revolting against this repression should not be surprising to anyone, let alone our policy makers. I would ask Mr. Haig that if it was his home which was violated, his brother who disappeared, or his children who have gone hungry—what would he do? These are the realities of which I speak. One of the first rules in understanding foreign policy is to be able to view the world from another country's point of view. Yet our leaders show a conspicuous degree of skill in failing to do just that.

I would offer this question to our policy makers: is it in the interest of the United States for the people of El Salvador to hate us for providing the guns that have killed and maimed their families, friends, and neighbors? I think that upon reflection even Mr. Haig would have to come to grips with that. However, this is where our current policy is taking us.

Recently in an open letter to President Reagan from five of El Salvador's guerrilla commanders an appeal was made to the United States to change its policy and accept a negotiated solution to the civil war. This letter was received cooly by the administration. This is again typical of the type of mistakes our policy makers have made again and again throughout the years.

My final point, and perhaps the most crucial mistake that our leaders make is to expect that democracy, as we know it, will develop in third world countries because we wish it to happen. In El Salvador the first step in the plan is scheduled to take place in March with free elections. I would offer to you and your colleages in the House of Representatives why this thinking is impractical:

In order to have democracy there must be a consensus basic, social, economic, and political goals. El Salvador does not have this.

There must be an advanced form of nationalism to bring about national integration. This is presently developing in El Salvador, but its strength is with those who oppose the military dictatorship.

There must be secularization of politics. Clearly impossible in military dictatorship.

There must be reasonably high literacy rates—a democracy depends on the will of the majority. If the majority cannot read the masses can't be involved. El Salvador is largely illiterate.

There must be a sizable group with higher education and the right kind in order to get the economy developed. This is missing in El Salvador.

There must be enough people interested in participating in a democracy. Most Salvadorans don't know what democracy is, or Marxism for that matter.

There must be a trained and loyal civil service. Not there, in fact years away in El Salvador.

There must be a competitive political system. Missing.

There must be political as well as economic and social mobility. Nonexistent in El Salvador.

There must be a limited constitutional government. Not there.

There must be political as well as economic mobility. Not there. Economic development is necessary for political development.

People must gain experience on the local level first. Democracy must come from the grass roots up. Not there.

There must be developed a tradition of democracy, which in turn would develop a consensus. This has not yet begun in El Salvador.

There must be civilian control of the military. Conspicuously not there.

People must be allowed to progress in order for democracy to begin to develop. However, our current policy is to keep the status quo by trying to keep the military dictatorship in power by equipping it with arms, deterring development. Our policy in El Salvador is once again a contradiction of reality.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES J. LAVERTY,
Upper Darby, Pa.

UKRAINIAN INDEPENDENCE REMEMBERED

HON. DENNIS E. ECKART

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 26, 1982

● Mr. ECKART. Mr. Speaker, we must never forget countries which have held, if only for a short time, freedom in the palm of their hand. It is for this reason that I wish to recognize the Ukrainian National Republic's day of independence.

Three years after its birth on January 22, 1918, the Ukrainian National Republic was brought under Soviet rule by the Bolsheviks. The area, which has a population of 50 million, is now known as the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic and is, in name only, an independent republic within the Soviet Union. In reality, it is a part of the U.S.S.R.—subject to the same restrictions and abuses that plague the rest of the citizens of the Soviet Union.

It is particularly important now that we recognize this day to assure our brothers in Poland that their efforts, whether ultimately successful or unsuccessful, triumphant or trampled, will never be forgotten. Their struggle gives strength and courage to all present and future generations who seek freedom. What better way than to pay tribute to past generations who have done just that.●

A DAY OF REMEMBRANCE FOR DR. KING

HON. WILLIAM R. RATCHFORD

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. RATCHFORD. Mr. Speaker, the civil rights struggle that continues to this day should serve as a reminder to this body of the great symbolic importance that would be attached to the passage of H.R. 800, legislation that would designate January 15 of every year as a national holiday commemorating the birth of the late Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

It is disturbing to note that the long and hard battles Dr. King fought—against discrimination in our schools, in our workplaces, in the voting booths across our land—are being challenged and gradually eroded by the Reagan administration. It is equally disturbing that the House of Representatives has yet taken no action on H.R. 800. I sincerely believe that if we are to keep alive the principles Dr. King lived and died for we must move immediately to adopt his bill.

Martin Luther King embodied, as has no other American, the quest for the equality of all women and men promised, in the Declaration of Independence more than two centuries ago. A national holiday honoring his dedication and his powerful contribution to the cause of civil rights will serve as a stirring remembrance of the man who brought the plight of the American black to the attention of our Nation, and who brought the plight of all oppressed minorities to the attention of the world.

Dr. King was still a young man when he was murdered in 1968, but he had already devoted more than 2 decades to his nonviolent crusade for color-blind justice and equality in America. The civil rights movement that culminated in the great legislative advances of the 1960's was ignited in 1955, in the nonviolent boycott led by Dr. King against the segregated bus system of Montgomery, Ala. It was a decision by the U.S. Supreme Court that declared segregation in the buses of Montgomery unconstitutional—and that won Dr. King his place as a national leader for civil rights.

In the years that followed, Martin Luther King was ever in the forefront for the struggle. In the early 1960's, with millions of Americans only vaguely aware that their black countrymen were routinely being denied their constitutional right to vote, to go into public establishments, to attend public schools, or to purchase a home in the neighborhood of their choice, Dr. King and the freedom riders withstood ignorance in inhumility and deprivation to deliver their message to America.

It was on August 28, 1963, that Dr. King, leading 250,000 women, men, and children in the largest civil rights demonstration ever, proclaimed in our Nation's Capital: "I have a dream"—a dream that children of all races would someday walk hand in hand in a society free of discrimination, free of bitterness and hatred, and misunderstanding. The dream that Dr. King cherished is as powerful today as it was 2 decades ago. But it is imperiled by a strong tide to reaction against the gains we have made in civil rights in our country.

This House must act if we are to forge that dream into a reality. H.R. 800 is a good and logical place to start.●

LIST OF VOTES

HON. MORRIS K. UDALL

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, it has become my practice from time to time to list my votes in the House of Representatives here in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I strongly believe that the people of southern Arizona have the right to know where I stand on the issues decided by the House, and I have found that printing my record here is the best way to provide that information.

This is not an all-inclusive list. I have omitted noncontroversial votes such as quorum calls, motions to resolve into the Committee of the Whole House, and motions to approve the Journal of the previous day.

The descriptions are necessarily somewhat short, and I am sure that some of my constituents will have additional questions about the issues described here. So I invite them to write me for specifics, or to visit my district office at 300 North Main, Tucson.

The list is arranged as follows:

KEY

1. Official rollcall number;
2. Number of the bill or resolution;
3. Title of the bill or resolution;
4. A description of issue being voted on;
5. The date of the action;
6. My vote, in the form Y=yes, N=no, and NV=not voting.
7. The vote of the entire Arizona delegation, in the form (Yes—No—Not voting);
8. An indication whether the motion or amendment was passed or rejected; and
9. The total vote.

101. H.R. 3520. Steel Industry Compliance Extension. Adoption of the conference report on the bill to give steel companies, on a case-by-case basis, until Dec. 31, 1985 to meet the 1982 air pollution cleanup deadline. Money saved by deferring pollution control expenditures must be used to modernize older steel plants. June 26. Y(3-1-0). Adopted 412-4.

102. H.R. 3982. Budget Reconciliation. Amendments, considered en bloc, to strike parts of six titles of the bill recommended by the following committees: Agriculture; Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs; Education and Labor; Post Office and Civil Service; Science and Technology; Ways and Means and to substitute provisions endorsed by President Reagan. June 26. N(3-1-0). Adopted 217-211.

103. H.R. 3982. Budget Reconciliation. Motion to order the previous question (thus ending further debate) on the Schneider, R-R.I., motion to recommit the bill to the Budget Committee with instructions to provide a twice-a-year cost-of-living adjustment for federal employees. June 26. N(3-1-0). Agreed to 215-212.

104. H.R. 3982. Budget Reconciliation. Passage of the bill to revise existing laws to achieve budget savings in fiscal year 1982-84 as ordered by the first budget resolution for fiscal 1982. June 26. N(3-1-0). Passed 232-193.

105. H.R. 3982. Budget Reconciliation. Motion to table (kill) the Lott, R-Miss., motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed. June 26. N(3-1-0). Agreed to 187-150.

106. H.R. 3519. Defense Department Authorization. Motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for consideration of the bill to authorize funds for the Defense Department in fiscal 1982. July 8. Y(4-0-0). Agreed to 345-2.

107. H.R. 3519. Defense Department Authorization. Motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for consideration of the bill to authorize funds for the Defense Department in fiscal 1982. July 9. Y(4-0-0). Agreed to 385-4.

108. H.R. 3519 Defense Department Authorization. Amendment to the Hansen R-Utah, amendment to prohibit the expenditure of funds in the bill for the MX missile system until both houses of Congress have adopted resolutions approving the MX missile system selected by the President. July 9. Y(1-3-0). Rejected 201-207.

109. H.R. 3519. Defense Department Authorization. Motion to end debate on the Dellums, D-Calif., amendment to delete $2.4 billion for development of the MX missile system. July 9. N(3-1-0). Rejected 193-213.

110. H.R. 3519. Defense Department Authorization. Amendment to delete $2.4 billion for development of the MX missile system. July 9, N(0-4-0). Rejected 96-316.

111. H.R. 3519. Defense Department Authorization. Amendment to make funds specified in the bill for the B-1 bomber available also for research and development of an advanced technology bomber. July 9. Y(1-3-0). Rejected 153-254.

112. H.R. 3519. Defense Department Authorization. Amendment to reinstate a requirement that the Defense Department reduce the number of civilian employees in grades GS-13 to GS-18. July 9. Y(1-2-1). Rejected 142-249.

114. H.R. 3519. Defense Department Authorization. Motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for further consideration of the bill to authorize Defense Department funding for fiscal 1982. July 10. Y(3-0-1). Agreed to 370-2.

115. H.R. 3519. Defense Department Authorization. Government Operations Committee amendment to delete a provision authorizing the Defense Department to use grants for research and procurement. July 10. Y(1-2-1). Rejected 190-194.

116. H.R. 4034. HUD-Independent Agencies Appropriation, fiscal 1982. Motion to order the previous question (thus ending further debate) on the rule (H. Res. 171) providing for House floor consideration of the Department of Housing and Urban Development appropriations bill. July 10. Y(3-0-1). Agreed to 336-13.

117. H.R. 4034. HUD-Independent Agencies Appropriations, fiscal 1982, Motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for consideration of a bill making appropriations for the Department of Housing and Urban Development and Independent Agencies. July 10. Y(3-0-1). Agreed to 326-7.

118. H.R. 3975. Production of Oil from Tar Sands. Motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill to facilitate the production of oil from tar sands deposits on federal lands. July 14. Y(4-0-0). Agreed to 416-0.

119. H.R. 3519. Defense Department Authorization. Government Operations Committee amendment to delete from the bill increases in three thresholds on Defense Department purchases: an increase from $10,000 to $25,000 of the ceiling on the use of simplified small purchase procedures; an increase from $100,000 to $500,000 of the minimum amount of cost and pricing data that must be certified by contractors on the Truth in Negotiations Act; and an increase from $100,000 to $5 million of the maximum contract that can be negotiated by a service secretary for experimental, development or research work. July 14. N(0-4-0). Rejected 109-311.

120. H.R. 3519. Defense Department Authorization. Amendment to the Judiciary Committee amendment to permit U.S. armed forces personnel to participate, under certain circumstances, in illegal drug seizures or arrests outside the land area of the United States. July 15. N(3-1-0). Adopted 248-168.

121. H.R. 3519. Defense Department Authorization. Judiciary Committee amendment, as amended to authorize the armed services to cooperate with civilian law enforcement officials in operations against drug smuggling. July 15. Y(3-1-0). Adopted 362-49.

122. H.R. 3519. Defense Department Authorization. Government Operations Committee amendment to place Defense Department procurement under a government wide procurement system and to authorize multiyear contracting only for purchases meeting certain conditions and specifically approved by Congress. July 15. Y(1-3-0). Rejected 133-283.

123. H.R. 3519. Defense Department Authorization. Amendment to require that all purchases of computers and computer services for the Defense Department be made through the General Services Administration July 15. Y(1-3-0). Rejected 118-299.

124. H.R. 3519. Defense Department Authorization. Substitute amendment to the Hillis, R-Ind., amendment to prohibit the armed services from buying automobiles manufactured outside the U.S. or Canada unless the Secretary of Defense certified to Congress that suitable automobiles manufactured in the U.S. or Canada were not available. July 15, N(0-3-1). Rejected 38-371.

125. H.R. 3519. Defense Department Authorization. Amendment to delete provisions from the bill requiring Selective Service registrants to provide their Social Security numbers and providing for the Department of Defense and Treasury and Health and Human Services to share names and addresses of registrants. July 16, N(0-3-1) Rejected 125-290.

126. H.R. 3519. Defense Department Authorization. Amendment to the Courter, R-N.J., substitute amendment to the Schroeder, D-Co., amendment to direct the President to propose by Jan. 15, 1982 at least $8 billion in rescissions in Defense Department budget authority that was unnecessary or attributable to waste, fraud, abuse or mismanagement. July 16. Y(1-2-1). Rejected 142-276.

127. H.R. 3519. Defense Department Authorization. Substitute amendment to the Schroeder, D-Co., amendment to direct the President to submit to Congress by Jan. 15, 1982 his recommendations for improving the efficiency and management in the Defense Department and for eliminating waste, fraud, abuse and mismanagement in the Department. The President also would be directed to report on actions taken concerning General Accounting Office reports on waste, fraud, abuse and mismanagement in the Defense Department. July 16. Y(3-0-1). Adopted 416-0.

128. H.R. 3519. Defense Department Authorization. Amendment to prohibit use of funds in the bill for research, development, testing, evaluation or procurement of the F/A-18 fighter/attack aircraft. The amendment directed that the $3.1 billion specified in the bill for the F/A-18 be made available instead for other Navy and Marine Corps aircraft programs. July 16. N(0-3-1) Rejected 101-316.

129. H.R. 3519. Defense Department Authorization. Amendment to bar procurement of A-7K attack planes and use funds earmarked for that plane to buy instead 13 F-16 fighters. July 16. N(0-3-1). Rejected 148-268.

130. H.R. 3519. Defense Department Authorization. Amendment to bar the Secretary of any armed service from signing a contract worth more than $50,000 to purchase civilian cars or light trucks not made in the U.S. or Canada, without legislative authorization. July 16. N(0-3-1). Adopted 231-187.

131. H.R. 3519. Defense Department Authorization. Passage of the bill to authorize $136,111,000 for Defense Department weapons procurement, military research operations and maintenance and civil defense in fiscal 1982. July 16. Y(3-0-1). Passed 354-63.

132. H.R. 3519. Defense Department Authorization. Motion to allow the House-Senate conference committee on the fiscal 1982 defense authorization bill (S. 815) to be closed to the public when classified information was under consideration. July 16. Y(3-0-1) Agreed to 381-2.

133. H. Res. 177. Nuclear Non-Proliferation Policy. Adoption of the resolution calling on the President to develop and implement a nuclear non-proliferation policy that would strengthen the barriers to the spread of nuclear weapons and prescribe concrete methods for restraint by all nuclear supplier nations; encourage nations to ratify the Non-Proliferation Treaty; work to develop sanctions against nations that divert nuclear supplies from peaceful purposes into nuclear weapons; and fully implement the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Act of 1978. July 17. Y(3-0-1). Adopted 365-0.

134. H.R. 4034. HUD-Independent Agencies Appropriations fiscal 1982. Amendment to reduce the appropriation for the Office of Policy Development and Research in the Department of Housing and Urban Development from $30 million to $20 million. July 17. N(2-1-1). Adopted 202-162.

135. H.R. 4034. HUD-Independent Agencies Appropriations fiscal 1982. Amendments (considered en bloc) to prohibit the Environmental Protection Agency from spending funds to require states to implement or enforce programs for vehicle emission control inspection and maintenance. July 17. N(2-1-1). Rejected 177-184.

136. H. Res. 181. Social Security. Motion to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution stating that the House "strongly urges that the necessary steps be taken to insure that Social Security benefits are not reduced for those currently receiving them." July 21. Y(3-1-0). Agreed to 405-13.

137. H.R. 4034. HUD-Independent Agencies Appropriations fiscal 1982. Amendments to cut the appropriation for the National Science Foundation from $1.06 billion to $995 million. July 21. N(3-1-0). Rejected 152-264.

138. H.R. 4034. HUD-Independent Agencies Appropriations fiscal 1982. Passage of the bill to appropriate $62,599,958,500 in fiscal 1982 for the Department of Housing and Urban Development and 20 independent agencies. July 21. Y(3-1-0). Passed 362-54.

139. H.R. 4035. Interior Appropriations fiscal 1982. Motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for consideration of the bill. July 21. Y(4-0-0). Agreed to 378-3.

140. H.R. 4035. Interior Appropriations fiscal 1982. Amendment to provide $100 million for the administrative expenses of the Payments in Lieu of Taxes program. July 21. Y(3-0-1). Rejected 96-320.

141. H.R. 4035. Interior Appropriations fiscal 1982. Motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for further consideration of the bill. July 22. Y(4-0-0). Agreed to 383-3.

142. H.R. 4035. Interior Appropriations fiscal 1982. Amendment to delete $135 million earmarked for the solvent refined coal demonstration plant at Newman, Ky. July 22. Y(2-2-0). Rejected 177-236.

143. H.R. 4035. Interior Appropriations fiscal 1982. Amendment to delete $30,000 earmarked for the Franklin Delano Roosevelt Memorial Commission. July 22. N(2-2-0). Rejected 201-216.

144. H.R. 4035. Interior Appropriations fiscal 1982. Passage of the bill to appropriate $11,139,727,000 in fiscal 1982 for the Interior Department and related agencies. July 22. Y(3-1-0). Passed 358-46.

145. H.R. 4144. Energy and Water Development Appropriations fiscal 1982. Adoption of the rule (H. Res. 185) providing for House floor consideration of the fiscal 1982 apropriations bill for energy and water development programs. July 23. Y(3-1-0). Adopted 233-178.

146. H.R. 4119. Agriculture Appropriations fiscal 1982. Adoption of the rule (H. Res. 178) providing for House floor consideration of the bill to provide fiscal 1982 funds for the Agriculture Department and related agencies. July 23. NV(3-0-1). Adopted 274-131.

147. H.R. 4144. Energy and Water Development Appropriations fiscal 1982. Amendment to the Myers, R-Ind., amendment to delete $189 million for the Tennessee-Tombigbee Waterway. July 23. N(0-4-0). Rejected 198-208.

148. H.R. 4144. Energy and Water Development Appropriations fiscal 1982. Amendment to the Myers, R-Ind., amendment to delete $17.8 million for the Stonewall Jackson, W.Va. dam and prohibit further federal spending on the project. July 23. N(0-4-0). Rejected 137-267.

149. H.R. 4144. Energy and Water Development Appropriations fiscal 1982. Amendment to delete $4 million for the Garrison Diversion water project in North Dakota. July 23. N(0-4-0). Rejected 188-206.

150. H.R. 4144. Energy and Water Development Appropriations fiscal 1982. Amendment to delete $228 million for the Clinch River (Tenn.) nuclear breeder reactor. July 24. Y(1-3-0). Rejected 186-206.

151. H.R. 4144. Energy and Water Development Appropriations fiscal 1982. Amendment to transfer $10 million for research at the privately operated Barnwell, S.C. nuclear fuel reprocessing facility to government nuclear waste research. July 24. Y(1-3-0). Rejected 157-213.

152. H.R. 4144. Energy and Water Development Appropriations fiscal 1982. Passage of the bill to appropriate $13,189,674,000 in fiscal 1982 for energy and water development programs. July 24. Y(4-0-0). Passed 244-104.

153. H.R. 2819. District of Columbia Federal Payment. Passage of the bill to increase from $300 million to $336.6 million the authorization for fiscal 1982 and each fiscal year thereafter for the annual federal payment to the District of Columbia. July 27. Y(1-2-1). Passed 209-179.

154. H.R. 2818. District of Columbia Borrowing Authority. Passage of the bill to extend for two years the authority of the Mayor of the District of Columbia to accept certain interim loans from the U.S. government and to extend the authority of the Treasury Secretary to make such loans. July 27. Y(1-2-1). Passed 239-149.

155. H.R. 4119. Agriculture Appropriations fiscal 1982. Passage of the bill to appropriate $22,730,534,000 for fiscal 1982 for the Agriculture Department and related agencies. July 27. Y(1-2-1). Passed 343-33.●

JOHN GRAHAM McCROREY: A MAN OF VISION

HON. WILLIAM F. GOODLING

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, some weeks ago I had the pleasure of being in York, Pa., at the headquarters of McCrory Stores. The occasion was the dedication of the Lorence A. Silverberg Memorial Museum and the kick-off of the yearlong observance of the 100th anniversary of the founding of McCrory Stores. I was able to learn firsthand some of the history of variety stores starting back in the five-and-dime days. I would like to recount for you now some of this history as it is preserved in the McCrory Museum.

McCrory's history goes back to 1882 when John G. McCrorey, a 22-year-old dry goods clerk, opened his first 5-and-10-cent store in Scottdale, Pa., with $350 in savings and $200 in borrowed money. The store recorded sales of $25,000 that first year. If living today, he would be proud to know that his initial investment was the beginning of an organization having annual sales of approximately $750 million a hundred years later.

By 1901 John G. McCrorey had 20 stores producing an annual sales volume of $498,000. Always a frugal man, he had dropped the "e" from his name, allegedly to reduce the cost of the gilt-lettered signs over his stores. Having outgrown its Johnstown, Pa., headquarters, the company established its main office in New York City in 1901. It was incorporated under the laws of the State of Delaware in 1915.

Food service was first introduced in a McCrory store during World War I. John McCrorey could foresee that having a lunch counter in a store would not only be a convenience for his regular customers but also might bring in more customers. He set aside areas for this purpose in several of the stores and started operating them as concessions, serving light food and refreshments. After a few years the company took over the operation of the food counters. The food counters grew to luncheonettes and, much later, the luncheonettes to restaurants and cafeterias. Today, food service is an integral and profitable part of the firm's operations and is available in 475 of its stores as well as in a number of freestanding restaurants.

John G. McCrorey retired from active participation in the company in 1933 in order to devote his energies to philanthropic interests, which he did until his death in 1943 at age 83.

The decade following World War II was critical for the variety store industry. Population shifts away from urban centers to suburbia changed the face of retailing. Those failing to recognize this trend found themselves in serious financial difficulty.

McCrorys survived these changes and, in 1963, opened a 750,000-square-foot distribution center in York, Pa. In 1966 its headquarters offices were moved from New York City to York, although small buying offices for fashion apparel are maintained in New York and Los Angeles.

Other small variety chains had sprung up over the years and their numbers of stores continued to grow by way of either opening new units or gaining control of smaller independents. Notable among those companies that were eventually merged into the McCrory family of stores, after having realized their own measures of success, were McLellan Stores in 1959; H. L. Green Co., Inc., in 1961; and J. J. Newberry Co., in 1972. McCrorys also took over 15 former W. T. Grant stores in 1976, 8 former Neisner stores in 1980, and in 1981 acquired S. H. Kress and V. J. Elmore stores from Genesco.

In 1975 management established a goal of substantially increasing the sales per square foot and decreasing expenses in order to capture the greatest profit from increased sales. By closing unprofitable stores, rehabilitating certain stores, reducing operating costs, and instituting an aggressive sales program, McCrorys was able to steadily increase sales and profits. The decision was made to stay solely in the variety store business.

McCrory stores has come a long way from its founding, and today is headed by Ben Litwak, chairman, and J. Philip Lux, president. Both Litwak and Lux came up through the ranks to attain their present positions, Litwak having started as a manager traineee in 1936 and Lux as a part-time stockboy in the McCrory store managed by his father in the midforties. Lux recalls that—

We sold silk stockings back then instead of nylon and the best pair in stock sold for only 59-cents. Variety stores were the discounters and convenience stores of the 1940's because drug and grocery stores did not carry the variety of items they do now.

Inflation and high interest rates have had a limiting effect on merchandise assortments, energy costs, and borrowing. Yet, according to Lux, the variety store market tends to broaden during difficult times. He notes:

Persons in high income groups are finding their discretionary incomes reduced, and we are seeing people buying socks and many other items at our stores who previously would not have considered shopping for them in a variety store.

While in 1982 McCrorys will take a quick look back at all that has taken place in the last 100 years—the peaks and valleys; prosperous and depression times; the closing of some stores and the opening of new ones; with mergers and new faces in top management; an increasing variety of goods; the arrival of the jet age; instant communications and the need for better responsiveness; improved means of inventory control and distribution—it is too busy planning ahead to look for long. Its management has initiated as strategic planning process to enable its executives to quickly perceive trends, assess their importance, and position the company to meet the changing environment.

Employing John G. McCrorey's philosophy of looking ahead, the slogan adopted for the 100th anniversary year of McCrory stores is "We've only just begun."

Mr. Speaker, I am proud that our country produced a John Graham McCrorey who was such a believer in the free enterprise system. Historically the variety store industry has been a forerunner in providing employment opportunities for our youth and has instilled in them the work ethic that has been so important to the success of our great country.

The successful chains of variety stores that have survivied their first century are few, and it is significant that this successful firm has adhered to the fundamental standards of its founder.●

ERA: EMANCIPATION PROCLAMATION

HON. PATRICIA SCHROEDER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, Friday, February 12, is Abraham Lincoln's birthday. One of Lincoln's greatest acts as President was his signing of the Emancipation Proclamation. It was a great step toward furthering the idea of equality in the United States. It led to the 14th amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which prohibited the country from denying any person within its jurisdiction equal protection of the laws.

State legislatures in 15 States have a chance to follow in the footsteps of Abraham Lincoln and to enrich the Constitution by ratifying the equal rights amendment: "Equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex."

The following Christian Science Monitor article by Dr. William Van Alstyne, a professor of constitutional law at Duke University, explains why the Constitution would be poorer without the ERA:

THE CONSTITUTION WOULD BE POORER WITHOUT ERA

This June will mark either the passing of an era or the passage of an ERA. Without approval of three additional state legislatures, 50 years of efforts that moved two-thirds of both houses in Congress, and a decade of effort that won approval by 35 states, will end in failure. The world's oldest written extant Constitution, our own, would still provide no fundamental commitment that "equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex."

Prudent people already think they know the outcome—that among 15 states there will be no favorable majorities in the general assemblies of even three states. Already the 27th Amendment is treated as a game, the outcome of which we know. "They" (the women) have lost.

From within the Constitution where I live professionally, the view is quite different. It is a view of pending loss, of historic and constitutional opportunity about to be forfeited. It is also a professional sense of sheer amazement. I would have thought that the chance to count oneself significantly, in adding a memorable and permament improvement to the Constitution of the United States, would not lightly be rejected by men and women whose other votes in state assemblies cannot possibly be comparable in significance. It is incredible to me that state assembly members, living from year to year through forgettable bills of appropriation, endless caucuses, and recurring campaigns do not see how one vote, on this issue, provides a greater claim to history than anything else they may do.

The indifference of state assembly members to make ratification their most important business cannot be on grounds that the 27th Amendment is trivial, because it is not. It carries into words eminently suitable for a Constitution a proposition neither condescending nor at all objectionable. Rather, like the 13th Amendment (which forever interred chattel slavery) it speaks against the recurring and incorrigible tendencies of government to be condescending, ignorantly denying equality of rights by gender.

The objection that the wording of the Equal Rights Amendment would be an iron bed of Procrustes, relentlessly indifferent to any gender-related distinctions at all (the example is often given of mandatory unisex dressing rooms or bathrooms in all governmentally-operated facilities) is quite mistaken. Where considerations of hygiene, safety, and privacy are involved "equality of rights under the law" (which is exactly and only what the amendment provides) is plainly not offended by separate facilities equal in usefulness and the separateness of which stigmatizes no one.

On the other hand, I have heard it said that the 27th Amendment is not needed because the Constitution already adequately speaks to this subject. But this, too, is seriously in error. The equal protection clause (of the 14th Amendment) has embarrassed the Supreme Court by its very poor adaptability to gender-based discrimination by government.

Partly this is so because such forms of unequal treatment by government played virtually no role whatever in its Reconstruction passage, in 1868. Partly it is because the sole reference to sex in the 14th Amendment itself explicitly allowed women altogether to be denied any right to vote (an "accommodation" provided by the 14th Amendment that it required the separate 19th Amendment, ratified in 1920, to overcome). And partly it is because the court fully understands that gender-based laws cannot be analyzed in perfect analogy to race-based laws (which are the focus of the 14th Amendment), and that the comparison is often very faulty.

This difference is recognized in the different language of the Equal Rights Amendment itself. Thus, it provides for "equality of rights under the law," and admits to common sense distinctions relevant to gender that would not be relevant to race.

The fact is that the Constitution is a poorer document without this amendment, just as it was once even weaker in having no 14th Amendment and, in the beginning, no Bill or Rights at all.

The amendment should be read again, read privately, thought about quietly. It should be compared with the balance of our Constitution, its conformity in style and spirit examined fairly and with detachment. If that is done, then by June it is still possible for us to mark the passage of the 27th Amendment, and not simply the passing of an era.●

NATIONAL AGRICULTURE DAY—MARCH 18, 1982

HON. E de la GARZA

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, today, for myself and on behalf of Mr. WAMPLER of Virginia, ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture and 127 other Members of the House, I have introduced a resolution to proclaim March 18, 1982, as "National Agriculture Day."

The resolution would authorize and request the President to issue a proclamation calling on the people of the United States to oberve the day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

The purpose behind this resolution, which is identical to a resolution which became law for 1981, is simple but significant.

American agriculture, including farmers, workers, and all the other participants in the food and fiber chain, is the Nation's largest and most productive industry. A healthy farm economy, working with efficient agribusiness industries, is the foundation of a healthy national economy. Every American wants this country to pull out of the current recession, recovery in other industries will be hampered unless the farm sector also is healthy.

Because of this basic fact, I believe that every American should have a full understanding of what agriculture means to his or her life. Only a relative handful of our people live on farms, but the rest of us are deeply affected by what happens in agriculture, and our citizens will make better and sounder national policy decisions if they have all the facts about this cornerstone industry.

This is the purpose of our resolution—to help spread understanding. One of the most effective methods of promoting that understanding in recent years has been the annual observance of Agriculture Day, which is coordinated by the Agriculture Council of America, a nonprofit, bipartisan organization devoted to communicating the facts about modern agriculture.

Our resolution would cost taxpayers nothing. But it would add the emphasis of formal Government recognition to the efforts which are already underway to make 1982 National Agriculture Day an effective observance.

Agriculture Day is celebrated in local communities all around the Nation—in schools, in exhibits, in tours, and in ceremonies of many kinds. There will be proclamations and recognition of the day by many mayors, Governors, and other officials. Millions of Americans will be given a refresher course in how American agriculture works, and how the superior productivity of our agriculture compares with the food systems in other countries.

The 1982 observance which our resolution supports will bring together farmers and ranchers, farm and commodity groups, and many other organizations for a united effort to speak to the American people. We hope many more of our House colleagues will join us quickly in sponsoring the resolution.●

H.R. 5424—MONO LAKE NATIONAL MONUMENT BILL

HON. JIM SANTINI

OF NEVADA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. SANTINI. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words today in support of a bill introduced by Congressman SHUMWAY to make Mono Lake a national monument. I was pleased and proud to join in an effort to protect and preserve this California lake. H.R. 5424 is an attempt to provide national park management and protection to one of America's most unique acquatic treasures. Mono Lake lies between the Sierra Nevada Mountains and the Great Basin at an elevation of 6,372 feet. It is over 1 million years old and is a scientific and geologic showcase with its volcanic formations, unique bird habitat and pristine environment.

Unfortunately, because of water diversions, Mono Lake is in very real danger of drying up and losing its ecological life support system. As a staunch believer in State water rights, I continue to believe that the basic and fundamental water issues must be ironed out by the State of California. Nevertheless, we cannot stand idly by and see an American resource dwindle and die. Giving Mono Lake national monument status will require that it be managed like a national park with emphasis on preservation of geologic and scenic values and recreational opportunities. In addition, we will require that a comprehensive study be conducted on alternative water management practices and that an inventory be taken of all terrestrial and aquatic species and factors contributing to their decline.

Why is a Nevada Congressman interested in the fate of Mono Lake? The answer is pretty simple. Mono Lake lies just over the Nevada-California boundary and provides recreation and scenic enjoyment for many, many Nevadans as well as Californians. Mono Lake is a memorable site for countless Nevadans, driving south on Highway 395 to Yosemite from Reno. In fact during the ice ages when Mono Lake was many times its present size, it actually reached eastward into Nevada. The region is tied together historically and environmentally and I am committed to lend my support to the efforts of our neighbors to the west to keep Mono Lake from going the way of so many of our western water bodies.

We all have a lot at stake in the Mono basin—the wildlife, the environment, recreational pursuits, and shrimp harvesting, just to name a few resources. I urge my House colleagues to lend a helping hand to save Mono Lake from becoming another dry desert lake of the past. Thank you.●

REPORT OF EL SALVADOR TRIP

HON. BOB EDGAR

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. EDGAR. Mr. Speaker, Bishop Joseph H. Yeakel, of the United Methodist Church reminded me recently of a strong statement put out by the governing board of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U.S.A., meeting in Cleveland, Ohio, November 5, 1981, on the issue of U.S. Government involvement in El Salvador. In light of the recent debate on future involvement, I urge my colleagues to read the following report and note the important recommendations as stated:

REPORT OF EL SALVADOR TRIP

A delegation sponsored by the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U.S.A visited El Salvador, from October 24 to 28, 1981. The members of the delegation were:

The Rev. Dr. James Andrews, Stated Clerk, Presbyterian Church in the United States;

Kara Cole, Administrative Secretary, Friends United Meeting;

The Rt. Rev. David Reed, Episcopal Church, Bishop of Kentucky;

Rev. Hugh Smith, Secretary, Public Relations, American Baptist International Ministries;

Dr. William P. Thompson, Stated Clerk, United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A.; and Bishop Joseph Yeakel, United Methodist Church, Bishop of New York West Area.

Staff: The Rt. Rev. J. Antonio Ramos, Associate Director of Caribbean and Latin America Office, DOM, NCCCUSA; Mr. Mark Schomer, Church World Service Central America Representative; and the Rev. Dr. Eugene L. Stockwell, Associate General Secretary for Overseas Ministries. NCCCUSA.

The visit was a pastoral visit to the churches of El Salvador, intended to convey our identification with them in the current tragic suffering they and their nation are facing. The visit was intended also to assist us toward a deeper insight into the current reality of El Salvador in order that we as U.S. churches and people might respond more adequately to their needs.

In addition to many individual conversations, the delegation schedule included:

Sunday worship in the Roman Catholic Cathedral, First Baptist Church, Emmanuel Baptist Church, Episcopal Church and Lutheran Church of the Resurrection;

Visit with leadership of CREDHO, Episcopal Social Action agency;

Visit to San Jose de la Montana, Refuge for Displaced persons;

Dinner with Student Christian Movement leaders;

Meeting with leadership of Emmanuel Baptist Church;

Meeting with Socorro Juridico, A Roman Catholic Legal Aid organization;

Conversation with Dr. Ricardo Stein, Professor at Central American University;

Meeting with ASESAH, an ecumenical humanitarian relief agency;

Meeting with the Human Rights Commission;

Meeting with the Committee of Mothers and Relatives of Disappeared persons;

Meeting with Lutheran Church of the Resurrection leadership;

Dinner with Ambassador Deane Hinton, U.S. Ambassador to El Salvador along with four senior Embassy staff members;

Meeting with Baptist Association leadership;

Conversation with Society of Jesus Leadership;

Meeting with Roman Catholic Apostolic Administrator Msgr. Arturo Rivera y Damas, together with Msgr. Ricardo Urioste, Vicar General of the Archdiocese, and Father Fabian Amaya;

Meeting with pastors of several Pentecostal and evangelical denominations related to CESAD, a humanitarian relief agency, including the representative in El Salvador of the United Bible Societies.

Of necessity the delegation's visit was brief. We do not claim to have achieved a complete understanding of the complex facets of the El Salvador situation, or of the Christain community in that land. Inevitably every view of El Salvador is partial. We are conscious of the fact that we talked to only a limited number of persons, and we were not able to travel outside the capital city. We feel impelled to report some things we heard and make some recommendations to the NCCCUSA Governing Board.

Certain themes were repeatedly expressed to us:

A. REGARDING THE CURRENT SITUATION IN EL SALVADOR

1. El Salvador is a nation in which death is a pervasive and immediate reality. Assassinations, bombings, executions, disappearances, hunger, the destruction of communities, the dismemberment of economic and social life at their very roots—all these and more are part of daily life. The people live in agony. Unspeakable suffering is everywhere.

2. The situation in El Salvador is deteriorating. Since October 15, 1979, when a military Junta overthrew the presidency of General Carlos Humberto Romero, the increased dominance of the military and increased guerrilla activity have been accompanied by widespread terror throughout the country. We heard repeatedly of governmental decrees issued during the last two years which, as one observer stated, progressively reduced the "political space" in the nation to a point where rational political processes are impossible and legal redress for criminal and civil wrongs is virtually unavailable.

3. The violation of human rights is commonplace and constant. The legal system is practically inoperative. Investigation of murder, torture and major violations of persons and property, is not forthcoming. The grossest excesses go uninvestigated and unpunished. The fate of most persons is left to the whim of the military, paramilitary and security forces. We heard widespread agreement that by far most of the violence directed against persons, as contrasted with sabotage and property damage, is perpetrated by government forces, or by forces in whose activities the government acquiesces.

4. The role of the United States in El Salvador is discussed everywhere. We heard repeated calls for the U.S. to withdraw its military and economic aid, which many believe prolongs repression and suffering. One observer said, "By prolonging the conflict the U.S. is causing the development of the very kind of government in El Salvador that it fears the most." We heard calls for the cessation of all outside support of the warring parties, whether from the U.S. or from socialist nations. Nevertheless, the massiveness of U.S. support is singled out over and over again for particular objection, though the U.S. Ambassador urges even greater U.S. assistance. The people of El Salvador want to be free to solve their own problems without outside pressures.

5. We heard great concern for people displaced within El Salvador by military operations of all parties, as for refugees outside the country. Once outside the country it is felt refugees have at least a chance of aid from international governmental and private agencies; however, within El Salvador the plight of displaced peoples, of whatever political complexion, is inadequately perceived and addressed by public or private agencies. Resources are needed inside El Salvador to assist these suffering persons and communities, and such resources will have to come from outside El Salvador.

B. REGARDING THE CHRISTIAN CHURCHES IN EL SALVADOR

1. The Christian churches in El Salvador playing a constructive role in the present situation—in analysis of the current reality and its root causes, in the provision of spiritual and legal assistance, in furnishing humanitarian aid to the suffering and in the search for a just and peaceful political and social order.

2. The Roman Catholic Church is under increasing attacks, misrepresenting its work and threatening physical harm and even death to clergy and lay leadership alike. The campaign has been stepped up during the past month.

3. All Christian churches in El Salvador, despite immense difficulties which include the assassination, disappearance, and imprisonment of leaders and members of many congregations, are witnessing magnificently to the Lordship of Jesus Christ. Adversity has driven them to the roots of the Gospel. The churches' ministry—prophetic and pastoral, challenging and compassionate, reflective and reconciling—takes on a compelling immediacy. We were impressed by the youth of many of the church leaders, and by the prominence of lay persons in the churches' witness. The unbiblical dichotomy between evangelization and social witness is resolved as the needs of the nation elicit a powerful ministry for justice and reconciliation. We thank God for the Christian community of El Salvador, and we believe it calls us to a more relevant witness in the United States, a witness of Biblical and theological depth in which we too often fail to engage. In El Salvador it is evident that the Gospel of Jesus Christ is indeed redemptive and liberating.

4. The Christian churches of El Salvador do not just talk about cooperation; they live it. Evangelical groups are working with CARITAS, a Roman Catholic agency. Baptists cooperate closely with Roman Catholics in ASESAH, the relief agency which the World Council of Churches and Church World Service support. The Student Christian Movement membership cuts across denominations.

5. Amazingly, many churches seem to be revitalized by current suffering and persecution. In some churches membership is growing. The congregations we visited were well attended. In the Roman Catholic church persons seeking Christian Vocations are growing in number.

6. The martyrdom and memory of the late Archbishop Oscar Arnulfo Romero is a powerful force of inspiration and example for the Christians of El Salvador, Protestant and Roman Catholic alike, referred to constantly. We give thanks for his remarkable ministry to the church and the nation, focused primarily on the poor and the oppressed.

C. REGARDING THE FUTURE OF EL SALVADOR

1. There is widespread belief that the El Salvador situation will continue to worsen in the immediate future. The governing Junta, with U.S. support, aims for a military solution, which still is thought by them to be obtainable despite the current military situation.

2. The election of delegates to a Constitutional Assembly, proposed for March, 1982 by the present Junta, is widely rejected as a formula for improvement of the political situation. Conditions for a representative election are not currently present. Even the U.S. Ambassador, in a press interview on October 27, stated that at present the conditions for such elections do not exist, though he hoped that possibly they might exist five months from now. We heard little or no hope for a political resolution along these lines; on the contrary, there was much rejection of this proposed political process.

3. We heard a strong call for dialogue or negotiation between the contending forces in El Salvador. Currently the Junta, with U.S. support, rejects dialogue or negotiation with representatives of the forces opposed to the government. The attitude of the U.S government is key to the development of a dialogue or negotiation process. We are aware of some recent initiatives in the U.S. Senate which might encourage the negotiation or dialogue, and these hold out some promise of movement in a positive direction. Repeatedly we heard of the sheer tiredness of the people of El Salvador, their sense of helplessness, their revulsion at the continuing death and suffering, and their hope that military confrontation and repression will end. Face to face dialogue and negotiation to which representatives opposed to the government say they are open, is thought by many to offer some hope in what now is seemingly intractable military confrontation.

In the light of our experience in El Salvador, we make the following recommendations to the NCCCUSA Governing Board at its meeting in Cleveland, Ohio, on November 4-5, 1981:

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE CHURCHES

1. We urge the Governing Board, its member denominations, and related ecumenical bodies and their congregations and members, to pray for the suffering people of El Salvador, and for a prompt, peaceful and just resolution of the conflict in El Salvador.

2. We urge the Governing Board, its member denominations and related ecumenical bodies, to continue and increase the provisions of humanitarian assistance to the people of El Salvador and to refugees from that nation. In particular we urge greater support be channeled to meet the needs of persons displaced by military operations of the contending parties who are victims of the war and repression, inside El Salvador itself. We believe Church World Service offers an excellent channel for such ecumenical support.

3. We urge the Governing Board, its member denominations and related ecumenical bodies, to provide increased information to church members and the public at large regarding the present situation in El Salvador—its history, the issues at stake, the suffering of the people, the role of the churches, and the possibilities for a just resolution of the conflict in the near future. The plight of undocumented refugees from El Salvador who have come to the United States should receive special understanding and attention. We urge that insofar as possible the views of Christian church constituencies in El Salvador be communicated widely.

4. We urge the Governing Board, its member denominations and related ecumenical bodies, to support the efforts of international organizations, both ecclesiastical and secular (such as the World Council of Churches and Amnesty International, and the NCCCUSA Human Rights office) which endeavor to publicize the status of human rights violations in El Salvador on the basis of reliable evidence, thus to keep the light of international concern focused on El Salvador.

5. We urge the Governing Board, its member denominations and related ecumenical bodies to press upon the government of the United States the recommendations listed below.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE GOVERNMENT OF THE UNITED STATES

1. We urge the government of the United States to seek a negotiated solution, rather than a military solution, to the conflict between the contending parties in El Salvador which might in time provide the just conditions necessary for fair and representative elections in that country.

2. We urge the government of the United States to afford political asylum or some special temporary status for refugees who flee El Salvador to the United States.

3. We urge the government of the United States to provide increased assistance to international organizations that help to meet the needs of Salvadoran refugees in other countries of this hemisphere.

4. We urge the government of the United States to take diplomatic initiatives to effect the termination of military assistance to all groups in El Salvador. In particular, we urge our government to terminate its present policy of providing military and economic assistance to the governing Junta of El Salvador.

(The Governing Board of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U.S.A., meeting in Cleveland, Ohio, November 5, 1981, approved as its own the above recommendations to the churches and to the United States government on pages 5 and 6.)●

ACT OF HEROISM IN PORT WASHINGTON

HON. JOHN LeBOUTILLIER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. LeBOUTILLIER. Mr. Speaker, the President pointed out in the state of the Union message that there are real heroes in this country, one only needs to look for them. I believe that there is a young man in my district that truly deserves to be called a hero.

In the early morning hours of January 17, 1982, Police Officer Stephen Cardello of the Port Washington Police Department was on patrol on Roslyn W. Shore Road in Port Washington. He observed an auto accident at the stated location and called for assistance as one of the autos had burst into flames.

As the Daily News reported, Police Officer Cardello quickly went to the aid of the passengers in the burning auto. Both doors were jammed as a result of the accident. Officer Cardello broke the passenger door window with a fire extinguisher, wrenched the door open, and pulled out one of the passengers. He then returned to the burning auto where he managed to free the operator of the auto who was dazed and bleeding.

At this time passing motorists stopped to assist. Officer Cardello instructed them to move the accident victims away from the burning auto which he feared would explode at any moment.

For a third time Officer Cardello returned to the burning auto, and although he was suffering from smoke inhalation himself managed to free a third victim. A fourth victim who was pinned in the auto, which was a two-door sedan, died despite Officer Cardello's attempts of rescue.

The Port Washington Mail & Reporter observed that Port Washington Police Chief Edmund Swiecki verbally applauded Officer Cardello's heroism, stating "That the officer had to break open the windows, because the doors were sealed, to drag the injured people out." The chief added "That Cardello did a fabulous job without thinking of his own safety but aware of the possibility of an explosion ordered the young people helping him to stand away while he brought the injured out to safety."

This courageous act by Officer Cardello deserves the highest praise. He unwittingly risked his life to save others and therefore has earned the title of hero. I am proud that such an individual resides in my district. His action should serve as an inspiration and model for others:

[From the Port Washington (N.Y.) Mail & Reporter, Jan. 21, 1982]

HERO POLICEMAN PULLS THREE FROM BLAZING CAR CRASH

(By Jackie Farrell)

A 31-year-old Bayside man, trapped in his father's car after it had been hit from behind, was killed when the car exploded at about 12:45 a.m., Sunday, January 17 on Roslyn West Shore Road.

Port Washington Police Officer Stephen Cardello, who was driving south on the road, stopped at the scene and tried to free the other passengers in both cars. Assisted by four teenagers who stopped their cars after witnessing the accident, Officer Cardello is credited with saving the lives of at least three of the six injured in the rear-end collision.

According to the police, Jeffrey Zagelbaum, 31, was pinned inside the car that had been driven by his father, Benjamin Zagelbaum, 68, and was northbound on West Shore Road when it was hit from behind by a car operated by Arthur Garry, 18, of 24 Prospect Avenue, Port Washington. Cause of the crash is being investigated, police said.

Pulled from the debris prior to the Zagelbaum car explosion, were Mildred Zagelbaum, 60, and Deanna Stilow, 35, of Richmond Hill, who was said to be the young Zagelbaum's girlfriend. The elder Zagelbaum and Miss Stilow were admitted to St. Francis Hospital with head lacerations and multiple injuries. Both were listed in stable condition. Zagelbaum's wife also was treated at St. Francis Hospital for cuts and bruises and released, police said.

Two passenger's in Garry's car, Christoperh Allan, 17, of 16 Monfort Road and Edwin Mora, 17, of 704 Port Washington Boulevard, who were pulled out from Garry's car, were treated for cuts and bruises at St. Francis Hospital and released.

The Port Washington teenagers who assisted Officer Cardello are Joseph Timpare, Robert Nash, Joseph Frappaolo and Stephen Zaccherio.

Officer Cardello joined "Port's Finest" in September, 1981. An Air Force veteran, he lives in Ronkonkoma, with his wife, Nancy, and their two children, Stephen, five, and Nicole, three years old. The young couple, married ten years, were childhood sweethearts and graduated from West Islip High School. Officer Cardello is also an alumnus of Suffolk Community College.

Port Washington Police Chief Edmund Swiecki verbally applauded Officer Cardello's heroism, stating that the officer had to break open the windows because the doors were sealed, in order to drag out the injured people. The chief added that Cardello did a fabulous job without thinking of his own safety but aware of the possibility of an explosion ordered the young people helping him to stand away while he brought out the injured to safety.

[From the Port Washington (N.Y.) News, Jan. 21, 1982]

PORT COP, PORT YOUTHS SAVE 3 FROM FLAMING CAR

"Right from the beginning this kid impressed everybody around here. It's no surprise to me that he would do something like this," said Port Washington Police Chief Edmond Swiecki of a new police officer who risked his life this week to save three people from a burning car.

Police Officer Steven Cardello, 29, who was sworn into the Port Washington Police Dapartment in April, will probably be cited for heroism by his department.

Cardello was on a routine patrol on Sunday at 12:45 a.m. when he saw an accident on Roslyn West Shore Road. He requested an ambulance, fire trucks, rescue tools, and assistance.

A car driven by Benjamin Zagelbaum, 68, of Flushing was going north on Roslyn West Shore Road that dark, cold icy night when his car was hit in the rear by a car driven by Joseph Garry, 18, of 24 Prospect Ave. Zagelbaum's car caught fire and Cardello immediately tried to get out the four people in it.

Both doors were jammed, so he broke the window of the passenger door with a fire extinguisher, opened this door, and pulled out Mildred Zagelbaum, 60, also of Flushing. By this time, Cardello was joined by Joseph Frappaolo of 22 Vanderventer Ave. and Stephen Zaccherio, another Port youth, who took Mrs. Zagelbaum from Officer Cardillo and moved her away from the burning car.

Police said flames were coming out of the back of the car and the dashboard. Cardello told the two teenagers to get away from the car because he was afraid it would explode. But that did not deter Cardello from pulling Zagelbaum, who was dazed and bleeding from the head, out from behind the steering wheel.

Meanwhile, two other Port teenagers, Joseph Timpone and Robert Nash, came along and helped the three people in the other car. Then Nash helped Cardello get Deana Stilow, 35, of Richmond Hills, from the back seat. The Zagelbaums' son, Jeffrey, 31, was pinned in the back seat crying for help. Before Cardello could free him, he became silent, apparently dead.

Later, his body was removed by Port Washington Fire Department volunteers, who had to use hydraulic tools to do so.

Zagelbaum was taken to St. Francis Hospital in serious condition with multiple injuries. His wife was also taken there, treated for leg injuries, and released. Stilow was taken to St. Francis, where she is listed in fair condition with two broken legs and multiple pelvic fractures.

Also taken to St. Francis were the three persons in the second car, who were treated for bruises and released. In addition to the driver, the car was occupied by Christopher Allen of 16 Monfort Rd. and Edwin Mora of 704 Port Washington Boulevard.

Police Officer Cardello was treated at North Shore University Hospital for smoke inhalation and was then released. He lives in Ronkonkoma.●

TRIBUTE TO THE MEMORY OF WINFRED JACKSON

HON. RICHARD C. SHELBY

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. SHELBY. Mr. Speaker, the city of Midfield in Alabama's Seventh Congressional District, suffered a great loss with the death of its mayor, Winfred Jackson. It is my privilege today to offer a tribute to the memory of this wonderful man.

Not many people achieve the measure of admiration and respect that Mayor Winfred Jackson enjoyed. He earned that admiration and respect because he genuinely cared about people and about the welfare of his community.

He was a rarity—a man who had the vitality and know-how to be extremely effective in getting things done, yet warmth and sensitivity that made him a beloved leader.

Winfred Jackson was serving his second term as mayor of the suburb just west of Birmingham. He was first elected mayor in 1976 after serving on the city council. He was reelected in 1980 and had served 1 year of his second term before his death.

Mayor Jackson will be remembered for his outstanding achievements and accomplishments during his years of public service. Since he became mayor, the city has divided the police and fire departments, previously overseen by one man, and hired its first paid fire chief. A fire station was added in the Highlands area of the city and sewer work was begun in areas that did not have this service. In recent months, he had focused on keeping the city's finances in working fiscal shape.

Jackson, a band booster, was "the kind of man who was up before dawn to see the Midfield High School Band off on a trip or who was going with them even when his children weren't in the band," said Superintendent of Education Robert Bumpus.

He was recently promoted to transportation supervisor at United States Steel. He had worked there since serving in the Air Force during the Korean conflict.

Surviving are his wife, Martha; two daughters, Wendy and Judy; and two sons, Kelly and Robbey.

Mayor Winfred Jackson's life should serve as a memorial to him for all time in Midfield, for he truly devoted it to serving the people that he loved and cared for. He left many fond memories and I am sure that this fine, outstanding gentleman will never be forgotten.

Mr. Speaker, it is indeed an honor for me to share this tribute with my colleagues in the House of Representatives. He will be deeply missed by me and all others who were touched by his wonderful life.●

TRIBUTE TO RICHARD BOLLING

HON. LARRY WINN, JR.

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 28, 1982

● Mr. WINN. Mr. Speaker, the U.S. House of Representatives is losing a great man with the retirement of DICK BOLLING. Congressman BOLLING has represented the Fifth District in Missouri with distinction for 34 years and we in the Kansas City metropolitan area will miss him. DICK BOLLING interjects a degree of honesty and integrity into the Congress not often seen in one Representative. You always know where Congressman BOLLING stands on the important issues of the day and how those issues affect his constituents in the Kansas City area.

I feel very privileged to know DICK BOLLING and to have worked as closely as I have with him over the years. I have learned a great deal from his vast knowledge of the issues, as well as his well-renowned expertise in parliamentary procedures. In fact, I believe Representative BOLLING will go down in legislative history as one of the finest parliamentarians ever. Despite his nationwide reputation as a lawmaker, he never forgot the little guy in his home district.

DICK BOLLING's career in the House has been a distinguished one. He saw eight Presidents in the White House during his tenure and eventually became one of the most effective Members of the House. He became an effective Congressman because of his knowledge of the issues. DICK BOLLING is also a hard worker and anyone who has served in this great body of decisionmaking knows the value of good, old-fashioned homework. We, in the Kansas City area, are especially appreciative of DICK's efforts. He is a man who commands an enormous amount of attention for the metropolitan area and used his well-earned clout in the Congress to help his home district. When he speaks, we all listen.

DICK BOLLING wrote two books on the House of Representatives. "House Out of Order" and "Power in the House" were insightful looks at one of the largest and most complex representative bodies in the free world. These books are, I believe, must reading for serious students of our governmental process.

DICK BOLLING's ability to compromise with his colleagues is well known and appreciated by Members of both parties. Indeed, we on the other side of the aisle appreciate his fairness and correctness in dealing with debate on the floor and testimony before the House Rules Committee, which he chaired.

I remember DICK BOLLING's instrumental efforts in the passage of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 and his work in the making of the 1964 Civil Rights Act was admirable.

DICK BOLLING came to the Kansas City area following World War II. He initially was at Fort Leavenworth in the Command General Staff School. Later, he attended what was then known as the University of Kansas City. Congressman BOLLING was first elected to the House in 1948 and during his 34 years of service, he managed to steer clear of machine politics in Kansas City, Mo. He also served on the Kansas City, Missouri School Board.

Many people in Kansas City remember DICK's work in flood control following the devastating flood of 1951 in the metropolitan area. Much of what DICK accomplished in Congress back then is still important in the fight against severe flooding.

I will miss DICK BOLLING; both as a legislator and a friend. I wish him well in his pursuits outside Congress and I hope that he continues to be a commentator on our representative form of government.●

HUNGARIANS' SOLIDARITY WITH POLAND

HON. BERNARD J. DWYER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. DWYER. Mr. Speaker, I commend to my colleagues a most succinct and telling statement of "solidarity" in the truest sense of the word.

Several representatives of the Hungarian-American community have joined together to express their support for the people of Poland and vehement opposition to Soviet repression there. Their resolution, "Hungarians' Solidarity With Poland," follows:

HUNGARIANS' SOLIDARITY WITH POLAND

We, the undersigned Hungarians in the United States, raise our voices in solidarity with the people of Poland. We know from the experience of Hungarian history that:

Enforcing order by outlawing freedom is nothing but legalized mass violence;

The occupation of a country by foreign troops against the will of the indigenous population is nothing but terrorism on an international scale;

Holding individuals captive for their beliefs is nothing but the perpetuation of Hitler's fascism and Lenin's, Stalin's communism;

Condoning such acts as the above is nothing but aiding and abetting crimes against humanity, as established by international law, including the Helsinki Accords.

We, therefore, accuse the Soviet Union and the present rulers of Poland of grave violation of human rights, and demand that they immediately enable the development of legal order and democracy in Poland by:

Withdrawing all occupying Soviet troops;

Releasing all detained political prisoners;

Holding free elections to establish a truly representative, democratic government of, for and by the people of Poland.

In the spirit of our peoples' historic friendship, we express our solidarity with the Polish nation's struggle for freedom and our hope that there will come a time when all the peoples of East Central Europe can live their lives free from foreign occupation and dictatorial governments, free to build the social order of their own choice, by means that assure human rights.●

THIRTEENTH DISTRICT REPUBLICAN MESSAGE TO PRESIDENT BREZHNEV

HON. GEO. W. CROCKETT, JR.

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday February 9, 1982

● Mr. CROCKETT. Mr. Speaker, I have recently been contacted by the chairperson of the Republican Committee in the 13th District of Michigan, asking that I share with my colleagues in the RECORD that organization's "open letter" to President Brezhnev of the Soviet Union regarding its foreign policies.

Although fewer than 8 percent of my district voters are Republicans, I believe that the views expressed by Mrs. Letty Gupta, the chairperson of the 13th District Republican Committee, deserve to be heard. I would like to include them at this point in the RECORD for the benefit of my colleagues:

RUSSIA PURSUES PRIMITIVE FOREIGN POLICY

AN OPEN LETTER TO LEONID ILYICH BREZHNEV

(By Letty Gupta)

DEAR PRESIDENT BREZHNEV: The Soviet-instigated Polish crisis is acquiring an ominous form and appears to be growing into a cause for collision between the two superpowers, all because the Kremlin refuses to abandon her feral pursuit of world domination.

The Kremlin continues to boldly deny responsibility for the subjugation of Poland, and to conceal her covert invasion under a barrage of accusations aimed at Washington. You are edgy and anxious to convince yourself that people around the globe can forever be fooled into remaining passive while the Kremlin takes over country after country and turns it into a cage for humans.

Were the Kremlin an innocent observer, as you want the world to believe, you would have had no hesitation in heeding President Reagan's call to join us in a humane partnership for peace to help restore to the oppressed Polish people the limited freedoms they enjoyed prior to the December 1981 military crackdown by Gen. Wojciech Jarvzelski.

Not so. The Kremlin responded to our peace overtures by resurrecting cold war tactics and by tossing out concocted accusations like, "The United States has a history of open and secret interference in the internal affairs of Poland."

The truth is that Polish history and folklore are crowded with accounts of Russian atrocities and invasions. For centuries, Russia has interfered in Poland's internal affairs, confiscated her civil liberties, annexed her territory, wrecked her economy, and generally played havoc with the lives of her people.

There are nations anchored in oceans, fastened to mountains and bounded by rivers that despite an occasional intrusion by outside forces go on providing a measure of safety, security, and stability for their inhabitants. But Poland, lacking in natural barriers, has been an easy target for foreign invaders, particularly Prussia to the West and Russia to the East.

For instance, in 1733 Russia invaded Poland and set off the War of the Polish Succession, which led to the confirmation of the incompetent August III as king of Poland. August III, a Russian puppet, brought anarchy to Poland.

In 1763, Russia again intervened militarily to ensure the election of Stanislaw August Poniatowski as king of Poland. This Soviet action led to rebellion and to the formation of an anti-Poniatowski, anti-Russian confederation within Poland. Four years of civil war brought nationwide devastation.

In 1772, Russia, claiming that the Poles could not govern themselves, dismembered Poland. Together with Prussia and Austria, Russia annexed nearly 30 percent of Poland's territory—known as the First Partition. With what was left of their nation, the resolute Poles regrouped and the pro-Polish party won a clear majority in the Sejm. Once in power, the Polish people demanded the immediate withdrawal of Russian troops. In the Sejm, the Poles passed the Constitution of the Third of May (1791), thus becoming the second nation in the world, after the United States, to have a written Constitution.

Intolerant and fearful of the freedoms the Polish people had legislated for themselves, Russia again invaded Poland in 1792, and with ally Prussia affected the Second Partition, thereby annexing another large portion of Poland. Renewed unrest and an armed insurrection rapidly grew into a national movement under the leadership of Tadeusz Kosciuszko. Heavily armed Russian troops leaped at Poland and squashed yet another attempt by the Polish people to free themselves from Russian tyranny.

In 1795, Russia, Prussia, and Austria participated in the Third Partition and divided among themselves the remainder of Poland.

Poland was wiped off the world map. The Russians rejoiced in the belief that for future generations Poland would exist only as a paragraph in high school history books.

The Russians were wrong. The Polish people's relentless struggle for a free homeland resulted in the rebirth of Poland in 1918. But, the peace Poland craved was still not at hand. World War I and II took a heavy toll on Poland's frontiers and left her in ruins. Adolf Hitler too had hated Poland and had vowed, "I shall make her [Poland] a long forgotten name on ancient maps."

After World War II, as a result of the Yalta and Potsdam Conferences, Poland, after centuries of bloodshed, returned to the smaller geographical borders she had occupied eight hundred years earlier. In the 16th century, the golden age for Poland, she had actually captured Moscow and by the Truce of Deulino in 1619 she was given substantial portions of Russian territory including the great frontier fortress of Smolensk. At the peak of her power, Poland had stretched out over territories three times her present size. Except for that brief glimpse of glory, every Polish attempt to gain freedom met with merciless Russian persecution.

To cite an example, of the Insurrection of 1863, Polish historian Josef Szujski writes: "Russian atrocities have no limits; in Warsaw the Cossacks butcher children, sack the houses, loot from top to bottom, destroy collections of art, libraries, put the torch to manuscripts—this in the marvelous palace of Zamoyski—throw through the window a cradle and a child, and Chopin's piano, which, cast on the sidewalk, utters one last cry of despair . . . A terrible silence falls over Poland. Europe, as always, does not budge, faithful to its policy of neutrality, adopted since the Partitions, since the Insurrection of 1830 . . ."

Now the year is 1982. Europe still remains neutral. Russia still persecutes Poland and arranges her internal affairs through surrogates. Once again, Russia is sowing the seeds of anarchy and civil war in Poland and elsewhere. Easily, the Soviet Union is the world's number one mischief-maker. All over the globe, Soviet scheming and megolamania are responsible for human despair. In Asia the Kremlin overtly occupies Afghanistan; in Europe the Kremlin covertly occupies Poland; in the Middle East the Kremlin is creating internal and external tensions, with war as the ultimate aim, through her surrogates Hafez Assad of Syria, Muammar Qadhafi of Libya, Yassar Arafat of the PLO; in Central America the Kremlin is inciting internal unrest through Cuban-trained Sandinista leftists in Nicaragua, the Mayan Indians in Guatemala, the Marxist guerrillas in El Salvador, Honduras, Costa Rica, Panama, and Mexico.

Humankind is hemorrhaging from the wounds of war. In other lands, tyrannical leaders are born once in a long time but Russia seems to produce them with astonishing regularity. Sooner or later there will have to be a mighty international movement to either isolate and impeach the Soviet Union or to civilize and humanize her leaders. There is no room in our world for a nation that pursues a primitive foreign policy and wants to return 20th century civilization to the dark ages of oppression.●

DICK BOLLING

HON. ALBERT GORE, JR.

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 28, 1982

● Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, there are many within this body that have had the pleasure of working with DICK BOLLING for more years and on more legislative initiatives than I have. But there are none that can claim a greater respect for his abilities and his judgment.

He is someone to whom I have turned often for advice, and he has always been willing to take the time to listen and to counsel.

That he is a man of immense intellect and talent is already legend in Congress. He is also a man of great personal courage. Combining these qualities with a clear vision of the Nation's future has made him a powerful force in Congress. DICK BOLLING has been way ahead of his time in espousing ideas and legislative proposals that would slowly, but inevitably, take root years later.

When DICK BOLLING retires, I will lose the association of a friend and an adviser. And this body will be losing one of its finest and most dedicated public servants. I join my colleagues in wishing him good health and much happiness in his new life.●

DICK BOLLING

HON. FREDERICK W. RICHMOND

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 28, 1982

● Mr. RICHMOND. Mr. Speaker, our brilliant colleague and the very best friend a man could have, DICK BOLLING, has announced that he will retire from Congress after 34 years of distinguished service.

As deeply as we revere DICK BOLLING as a friend, we also respect him as a leader in this House. DICK has always given unselfishly of his time, counsel and vast experience to his colleagues. He is a consummate strategist who possesses a complete mastery of parliamentary procedures.

With his remarkable intellect and encyclopedic knowledge of congressional operations DICK has led the way to countless reforms. I am sure that most of our colleagues have devoured DICK's excellent books on how Congress works and how it should work. These books epitomize DICK BOLLING's knack for incisive analysis and thoughtful recommendations.

DICK BOLLING cares about Congress and the millions of people we represent. Throughout his exceptional career in public service, his intellectual gifts and parliamentary skills have been focused on making the Government more responsive and effective. Among his many outstanding achievements is designing the Federal budget process and devising a plan for reorganization of the Federal Government.

We will sorely miss DICK when he retires at the end of the year, but his influence on this House and our Nation will long be felt.

We will miss his wit, his understanding and his wise counsel.

Mr. Speaker, I consider myself fortunate to serve with DICK BOLLING and to know he is my friend.●

THE 100 DAYS OF ANDREAS PAPANDREOU

HON. BENJAMIN S. ROSENTHAL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. ROSENTHAL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to bring attention to an article entitled "The 100 Days of Andreas Papandreou" which recently appeared in Newsday. This article, written by Adamantia Pollis, chairwoman of the graduate faculty department of political science at the New School for Social Research, is an excellent and thoughtful review of the present situation in Greece.

Having recently returned from meeting with Andreas Papandreou in Greece, I can personally attest to Ms. Pollis' accurate account of the state of Greek relations with the West, and in particular with the United States. The author also captures the essential dilemma which faces Mr. Papandreou and the new Greek Government both domestically and in regard to future relations with Washington. The points brought out in Ms. Pollis' piece become increasingly significant in light of recent reports that the administration is proposing a major increase in foreign aid to Turkey. I hope each of my colleagues will carefully review the article, which follows:

[From Newsday]

THE 100 DAYS OF ANDREAS PAPANDREOU

(By Adamantia Pollis)

A little more than 100 days ago, the Greeks overwhelmingly rejected a largely pro-American government and voted into power Andreas Papandreou, who ran on the decidedly anti-American platform of his Panhellenic Socialist Movement (PASOK).

Startling as this transformation may appear, it has long been in the making. For decades, deep currents have been running counter to the superficial pledges of Greece's loyalty to the United States and the facade of economic prosperity.

The imposition of military rule on Greece in 1967 by three colonels, George Papadopoulos pre-eminent among them, intensified these underlying trends.

Anti-Americanism became more widespread and the need for drastic socio-economic reforms became more apparent. Support of the junta by the United States and American acquiescence (some say support) in the Greek-sponsored coup against President Archbishop Makarios of Cyprus in 1974, which precipitated an invasion of Cyprus by Turkey only to be followed by Secretary of State Henry Kissinger's "tilt" towards Ankara, stimulated the rising tide of anti-Americanism in Athens. Only foreign investors and the Greek industrial class, for whom the junta's policies created vast opportunities for excessive and quick profits, supported the Greek colonels and their United States protectors.

The Cyprus fiasco triggered the collapse of the military dictatorship in 1974. Konstantinos Karamanlis, who had been premier of Greece in the 1950s and early '60s, flew back from his exile in Paris to take control of the government with his rightist New Democracy Party amidst a euphoria that had not been witnessed since the end of World War II. Though the junta's collapse returned to power the ruling class of the 1950s and early '60s, the damage to the old order was irreparable.

The veneer of economic prosperity had crumbled. The Cyprus problem remained unresolved and the stalemate—40 per cent of the island occupied by Turkish troops—served as a clear reminder of the perfidy of the junta and its American allies.

Despite Karamanlis' rhetoric, he began almost immediately to transform Greek foreign policy. In fact the foreign policy of the present Socialist government is only a more dramatic and forceful articulation of 1974 rightist initiatives. For though he had been a loyal friend of the United States when he was first premier, Karamanlis felt personally betrayed by the United States' support of the junta. Buttressed by public opinion, Karamanlis gave vent to his feelings by withdrawing Greece from the military wing of NATO.

His successor George Rallis, of the same party, also asserted independence from Washington. In negotiating with the United States over the American bases in Greece, he insisted upon increased Greek control and more restrictions on their use by the United States. At the same time he refused to make concessions to United States-supported Turkish demands on territorial waters and air space control over the Aegean. Moreover, he agreed to repair Soviet merchantmen and naval supply ships in Greek yards, though he later canceled this agreement under U.S. pressure. Thus Greece began to loosen its ties to the United States.

The development of a new, independent foreign policy, however, did not save Rallis from repudiation by the Greek electorate on Oct. 18. Greek voters were primarily motivated by the government's failure to solve pressing domestic social and economic problems. Although in the past few decades consumer goods have been plentiful, the overall quality of life had badly deteriorated. Urban migration into Athens nearly doubled its population in little less than 20 years. Without any urban planning, buildings went up randomly; some areas have no sewage system. Massive air pollution hangs in a cloud over the city for weeks at a time. The Parthenon, crumbling in the noxious air, has become a symbol of the decay.

The oil crisis of 1973 wrecked the Greek economy. Inflation began to run wild, income inequalities worsened, unemployment began to be a problem as the demand for Greek workers in western European factories ended, while underemployment, a chronic ailment of the Greek economy, increased. The crying need for structural reforms, for rational economic planning and for policies that would provide Greece a measure of protection from the vagaries of international trade and multinationals became apparent to more and more Greeks.

The ruling New Democracy Party proved incapable of adopting the fundamental changes essential for the revitalization of Greek society and its stagnant economy. Its commitment to the status quo and its authoritarian tradition made it unwilling to share or redistribute power. The party was unresponsive to many legitimate groups within Greek society and to the demands of their representatives; trade unions were not voluntary and free but state organs. Inequitable taxation policies persisted. Monetary and credit policies beneficial to the economic oligarchy and extensive privileges to multinationals remained sacrosanct. No substantive social initiatives were undertaken.

Change was the cry of the Socialist movement, PASOK, in Greece during the election campaign, and the restructuring of Greek institutions by adopting radically reformist policies has already begun. A foreign policy that steers clear, to the degree possible, of both the western and eastern blocs is beginning to be evident. Though the specifics of Papandreou's foreign policy have not been made completely clear during its 106 days in power, it is obvious that in formulating policies to further Greek national interests, he is not constrained by Karamanlis' world view.

For Papandreou and the Socialists, Greece belongs to the Greeks. Although strategy is still being formulated, his determination to loosen ties with the Atlantic alliance and to keep his distance from Washington, to a far greater degree than Karamanlis did, seems a given. Papandreou, after all, is not beholden to the United States, which reviled him in the early 1960s. Among the primary objectives of the socialist government is the creation of a Greek nuclear-free zone and the gradual phasing out of American bases. He has, moreover, reinstated the Rallis agreement to repair Soviet vessels in Greek yards. The differences between the previous situation and this one is that much more publicity has been given to the Socialist move and that Papandreou will not cancel the agreement under American pressure.

Greece's main concern in foreign policy is Turkey and on this issue neither the United States nor NATO are seen as allies. Although much of Papandreou's preelection nationalist rhetoric and his militant anti-Turkish statements were designed to placate the Greek military, legitimate national interests are at stake. Turkey's demands for joint control with Greece over the NATO air flight command in the Aegean, her demands for extension of her territorial waters in an Aegean studded with Greek islands and her continued military occupation of part of Cyprus are all of primary concern to Athens.

Washington, wrestling with the loss of Iran, views Turkey as its staunchest ally and security partner in the Near East. The Reagan administration has reinforced this concern among the Greeks by providing the same support to the current Turkish military dictatorship that the Nixon administration had provided the Papadopoulos junta.

Greece's membership in the European Economic Community, or Common Market, is seen as imposing severe constraints on Greece's embarking on the extensive domestic reforms the electorate mandated the Socialists to undertake. In contrast to the dominant members of the EEC, Greece is not an advanced industrial state; therefore, the Socialists argue, an economically integrated EEC, while advantageous to the industrialized societies, will permanently relegate Greece to a peripheral, relatively underdeveloped position. Papandreou has moderated his stance on withdrawal from the EEC and now speaks of renegotiation of the entry agreement.

Unless a major external catastrophe befalls Greece, the Socialist government's success or failure will depend not on its foreign policy but on its domestic reforms; on its ability to revitalize Greek society, install a system of justice and greater equality, eliminate corruption and enable the people and workers to participate in decision making.

Decentralization of the highly concentrated bureaucratic structure is under way, as is the regionalization of economic planning and development. The ministries are being reorganized and the civil service revamped. Critical industries and credit facilities are being "socialized" (meaning that they will be government-owned with much worker participation in decision making). The tax system is being revised and the privileges of the elites are being eliminated. The power of the reactionary Greek Orthodox Church is being curtailed while the premier's American-born wife, Margaret, is in the forefront of moves to attain equality for women.

It is much too soon to pass judgment on the PASOK government. There has not been enough time for policies to be adopted and implemented. But it clearly reflects the aspirations of the Greek people.●

MORE ON COAL SLURRY PIPELINE LEGISLATION

HON. MORRIS K. UDALL

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, at the November hearing on H.R. 4230, the eminent domain legislation for coal slurry pipelines which I sponsored, the Reagan administration reversed the position of every prior administration since 1960, by establishing itself as an opponent of the bill. The administration's attitude that the bill posed a threat to States rights was correctly characterized in a recent Wall Street Journal editorial as "fallacious." Both the Wall Street Journal and the editors of Business Week have come out in favor of our bill as a necessary impetus for competition in the coal transport market. I would like to offer both the Journal editorial, which appeared in the January 27, 1982, edition, and the Business Week article which appeared in the November 30, 1981, edition, in support of our legislation:

[From the Wall Street Journal, Jan. 27, 1982]

DAMPENING THE COALS

Coal mining concerns and the railroads are locked in a classic feud pitting the principles of the competitive free market against the protection afforded by government regulation. The issue is whether pipelines should be allowed to compete with the railways for the expanding coal transport market. The Reagan administration, it's sad to say, is moving along the wrong track in this dispute.

The vast bulk of U.S. coal is moved by rail, at no little expense. For instance, railway charges to ship a load of coal from a Wyoming mine to a Texas utility are now about four times the price of the coal itself. Coal producers complain that they are "captive customers" to the railroads and would like to see competition in coal transport to help alleviate these costs.

One idea, which dates back more than 90 years, is to move coal by pipeline. Coal can be ground and mixed with a liquid—water, oil, methanol or even liquefied carbon dioxide from the coal itself—and the resulting slurry can be pumped through underground pipelines to utilities, industrial users and ships for export. Besides helping to develop our coal reserves, slurry pipelines could also provide direct and indirect savings in transportation costs, according to a 1980 study commissioned by the Energy Department. "To the extent that the threat of slurry pipeline competition acts to keep rail rates low, then savings can result even if coal is hauled by rail," it concludes.

The only coal pipeline now in operation runs from Arizona to Nevada and carries 4.8 million tons a year at a cost estimated at less than half the comparable rail shipment. There are tentative plans for another eight slurry lines, with a total capacity of over 150 million tons annually. However, work on these pipelines is being impeded by two major obstacles: inability to gain rights-of-way across the country's vast web of railway lines and the question of water availability in the West.

The federal government granted eminent domain authority to the railroads in the 1860s and 1870s to allow them to traverse land and thus to facilitate the growth of the West. The railways are blocking the entrance of slurry pipelines into the coal transport market by refusing them rights-of-way across railway property. Similar railway recalcitrance led to federal rights-of-way for petroleum pipelines during World War II and eminent domain authority has also been given to interstate gas pipelines and electric power lines.

The Reagan administration was asked to support legislation in Congress last year to permit coal slurries to cross railway lines. But Interior Secretary James Watt said the administration would not support granting eminent domain authority to the coal pipelines because it would violate states' rights. Mr. Watt's explanation was, in a word, fallacious.

All but one of the planned slurry pipelines would cut across state lines and therefore come under direct federal jurisdiction as interstate commerce. Besides, the only reason the coal producers are in this fix is the federal privileges granted to the railroads in the first place. The responsibility for granting rights-of-way to these slurry lines rests solely and squarely with the federal government, not in the state capitals.

A states' rights issue does arise, however, over the question of water availability. Here the legislation would limit the federal government's authority and would in effect give the governors veto power over coal lines based on water scarcity. This doesn't seem to bother the coal producers much. They figure they can probably find other liquids such as oil to convey the coal through the pipelines.

What really seems to be on the administration's mind is the worry that support of eminent domain for coal pipelines would be perceived in the West as federal infringement in the sensitive area of water rights, even though this is not truly the case. So the administration drew back from the issue by making this false plea for states' rights. In the meantime coal producers must cope with transportation bottlenecks, and the railways are asking the Interstate Commerce Commission to lift price regulations on coal exports. This too has the coal mine companies up in arms.

Congress will soon have a chance to redress the balance. The House Public Works Committee soon will take up the pipeline issue. (The House Interior Committee has already approved the eminent domain legislation.) We hope that Congress shows more concern than the administration for introducing competition in the coal transport market and thus, it's hoped, encourages further development of our vast coal reserves.

[From Business Week, Nov. 30, 1981]

AN UNREAL THREAT

In its concern for protecting states' rights, the Reagan Administration has backed away from supporting legislation to facilitate building coal-slurry pipelines. Although the pipelines offer the potential of considerable future cost savings, the Western railroads have successfully blocked their construction out of fear of the competition pipelines would bring to railroads in hauling coal. If the Administration is going to fulfill its commitment to develop energy and the use of coal instead of imported oil, it ought to reverse itself and help get the coal pipelines built.

At present eight privately funded slurry pipelines are stalled, and future ones will face similar obstacles. Representative Morris K. Udall (D-Ariz.) has drawn up legislation that would enable private pipeline developers to use federal "eminent domain" powers to supersede state laws and gain rights-of-way. The Administration fears that this feature violates its pledge to respect states' rights. It insists that it still favors the pipelines and that it intends to work at state levels to get them built.

What the Administration fails to see is that use of federal eminent domain does not challenge states' rights any more than the frequent state use of the same power challenges individual rights. The principle that public needs can take precedence over private interests, so long as those private interests are compensated for and protected by the right of appeal in court, is firmly established. The Administration should be thinking about the welfare of the country, not an unreal threat to states' rights.●

ONE APPROACH TO ARMS CONTROL NEGOTIATIONS

HON. ANTHONY C. BEILENSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, the San Francisco Chronicle recently ran an article calling for continuous, unlimited inspections of all American and Russian nuclear weapons installations by an "army of legal spies" from the other side.

The proposal is unusual and intriguing and one which its authors, Laurence Beilenson and S. T. Cohen, believe would be an important step toward preventing nuclear war. I recommend the article to my colleagues for their consideration.

HOW TO TELL IF MOSCOW REALLY WANTS ARMS CONTROL

(By Laurence W. Beilenson and S. T. Cohen)

A public offer from President Reagan to the Soviet Union proposing unlimited inspections of all nuclear weapons installations, known or suspected, of each side by the other would be the first sensible approach to arms control negotiations in the nuclear age.

The offer and its reception would allow each side to see the true face of the other. If accepted, the proposal would be the most important non-military step toward preventing a nuclear war since negotiations on the strategic arms limitations treaties (SALT) started. If rejected by the Soviet Union, this refusal might forge a national consensus for the United States to go on a SALT-free diet.

From the so-called Baruch plan advanced by the United States after World War II to the present, suspicion by each side about the good faith of the other has prevented effective nuclear arms control. The distrust has been fully warranted and still is.

Look at the prospect of war as a Russian commissar would. V. I. Lenin, the mentor of the Communist world, predicted that the struggle between the Communist and capitalist camps would be protracted, and the course of the long contest, the bourgeois nations would strive to prevent a Communist triumph by war against the U.S.S.R. Frightful armed clashes were inevitable, he declared.

England and France attacked the fledgling Soviet Union in 1918–20. Hitler's 1941 attack was the next such war. A good Leninist believes that a coalition of capitalist nations, let by the United States, will wage another war against the Russians whenever it sees the opportunity to success.

Glance at the history of bourgeois diplomacy and treaties as a Russsian commissar would. No student of the history of diplomacy can truthfully deny that its hallmarks have been chicanery and deceit. When, in 1913, Joseph Stalin likened honesty in bourgeois diplomacy to "dry water" or "wooden iron," he was not exaggerating; the record bore him out.

The history of treaties, the fruit of diplomacy, has been just as wretched. All nations, including the United States, have habitually broken their political treaties. The United States began early. John Jay, in the course of double-crossing France and breaking our Revolutionary-War treaty with it, said he would not "give a farthing for any parchment security whatever. They had never signified anything since the world began, when any prince of state, or either side, found it convenient to break through them."

And in the 20th century the bourgeois nations including the United States, have emulated Jay. In short, by the test of history a Russian commissar who trusted the pious protestations of the West would be an utter fool.

Now survey the situation as a realistic Western statesman. Karl Marx and Freidrich Engels in their 1848 "Communist Manifesto" "disdained" to conceal their aims, as has every Communist leader since, from Lenin through Leonid Brezhnev. They have declared their intention to place Communist parties in control of all governments.

Their primary tool has been, and is, internal subversion aided by external subversion from Communist bases already captured, but in the end, following Lenin, they believe the contest will be determined by war between the two ideological sides. They exalt violence as the only way to win, aided by deceit, which if to advance communism, is a positive virtue. The end justifies the means, whatever aids communism is right.

And what about Soviet diplomacy and treaties? In its short history the Soviet Union has followed or exceeded its bourgeois precursors in deceit and topped them as a treaty-breaker. From the record, any Western stateman who would trust the Russians deserves to be returned to private life by his countrymen.

With such a legacy of justified mistrust, how did arms control ever get off the ground? Up to Richard Nixon, every proposal for extensive arms control foundered on the demand by the United States for on-site inspections to verify compliance. Nixon offered the Congress and the American people the lure of a scientific marvel: national technical means of verification (scientific surveillance), which would make on-site inspections unnecessary.

Aided by the aura of detente and skillful advocacy by Henry Kissinger, SALT I was executed and ratified. With Kissinger still at the helm as secretary of state, Gerald Ford carried on at Vladivostok. Then Jimmy Carter, a man devoted to peace and to treaties as its instrument, signed SALT II and submitted it to the Senate.

There SALT II faced certain defeat. Although the opponents pointed out the deficiencies of national technical means of verification, probably they made more converts by their argument that the specific terms of the treaty were unfair to the United States. Outraged by the Soviet Union's invasion of Afghanistan, Jimmy Carter suspended consideration of SALT II. The treaties, however, are still before the Senate.

During the presidential campaign Ronald Reagan attacked SALT II, whereupon Carter depicted him as a warmonger. Realizing that many Americans associated treaties with peace and their absence with war—even though mistakenly—Reagan felt obliged to promise the resumption of arms negotiations. He will keep his promise and proceed in good faith. The question is: To what end?

According to the proponents of arms control, there are three purposes of SALT: peace, stopping the arms race, and saving money. From our own experience, none of these objectives has been accomplished. True, there has been no nuclear war between the Soviet Union and the United States, but neither was there a nuclear war before SALT.

Detente and SALT, according to Kissinger, were to induce Soviet restraint; this, he now concedes, has not happened. Neither talks nor treaties have stopped the Soviet nuclear buildup, which has proceeded steadily during all the SALT years. True, we didn't race; we ran in place. Although we spent less money when we were running in place than we would have if we had raced, the expense of pursuit will be higher than would have been the expense of keeping up.

Why then continue? Let no doughty cold warrior underestimate the sentiment in favor of peace in the United States and among our allies. And why not? Who wants to be killed? This has led to our SALT diet: Strong support for arms control by treaty.

From the beginning the advocates of arms control have occupied the high ground of peace. From this pinnacle, the most influential newspapers and network commentators have favored arms control. None of them probably believes that there will be total nuclear disarmament or that nuclear weapons will disappear from the Earth; but, they maintain, that is no reason not to attempt the control of nuclear arms.

Granted that there is a vast gulf between the Soviet Union and the United States and that their political competition will continue, nonetheless, they say, if the nuclear arms race continues to spiral, each side will achieve the power to destroy the other, which creates a mutual interest in preventing such a catastrophe. Let's try by more SALT.

Few of the proponents of SALT would place any faith in Soviet promises. They must therefore rely on the United States' ability to detect any Soviet violation, or at least any violation that would be harmful to the United States.

Has SALT I been broken? There is not the slightest doubt that Soviet camouflage has been a breach of the provision prohibiting interference with the other side's verification by national technical means of verification. Whether there have been other breaches is a matter of argument because nobody knows.

The difficulty goes deeper. We have drafted the treaties according to ur ability to count rather than our need to know. We can count launchers which we can see with our eyes in the skies, so the treaties are based on launchers rather than missiles. But in order not to fall behind, what each side needs to know is the total nuclear strength of the other. This is impossible to discover through national technical means of verification.

Certainly as a minimum the United States needs to know how many missiles the Soviet Union has. But no arms-control advocate can truthfully say that we can count missiles. Former Secretary of Defense Harold Brown, an advocate of SALT, admits that the Soviets have a refire capability and may have missiles to refire, but he argued, the refire process is so slow that the launchers would be destroyed before they could be refired.

Brown's contention misses the point. First, there is no law of nature which says that the Soviets are compelled to fire their missiles from silos. They can be fired from the canisters in which they are kept. Second, Soviet ICBMs, by the thousands, can be concealed in warehouses and underground, and we have no way of knowing. They, too could be moved into the open and launched.

If we cannot count missiles, we cannot count warheads, and they also can be attached to the missiles underground. For cruise missiles, national technical means of verification, cannot ascertain their number, their range, or whether they are nuclear or conventional. We can't check quality.

Without inspection, SALT hinders peace. The best deterrent for each side is a large number of mobile ICBMs, widely dispersed. Everybody agrees that mobile missiles cannot be adequately detected by national technical means of verification. The answer of the arms controllers is not to have mobile missiles because they interfere with SALT, the same argument made against cruise missiles. All of which leads to this pertinent question: Do we want deterrence and peace or do we want SALT? Arms control treaties have no virtue except as a means to an end.

Of course, even on-site inspections can be fooled; for how can an inspector know whether he is on the right site? Cruise missiles and mobile missiles could easily escape detection.

If the Soviet Union and the United States truly want nuclear peace, each will be willing to have the other side know what the other has. The proposal that the president would make would be for unlimited continuous inspection of all nuclear installations, known or suspected, of the other without notice, day or night, by an army of legal Russian spies for our installations and an army of legal American spies for theirs.

The Inspections would not be limited to declared nuclear installations because nuclear weapons may be concealed elsewhere. The offer would make acceptance by the Soviet Union a precondition of arms control negotiations. Each side would have to give a complete report to the other of all nuclear weapons. Then the legal spies would arrive and have the access required. They would stay in the other country with replacements from time to time. Meanwhile, negotiations could proceed and be continuous, with treaties resulting from time to time, subject to cancellation on short notice.

The unlimited inspections would not cease with the treaty. They would go on subject to cancellation with an agreed period for notice. The inspections would be a greater service to peace than any treaty. A treaty can be broken in an instant. The inspections would provide confidence in the other side's intentions. Even such an arrangement possibly can be foiled if loopholes are allowed, and it is of the essence that the proposal not be hedged in any way; no limit on inspections and no notice required.

Objectors will say: "This is just a ploy to kill arms control negotiations." The reason we settled for scientific surveillance was that the Russians wouldn't permit on-site inspections. They are hardly likely to permit an army of bourgeois spies.

The way to find out is to offer. If the offer is accepted, the chance of nuclear peace is enhanced. If the offer is rejected, we'll know that for the Soviet Union arms control is a game to gain an advantage and act accordingly.

The offer would unite the country. The American people have far more sense than their guardians give them credit for. If the president makes the offer and the Soviet Union rejects it, the president can forge a national consensus for peace through armed strength rather than through paper chains.

Nor is the offer certain to be rejected. It has far more chance than the linkage so often suggested. The rationale for the Soviet dictatorship rests on its necessity for promoting world revolution and world communism. That is its Leninist mission. To expect the Soviet Union to relinquish this role as the price of a SALT treaty is to expect shrimps to whistle.

Leninism, however, does not adopt war as the main tool. Lenin expected a major war with the capitalist camp, but during his reign he avoided war, and he counseled his successors to avoid wars that risked the Soviet base for subversion. Nuclear war would be such a war. Constantly, the Russians reiterate for the benefit of the West that they do not want nuclear war. Just talk, say some Americans; sensibly true, say others. Why not find out?

It will not be easy for President Reagan to persuade the military or some of his own followers. They will claim the Soviet Union will use the knowledge they obtain under the agreement against us after canceling the arrangement. But because of our open society, the Russians now know much more about our nuclear strength than we know about theirs.

But with nuclear war a very real possibility, most Americans would follow the president's lead. We have heard much about risks for peace that urge us to buy a pig in a poke. Why not an offer for peace which gives us what we truly require: full disclosure and inspection?

We certainly need not worry about how such a proposal would appeal to our allies, who are urging negotiations at any cost. And, the proposal would be a proper answer to the foreign and American demonstrators for peace. The proposal need not put conditions on the outcome of the talks; let them await the bargaining table. Meanwhile, let's take the Russians at their word, assume they want to avoid nuclear war, and make the offer in good faith, hoping for acceptance.●

QUESTIONS ON U.S. PRODUCTION OF BINARY NERVE GAS MUST BE ANSWERED

HON. ROMANO L. MAZZOLI

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I commend to the attention of my colleagues the following commentary by New York Times columnist Tom Wicker which appeared in the February 1, 1982, Louisville, Courier-Journal.

The myriad of questions surrounding U.S. production of binary nerve gas—its effect on the U.S. current propaganda advantage over the Soviet Union; its moral and economic implications; its implications to U.S. ties with our European allies; and the dimension it adds to the escalating arms race—must be thoroughly debated and answered before Congress obligates the billions projected for binary nerve gas production in 1983 and 1984.

I, for one, feel that money can be better spent.

[From the Courier-Journal, Feb. 1, 1982]

NERVE GAS: WASTING THE "YELLOW RAIN" PROPAGANDA ADVANTAGE

(By Tom Wicker)

NEW YORK.—President Reagan apparently is ready to notify Congress that he has ordered a multibillion-dollar program to produce binary nerve gas for chemical warfare—the worst possible answer to the Soviet Union's unconscionable "yellow rain."

Ours, after all, is an open society and the Soviet Union's is not. So we will openly proclaim—in the budget and elsewhere—that we are rebuilding a chemical-warfare capacity that we will use if necessary. But the Russians, despite solid evidence that they have developed and used toxic substances for lethal purposes ("yellow rain") in Asia, do not and probably never will admit having done so.

Many will believe them, out of hope and naiveté, and the propaganda advantage will be with the Russians from the beginning. In this case, that's no small matter. Binary nerve gas, like yellow rain, is a horror weapon, effective primarily against civilians. It's lethal within minutes to anyone who breathes it, and capable of poisoning the atmosphere of huge areas for days at a time.

Americans, in fact, will be double propaganda losers in that we will have forfeited the advantage we now should have in the evidence that the Russians are using yellow rain. That evidence should be emphasized by the United States in every way and in every forum possible; so should Moscow's willingness to violate the 1925 Geneva Protocol by which it renounced the use of chemical weapons. Instead, if it develops binary nerve gas itself, the United States will dissipate a sound moral and political position.

In 1969, President Nixon renounced first use of chemical agents and ordered an end to their production. President Ford formally signed the Geneva Protocol—prohibiting use, but not possession of, chemical weapons—and proposed a world treaty to outlaw chemical warfare.

If Nixon's order is now reversed, the United States will not literally have violated either the protocol or his pledge against first use. But with Moscow steadfastly denying any involvement in chemical warfare, many will be only too eager to ask why a nation that dropped the first atomic bomb and spread lethal herbicides in Vietnam and Laos is developing binary nerve gas if it doesn't intend to use it.

The answer, Pentagon officials say, is that if the Russians have chemical weapons we must have them too, to deter them from their use, But the United States already has ample stocks of older chemical weapons; and this answer raises the military questions whether effective deterrence requires that we match the Russians weapon-for-weapon in every category, or whether the overall deterrent effect of all our military forces is sufficient.

Put it another way: Can the Russians' use of chemical warfare be deterred only by the threat of chemical warfare turned back against them? Need we sacrifice moral and propaganda advantage, add a new dimension to the superpower arms race and expand the world's inventory of genocidal weapons, all in order to deter use of yellow rain? Particularly when we already have stockpiles of gas artillery shells?

Richard Halloran of The New York Times reports that the Pentagon regards Europe as the likeliest chemical-war battlefield and plans to stockpile its new gas shells there, perhaps in Britain. But shouldn't we have learned something from the anti-nuclear demonstrations in European cities and from the anti-nuclear attitudes of governments such as those of Belgium and Holland, and of the British Labour Party?

At the root of this rising tide of opinion is the fear—however ill-founded—that Europe will be devastated in a superpower nuclear war that would leave the United States and the Soviet Union untouched. Are we now to add to this nightmare the idea that a superpower chemical war might also be fought in Europe?

If so, European paranoia about American as well as Soviet intentions will be surely heightened, and the stresses that are already wracking the NATO alliance will be increased—also in the name of deterrence.

More than $2 billion is being projected for producing binary nerve gas in 1983 and 1984 and more will be required later. That money would be far better spent—and achieve more real Western security—if it were devoted instead to research and development of defensive equipment and techniques against yellow rain and other chemical weapons, and if the fruits of that effort were made available to any and all nations feeling themselves threatened by chemical warfare.

That would make it clear who really poses the threat, and who wants to help the world avoid it. So would a determined attempt to negotiate with the Russians and all nations a total renunciation of the use or possession of chemical weapons. But producing those weapons ourselves will divert the world's opprobrium from its proper target in Moscow, while adding one more horror to those that already haunt the future.●

BRIDESBURG: A POLISH NEIGHBORHOOD IN PHILADELPHIA

HON. JOSEPH F. SMITH

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. SMITH. of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, as anyone who has visited our city knows, Philadelphia is a city of neighborhoods. The cultural and ethnic diversity which this provides, gives us a deep appreciation of the contributions which people of many national, racial, and religious backgrounds have made to the development of our Nation. The following is an article which appeared in the Bridesburg Bulletin in December 1981. It points to the rich heritage and many accomplishments of one of our neighborhoods steeped in Polish culture.

The article follows:

BRIDESBURG: A POLISH NEIGHBORHOOD IN PHILADELPHIA

(By Mike Elko)

During the early part of WW II a young state senator from the Bridesburg section of Philadelphia named Jack Malina was seated in an open limousine with President Franklin Delano Roosevelt riding east on Girard Ave. They were going to the dedication of Cramp's Shipyard.

I recall how moved I was at seeing the President with our young local senator.

Later, when I received a Polish American calendar from a school teacher who lives in Detroit, Michigan, and discovered a reference in it to "Polonia activity in a Polish neighborhood along Orthodox St. in Philadelphia," it impressed me highly. The fact that a single Polish community was recognized by someone in the midwest, makes one aware of the Polish growth in this area. Also, the realization of the Poles' many contributions to society and of their civic pride in their community.

I took several rides and walks through the Polish neigborhood mentioned on the calendar; the same being Bridesburg. One is immediately impressed by the clean homes, stores, pavements and even the streets. A writer for the Philadelphia magazine once described the "porches and pavements so clean in the Bridesburg community, that one can eat from them."

You see many various owned Polish establishments along Orthodox St. Businesses that date back to the early 1900s and remained in this predominately Polish area through the change and growth of the community. One sees Pulaski Savings Assn., Bridesburg Federal Credit Union, Podgorski Music store, whose owner and founder was elected to the Polka Music Hall of Fame. The Slabinski Funeral Home, Miller Realtor, owned by the Przyblowski family and Ideal Florist owned by Anthony Jesiolowski, Mary Zawistowski manages the Third Federal Savings and Loan Assn., and the Polish Beneficial Assn. is across the street. All of these establishments and people are of a Polish background, living, and or working in the Bridesburg community. Other Polish owned businesses are scattered throughout the neighborhood.

Not far away, is the Polish Club of Bridesburg in the 45th Ward and on Almond St. the St. John Cantius Church which brings back memories for me as I studied Polish at St. John's, under the tutorship of Mary Senk who was a very dedicated teacher in the public school system, her assistant was Genia Gunther.

St. Valentine's Polish National Catholic Church is also in the area. The church celebrated its 70th anniversary in April 1980. When the Polish immigrants arrived in the city, they wanted a Polish National Catholic Church where they could pray and be in contact with the people in Poland. It happened at that time, the Irish Bishops could not see it that way, as they wanted an American Catholic Church. As time went on, the Catholic hierarchy learned that the Polish people were right. Since then, there are over half a dozen Polish Catholic churches in the city.

Bridesburg area can boast of a young family of musicians who call themselves "The Dydak Diamonds." It is a polka band whose members are the children of Caroline and Ted Dydak, both of whom are accordian players. Their father Ted, is in the real estate business.

Bridesburg also has a large and active Bridesburg Business Assn. concentrating on concerns of the community, as well as the local Bridesburg Civic Assn.

This area was blessed with the visit of Pope John Paul II, when he was Cardinal of Poland, and many residents have fond memories of meeting with him.

Another distinguished visitor to the Polish American community was President Ronald Reagan, who then as a candidate stopped off at St. Adelbart's auditorium in Port Richmond. His visit was well received by the Polish people and received nationwide publicity from his presence. When Reagan spoke at St. Adelbart's he reminded those present of the many Polish celebrities from Philadelphia and among those he mentioned were Greg Luzinski of the Phillies, Ron Jaworski of the Philadelphia Eagles and Tom Gola, City Controller. And on that city famous list, John Cardinal Krol.

President Jimmy Carter, when as a candidate for reelection spoke at the Pulaski Club. This is the only community in the United States where two presidential candidites visited personally.

Philadelphia is fortunate to have Joseph P. Zawarotny and T. Dydak who serve on the Human Relations Commission, appointed by then Mayor Frank L. Rizzo. Mr. Francis Gregory, of Third Federal Savings and Loan Assn. served on the Copernicus Monument Committee. The area of Bridesburg and Port Richmond also produced people of high caliber in public service such as Walter F. Pytko, Dr. Leon Kolankiewicz and Joseph Zazyczny who served in the State Legislature and City Council.

Philadelphia's Polonia produced about ten fine judges.

More prominent people of Polish descent from Philadelphia were Frank N. Piasecki, the inventor of the tandem-rotor helicopter, who has received the Phillip H. Ward Jr. Medal from the Franklin Institute. We also have Edward Plocha, Commissioner of Records for Philadelphia. A Polish dedicated Kosciuszko Foundation, in New York City, was founded at Broad and Spring Garden streets in the office of its president, Samuel Vauclain. Pulaski Avenue in Philadelphia is Polish influenced, Eugene Pasymowski is the District Director of ACTION, Tom Gola is the Regional Director of HUD. World famous, Leopold Stokowski led the Philadelphia Orchestra for two decades. We have the Pulaski, Copernicus, and Kosciuszko monuments as well as Pulaski Park at the foot of the Delaware River. We have the Kosciuszko Home. We even have a Warsaw Cafe. The Benjamin Franklin Bridge was designed and built by Ralph Modjewski, a world famous bridge builder. The Polish National Alliance started in Philadelphia in 1880. There is also a Monkiewicz Playground. Philadelphia has a sister city in Poland, Turin, the birthplace of Copernicus.

A very important and active organization in our city is the Polish American Congress, which is the umbrella organization for all Polish American organizations in our area as well as a national organization with over 4 million members. The Polish American Congress is responsible for the sponsorship of over 15 events city-wide during the year. This group works with all other groups to see that Polish heritage is kept alive. Sponsoring the Pulaski Day parade, the largest ethnic parade in the city, they offer social services to the many Polish-Slavic people in Philadelphia.

The Nazareth Academy and Holy Family College, located in the Northeast are all operated by the Nazareth Sisters, a Polish order.

The list goes on and on, and I'm sure, in my research, I've overlooked people, places, things and happenings.

However, the Polish people have come a long way since they've settled here as Polish immigrants in the 1800s. Most of them came for a better life or for political reason. It is obvious that through the long hard years they have made an impact, and have contributed much to their own community and to society.

The Poles are a proud people; they are persevering, industrious and ambitious and that all helps to make Philadelphia the great city it is.●

A SUGGESTION FOR PEACE

HON. BOB EDGAR

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. EDGAR. Mr. Speaker, Rev. Paul D. Gehris, director of the Pennsylvania Council of Churches, has shared with me a strong statement on a bilateral nuclear weapons freeze. In the interest of "Peace on Earth," I ask all Members of Congress to give this resolution their most careful consideration. The resolution follows:

RESOLUTION OF THE PENNSYLVANIA COUNCIL OF CHURCHES A BILATERAL UNITED STATES-SOVIET UNION NUCLEAR WEAPONS FREEZE

Whereas the US and the USSR today possess 50,000 nuclear weapons[1] of which only 1/100th of that would be sufficient to destroy both nations.[2] At present levels, all cities in the northern hemisphere could be wiped out in half an hour. Yet over the next decade, the US and the USSR plan to build over 20,000 more nuclear warheads[3] along with a new "generation" of missiles to deliver them. Even while recognizing that there is no defense against a nuclear attack, the concept of "limited" nuclear war fighting is being put forth as a thinkable and possible option.

Whereas the military budget required to continue this arms race is taking the lion's share of taxpayer's dollars.[4] Current excessive and wasteful levels of military spending undermine human prosperity at home and abroad, while providing less and less security for all. The spending on arms weakens the economy because it increases taxation, contributes to technological retardation in civil sectors, adds heavily to inflation and unemployment, and diverts vital productive resources from meeting human needs.[5]

[1] "Nuclear Weapons and Security: "How Much is Enough?" Admiral Gene LaRocque, "The Defense Monitor," Center for Defense Information, Vol. VIII, #2, Feb. 1979, p. 4.

[2] "Nuclear Disarmament," United Nations Fact Sheet #5, Dept. of Public Information, United Nations, NY, Oct. 1979. It has been estimated that in a nuclear war, each of about 400 cities in the Northern Hemisphere might be blasted by the equivalent of 13 megatons—about 1,000 Hiroshima bombs each. Most of the inhabitants would be killed instantly and civilization would come to an end in the countries involved in the conflict, while elsewhere, millions more would die from intense and widespread radioactive fallout.

[3] "US and Allied Military Strengths," Center for Defense Information Fact Sheet, Feb., 1980, p. 1.

[4] "1980 Economic Report of the President," US Dept. of Commerce, Bureau of Economic Analysis, p. 203. Military spending currently represents over 65% of all federal funds allocated by Congress.

[5] Seymour Melman, "The Permanent War Economy," Simon and Schuster, NY 1974.

Whereas: Dollars spent on weapons systems create far fewer jobs than those spent on civilian programs. On average, 20,000 more jobs could be available per $1 billion spent on the military if spent in the commercial sector of our economy.[6] The Reagan Administration plans to spend over $1.5 trillion on the military over the next five years ($6,250 per capita)—$180 billion of which will be for the procurement of new nuclear weapon systems. With an inflation rate of 17 percent and unemployment running at 8 percent, such increases will only destroy jobs and businesses by robbing the civilian economy of capital and resources.

Whereas all this is contrary to the Christian call to peacemaking. The nuclear arms race presents us with a crisis of faith and a historical crossroads for humanity. As the foundation of national security, nuclear weapons are idolatrous. As a method of defense, they are suicidal. To believe that nuclear weapons can solve international problems is the greatest illusion and the height of naivete: Now, therefore be it

Resolved That the Pennsylvania Council of Churches call upon the United States and the Soviet Union to jointly and immediately stop the nuclear arms race. Specifically, we call upon each country to adopt an immediate and mutual freeze on all further testing, production and deployment of new nuclear weapons and of missiles and aircraft designed primarily to deliver them. This is an essential and verifiable first step towards lessening the risks of nuclear holocaust and reducing the nuclear arsenals.

We ask the U.S. Congress to introduce a Resolution calling for a US-USSR Freeze, and that the Administration be asked to negotiate with the USSR a permanent moratorium on nuclear weapons. We further ask that our own nation take initiatives, such as a halt to underground tests for a short period of time, or a small, symbolic cut in the military budget, that could bring about a response from the USSR, remembering that such a process was successfully followed in the '60's, leading to the Partial Test Ban Treaty.

We also ask that economic conversion planning be instituted now to prepare for the cessation of nuclear weapons manufacturing. And we go on record in support of transferring the money spent on nuclear weapons to the funding of civilian purposes; and be it further

Resolved That the Pennsylvania Council of Churches will encourage its member denominations to become active in the Campaign for Nuclear Weapons Freeze and use its influence to support legislative and lobbying effort to make this proposition the policy of the United States of America.●

SOVIET ADVENTURISM IN THE HORN OF AFRICA REGION

HON. CHARLES WILSON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, in the recent past, one of the major areas of Soviet adventurism has been in the Horn of Africa region.

This strategic region forming the soft underbelly of the Persian Gulf region, controls access to the Red Sea and the Mediterranean from the Indian Ocean and constitutes the gateway to East Africa.

Soviet interest in this area dates back to 1971 in South Yemen which now has become the most secure satellite of the U.S.S.R. in the Third World and the only one in a Marxist Arab states. Thereby, Moscow has acquired a naval and airbase at Aden which is located a few miles off the Beb el-Mandeb Straits.

While the Soviet Somali adventure did not end well (the Soviets had to leave Somalia in 1978), in 1977, the Soviet Union acquired substantial influence over the most powerful country in the region: The Ethiopian Empire.

Today the Soviets control all of the Horn except Somalia and Djibouti. They are building an air and naval base at the Dahlok archipelago off the coast of Eritrea and are exploiting Ethiopia as a rearward base to undermine General Nimiery's regime in the Sudan which is also menaced by Libya.

In August 1981, the tripartite pact between Libya, South Yemen and Ethiopia brought Libyan development funds and terrorist know-how to Ethiopia against Somalia and Djibouti.

The relative Soviet success was achieved in part by Cuban troops, by East German advisers to the secret police and by Soviet advisers attached to the civilian and military authorities in Ethiopia. The Soviet presence must be effectively counterbalanced and contained. The invasion of Afghanistan by the Soviet Union caused the Carter administration to initiate the first measures of containment by signing the August 1980 agreement with Somalia, Kenya, and the Sultanate of Oman for air and naval facilities for our nascent RDF.

Our policy took a low-key approach in the case of Somalia; $40 million in FMS was promised for 2 years as well as some economic support funds which is too little to make an appreciable difference and too much as not to arouse Ethiopian fears. The latter was caused by the ongoing guerrilla struggle in the Ogaden province; an area administered by Ethiopia since 1948 after a short British administration.

The province was reconquered by Cuban troops in 1978, in a war lasting over 1 year, from the local Somalis and Somali army which came to their support. Our aid to Somalia was only increased marginally in fiscal year 1982.

At the present, the Reagan administration continues to increase aid slightly, but it has not yet defined an effective containment policy in the Horn region. It is for this reason that I, with 63 of my colleagues, wrote to Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig, Jr., on October 20, 1981, asking for higher levels of aid and closer strategic relations with Somalia. We have received a generally positive response from Richard Fairbanks, Assistant Secretary of State for Congressional Relations on December 15, 1981.

I ask for unanimous consent to insert into the RECORD the two letters and an appropriate op-ed page article by Z. Michael Szaz, Ph. D., which appeared in the September 28, 1981, issue of the New York Times and the international Herald Tribune. Dr. Szaz is studies program director of the American Foreign Policy Institute and former associate professor of international law and relations at Seton Hall and Troy State Universities.

Also, I would like to reiterate my major concerns which are shared by many of my colleagues and to propose appropriate measures to effect a containment and progressive challenge to the Soviet, Cuban, and East German presence in this region.

We must provide the necessary military and economic assistance to our friends in the region; that is, to the Sudan and Somalia. The administration performed effectively in the case of the Sudan and we have reason to believe that the crisis in the Sudan is over. The same consideration in terms of extending accelerated and substantial arms deliveries and providing economic support funds has yet to be applied to Somalia.

The Somali army, which lost half of its mechanized equipment in the Ogaden war and remains exposed to repeated air attacks by Ethiopia in the bordering areas that include most of the refugee camps, needs large-scale assistance in order to provide a credible defense against Cuban and Ethiopian forces poised at the border. Our defense experts estimate that it would take about $500 million during a 5-year period to retrain and reequip the Somali forces.

While budgetary reasons may prevent us from supplying the entire amount, we must provide at least the technology-intensive items and must work closely with the Somali military command. We believe that Saudi Arabia might provide financing for the remainder of the equipment and that Egypt would help with Somali procurement.

Nevertheless even this limited contribution would cost more than what the present FMS levels have appropriated or planned for Somalia.

We must also increase our ESF and development assistance. Without finding some employment for the refugees, we will perpetuate an unproductive camp life for them and create another Palestinian problem. While the administration and Congress were more generous with refugee aid and development assistance—$30 million

[6] "The Structure of the US Economy, 1980-85, "US Dept. of Labor Bureau of Labor Statistics, US Government Printing Office, 1975.

ESF was appropriated in fiscal year 1982—the effort must be expanded in fiscal year 1983 and fiscal year 1984 if we want the survival of a stable, pro-Western Somalia.

In the past, there were two guiding examples for large-scale refugee problems. One example was the German case where approximately 12 million refugees and expellees were dumped into West Germany between 1945–47. By 1952, they were absorbed into the national economy and provided with the manpower and many of the skills comparable to the German "economic wonder." This would have been, of course, impossible, without the Marshall plan which provided the impetus to accelerated economic development and political stabilization.

The other example is that of the Palestinian refugees on the West Bank, the Gaza strip, and southern Lebanon. Generations were brought up in the camps since 1948, with little productive experience and low self-esteem, providing the manpower for the terrorist activities of the PLO in order to arouse international public opinion about their plight and lack of self-determination.

It is up to us which direction the Somali refugees will have to take. For the sake of justice and peace as well as our national interest, I hope that the administration will choose adequate assistance so that the Somali economy may develop substantially and that political stability may be preserved in Somalia.

Only by strengthening the Sudan and Somalia will the Soviets and their allies be contained in the Horn region and then, we can acquire secure access to their facilities.

I trust the administration will move in this direction and hope both the administration and the House will divorce themselves of the commendable, but illusoric notion that by not supporting Somalia we may regain Ethiopia as a Western ally.

The material follows:

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D.C., October 20, 1981.

Hon. ALEXANDER HAIG, Jr.,
Secretary of State, Department of State, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SECRETARY HAIG: We, the undersigned members of the U.S. House of Representatives, would like to call your attention to our continuing important interests in Somalia and to recent developments which threaten the peace and stability of the Horn region in Africa.

Particularly, we refer to the August 1981 pact between Libya, Ethiopia and South Yemen, "the latter two Soviet surrogates whose military, economic and state security systems are controlled by Soviet and East German "advisors". In the case of Ethiopia, 17,000 Cuban mercenaries are also present. Especially, the Ethiopians remain on inimical terms with Somalia because of the past support Somalia extended to the indigenous national liberation movement of the Somalis in the Ogaden which is administered by Ethiopia. Ethiopian planes bombed repeatedly this year Somali villages and refugee camps.

In addition, both Ethiopia and South Yemen support the "National Salvation Front", a group of pro-Communist Somali exiles in Ethiopia which is trying to subvert the legitimate government of President Siad Barre of Somalia.

At the present, Ethiopia and the Cuban mercenaries have complete military superiority as the Ethiopian army has received $1.5 billion worth of military equipment from the U.S.S.R. in 1978 and continues to receive military aid from Moscow. Somalia lacks both fighter planes and anti-aircraft batteries.

Somalia is also threatened by the coming influx of Libyan money and terrorist know-how which will be directed against its government by the leaders of Libya and the Soviet surrogates in the Horn area.

We believe that the increased threats to Somalia must be answered by a clear American commitment to our Somali allies in the political, military and economic fields.

May we suggest that the Department of State take any measures necessary to communicate this commitment both to the Somali government and to our regional adversaries and the Soviet Union and that we accelerate our various economic and military programs to Somalia, including the early delivery of the anti-aircraft batteries contracted for by Somalia.

We also call upon the Administration to reevaluate our present aid programs, military and economic, to Somalia in the light of the recent developments in the region, especially the tragic assassination of President Anwar Sadat of Egypt, and submit concrete proposals for enhancing the security and stability of Somalia which is providing us with air and naval facilities badly needed by our RDF.

With every good wish, we are Very sincerely yours,

Arlen Erdahl, G. William Whitehurst, Robin Beard, Don Ritter, Delbert Latta, Millicent Fenwick, Robert J. Lagomarsino, Bob Stump, Charles Wilson, William L. Dickinson, Samuel Stratton, Arlan Stangeland, Robert K. Dornan, Gus Yatron, James Nelligan, Robert Badham, Richard Schulze, Thomas Bliley, Jack F. Kemp, Douglas Bereuter, Bob Livingston, Henry Hyde, Eldon Rudd, Guy Vander Jagt, Bill Boner, Sam B. Hall, Jr., Roy Dyson, Lawrence Coughlin, Jack Fields, Olympia J. Snowe, Daniel Mica, Christopher H. Smith, Larry Winn, Thomas B. Evans, Jr.

Bill Chappell, Jr., Thomas Petri, G. V. Montgomery, Charles Stenholm, Robert A. Young, (Missouri), Benjamin A. Gilman, Marjorie S. Holt, L. A. Bafalis, John LeBoutillier, Harold Sawyer, John H. Rousselot, Daniel Crane, Frank R. Wolf, Mark Siljander, George Hansen, Billy Tauzin, Claudine Schneider, Stan Parris, Floyd Spence, Vin Weber, Melvin Price, Paul Trible, Robert McClory, Eugene Atkinson, Thomas F. Hartnett, John M. Ashbrook, Edward J. Derwinski, Philip M. Crane, John Edward Porter, and Cooper Evans.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, D.C., December 10, 1981.

Hon. CHARLES WILSON,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. WILSON: The Secretary has asked me to respond to the letter dated October 20, 1981, from you and several of your Congressional colleagues expressing your views regarding U.S. Government assistance programs for Somalia. As you suggest, the current political climate, especially the August Ethiopia-Libya-South Yemen Tripartite Agreement, warrants our increased attention to developments in the region. The Administration is keenly aware of these and other potential threats to Somalia, a country whose friendship we value both for political and strategic reasons.

You may recall that acknowledgment of Somalia's important geographical location in the Horn of Africa and the Somali Government's willingness to promote a cooperative relationship with us led to the negotiation of an agreement with the Somalis last year which allows us access to Somali air and naval facilities, thereby increasing our ability to respond to Soviet challenges in the Southwest Asian area. Although we have not linked specific amounts of military or economic assistance to that agreement, we have expressed a clear interest in Somalia's territorial integrity, security and economic development. In this connection we initiated a Foreign Military Sales relationship with Somalia and the Congress approved a request to provide a total of $40 million in FMS credits to Somalia for fiscal years 1980 and 1981. This Administration's fiscal year 1982 budget proposal includes another $20 million in FMS credits for Somalia.

In recognition of Somalia's critical air defense needs, we concurred in Somalia's request to use the FMS credits for early warning radars and air defense guns. The Somalis have recently revised their request in favor of more urgently needed transportation, communications and engineering equipment. We are reevaluating Somali needed in an effort to be responsive as quickly as possible.

Moreover, we have recently scheduled more frequent U.S. Navy calls at Somalia ports, established an Office of Military Cooperation in Mogadishu and included Somalia in the RDF exercise "Bright Star." These steps convey clear signals that we are committed to friendship with Somalia.

The military relationship is only one aspect of our growing assistance ties with Somalia. We believe that the U.S. also has a humanitarian and development role to play in providing assistance to lessen Somalia's refugee burden and assisting the country in realizing its economic potential, particularly in agriculture, which is vital to the country's future stability. Towards these ends, the U.S. Government has been the most substantial contributor in response to a UNHCR appeal for Somali refugee relief, providing about $45.5 million in food and non-food assistance in 1981. In addition, the Administration's FY 1982 budget proposal includes $36.2 million designated for development assistance in Somalia.

The Department greatly appreciates your interest and support for our efforts to assist Somalia.

Yours sincerely,

RICHARD FAIRBANKS,
Assistant Secretary for Congressional Relations.

[From the New York Times, Sept. 28, 1981]

SOMALIA'S DIFFICULTIES

(By Z. Michael Szaz)

WASHINGTON.—By signing a treaty of cooperation and friendship, which includes secret clauses, with Ethiopia and Southern Yemen, both Soviet surrogates in the Horn of Africa region, the Libyan leader Col. Muammar el-Qaddafi acquired a new enemy—Somalia.

A communiqué by the Somali Government on Aug. 24 accused Libya of numerous subversive acts and called the agreement an aggressive military pact directed against the Somali and other moderate governments in the region. Somalia considers the pact a springboard for the Soviet Union to dominate the Horn and the Middle East.

Geopolitical implications of the pact should give pause to members and staff of the House Subcommittee on Africa who focus on the merits of the national self-determination claims of Somalis in the Ogaden region, which is under Ethiopian administration, rather than on Soviet-Cuban encroachment in the Horn.

The Somali Government finds itself in a difficult situation. Some 1.3 million refugees, Somalis and Oromos from the Ogaden, live in 35 special camps and 800,000 refugees live outside the camps with relatives. They escaped the fighting in their province, where they suffered atrocities and oppression. In addition, 3,000 new refugees arrive daily from the Ogaden, where guerrilla fighting against the Ethiopians continues.

The Western Somali Liberation Front still carries out attacks, and the Ethiopian Army retaliates by burning villages and sometimes poisoning wells. Somali peace offers, based on negotiations about national self-determination and human rights of the Somalis of the Ogaden, has found no positive response in Addis Ababa.

The refugees are a staggering burden for the Somali economy, which also has been damaged by floods in recent months. Before international aid arrived in 1979, the Government used up its own supplies to avoid mass starvation among the refugees. To carry the burden, the Government needs substantial international assistance. With the aid of the United Nations High Commission for Refugees, which is helped by large contributions from the United States and other Western countries, the situation has been somewhat stabilized, but food-distribution and warehousing problems persist and transit camps lack necessary facilities. Medical assistance, sanitary facilities, and the drilling of wells remain the highest priorities. Food distribution is no longer a direct Somali responsibility. The Government signed an agreement with Africare, a voluntary agency, and the Central Mennonite Committee, in addition to the High Commissioner, and retains only coordinating functions.

Besides the refugee problem, security remains a principal concern to Somalia. With the Soviet-supported Ethiopian Army still fighting the Western Somali Liberation Front in the Ogaden, and Cubans ready to quash any coup attempts in Addis Ababa, a ground invasion is unlikely, although Ethiopians raided Somali territory several times in the last 18 months. In addition, Ethiopian planes attacked Somali villages and refugee camps repeatedly this year, causing numerous deaths and substantial damage.

Politically, the Somali Government is in firm control, although there are opposition elements abroad supported by Ethiopia and Libya that are tying to weaken Somali unity. The continuing military buildup in Ethiopia and Southern Yemen, however, challenges long-term Somali stability. In 1978 and 1979, Ethiopia received $1.5 billion worth of military equipment from the Soviet Union, and further deliveries are being made. There are still 17,000 Cubans, 4,000 Russians, and 2,000 East Germans "protecting" the regime in Addis Ababa and "advising" the military, state security, and economic ministries.

To this threat, Libya has been added. In the last two years, it has served as the spearhead for Soviet infiltration of Africa. Somalia aroused Colonel Qaddafi's ire by signing an agreement with the United States in August 1980 granting use of Somali military facilities. There will be Libyan financing available both to Ethiopian and Somali exiles who want to weaken Somali.

Despite these dangers, the Somali Government responded to the Libyan-Ethiopian-Southern Yemen pact by breaking off diplomatic relations with Libya and charging Libya with subversion and with signing an aggressive military pact directed against Somalia, and aimed at destabilizing the Red Sea and Indian Ocean region. Thus, the Government took a courageous stand by joining two moderate Arab regimes, Egypt's and the Sudan's, in denouncing both the Soviet surrogates and the mercurial Colonel Qaddafi.

Washington should recognize Somalia's contributions to Western security and extend to it increased political support and provide more military equipment.●

POLICE PURSUITS INTO THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

HON. FRANK R. WOLF

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing legislation which will correct an inequity brought to my attention by Arlington County officials and police regarding the law governing police pursuits into the District of Columbia.

The legislation will amend the "District of Columbia Code" to make liability in civil actions arising from "hot pursuit" into the District of Columbia by members of a peace unit of a State determined by the laws of such State.

This bill was drafted at the request of Arlington Commonwealth attorney Henry Hudson and acting Arlington County attorney Charles Flinn. I appreciate their assistance with this legislation, which has also drawn the support of the Alexandria city commonwealth attorney and police department, and the Arlington County police department as well as the Virginia Department of State Police.

Arlington County officials and police have been involved in a lawsuit stemming from a chase by an Arlington County officer who pursued suspected bank robbers into the District of Columbia across the Roosevelt Bridge. The suspects fired shots at the officer and their speeding car ran a red light at 19th and E streets, collided with another vehicle, and hit a pedestrian standing near the intersection. The pedestrian then filed a suit in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia naming, among others, the officer and Arlington County as defendants.

Judge Harold Greene ruled in that case that the law of the District of Columbia should apply to the liability issues and not Virginia law. While the District of Columbia, a municipal corporation, does not recognize sovereign immunity, the State of Virginia does. My bill would afford officers who pursue suspected felons into the District with the protection of sovereign immunity.

The most important distinction between Virginia law and the law of the District of Columbia is the liability of local government units. Police officers in the 10th district are placed in considerable danger when they pursue a felon into the District of Columbia and I believe it is imperative that they receive legal protection from civil liability suits arising from such chases. It is my belief that this legislation would offer that protection to the police officers who are called upon in their duties to pursue a suspect across the Virginia border into the District of Columbia.

If the situation were reversed and a pursuit by police began in the District of Columbia into Virginia and resulted in civil action for personal injury damages, a Virginia court would give immunity to the foreign jurisdiction. But that would not preclude suit from being brought in District of Columbia courts by the injured party.

I ask that Mr. Flinn's explanatory memorandum outlining the need for this legislation be inserted at this point in the RECORD.

FACTS OF THE SPECIFIC INCIDENT

The incident which resulted in the requested statute involves the vehicular pursuit of suspected bank robbers by an Arlington Police Officer. The officer heard a broadcast containing the description of the robbers and their car. The officer saw a car matching the description and followed the car from Ft. Meyer Drive at Route 50 East to the east end of the Roosevelt Bridge in the District of Columbia. The suspects stopped their car at the end of the bridge. When the officer approached the car, the car drove away. The officer gave pursuit with emergency equipment on (siren and lights) travelling east on E Street. The robbers fired shots at the officer and the officer increased the distance between the robbers' car and his car. The robbers were going at a speed in excess of the posted limit, ran a red light at 19th and E Streets. The robbers' car collided with a car travelling south on 19th Street. This collision caused the robbers' car to hit a pedestrian who was standing on the southeast corner of 19th and E Streets.

THE RESULTING LAWSUIT

The pedestrian filed an action in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia naming, among others, the officer and Arlington County as defendants. It is claimed that the officer negligently allowed the robbers to escape and that he conducted a "negligent high speed pursuit." This negligence is said to have directly resulted in the injuries to the pedestrian. It is claimed that Arlington County directly caused the injuries because it negligently trained and supervised the officer. Additionally, it is claimed that the County is liable for the injuries indirectly because it is the employer of the officer. This later theory of liability is known as master-servant or respondeat superior liability. It is a legal principle which says that the employer must pay for the negligence of an employee if the employee causes injuries to other while the employee is acting within the scope of the employment relationship.

THE RULING OF JUDGE GREENE

Judge Harold Greene ruled that the law of the District of Columbia and not Virginia law should apply to the liability issues in this case. This was because he believed that the District of Columbia had the most significant interest to the case.

Judge Green further held that the law of the District of Columbia would result in the following: (1) Because the District of Columbia (a municipal corporation) is not recognized as having sovereign immunity from lawsuits, Arlington County (not a municipal corporation but a political subdivision of Virginia) would not be recognized as having sovereign immunity; and (2) that because the District of Columbia is liable under respondeat superior for the negligent acts of its police officers, the County would also be liable under respondeat superior.

COMPARISON OF THE LAW OF VIRGINIA AND THE LAW OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The ruling of Judge Greene rejects any application of the law of the State of Virginia. The law of Virginia is, in many important areas, different than that of the District of Columbia.

A. The doctrine of sovereign immunity

Virginia has long recognized the legal principle that the state cannot be sued unless it consents to be sued. This is sovereign immunity. Virginia Counties are political subdivision of the state and share this immunity because they are not separate from the state as are Virginia cities (cities are liable for negligent acts when performing proprietary functions). Although this principle has been criticized as archaic, Mr. Justice Oliver Wendell Homes, Jr., said:

"A sovereign is exempt from suit, not because of any formal conception or obsolete theory, but on the logical and practical ground that there can be no right as against the authority that makes the law on which the right depends."Kawanakoa v. Polybank, 205 U.S. 349, 353 (1907).

The County would, under Virginia law, have complete immunity from a suit seeking damages for personal injuries. It is neither liable for injuries that might result from improper County training nor under respondeat superior. Moreover, police officers are considered to be state officials and not servants of the local jurisdiction because the authority derives directly from the state. (Police officers in Virginia would be personally liable for ordinary negligence in Virginia, just as in the District of Columbia.)

As noted above, the District of Columbia does not have this immunity. The district is liable in tort anytime one of its employees is liable (that is, it is liable under respondeat superior). As a result, the District is frequently the target of plaintiff's attorneys because it is easier for a jury to award large sums of money against the District than against an individual.

The law of the District of Columbia recognizes a limited form of immunity. If the employee is negligent in the exercise of a "discretionary" as opposed to "ministerial" activity, immunity will be recognized. "Discretionary" has been judicially defined as being a broad policy level decision as, for example, a council member's decision in passing a law. In particular, the arrest of criminal is considered a ministerial function, and thus negligence in making an arrest can result in liability. It is not clear whether the supervision and training is a discretionary or ministerial function under the law of the District of Columbia.

Virginia law affords individual County officials immunity also based upon the discretionary/ministerial distinction. (But regardless of whether the individual might be liable, the County is never liable for his actions.) It can be said with some confidence that a decision as to supervision and training would likely be held to be discretionary. Less certain is whether Virginia law would extend immunity to the decision and manner of making an arrest.

Virginia would apply Virginia law principles to an accident occurring in Virginia resulting from a chase that began in the District of Columbia. As to municipal corporations (that is, cities, as opposed to counties), Virginia law allows suit if the activity is proprietary (as in maintaining sidewalks). The provision of police activities is a governmental function and no suit against municipal corporation would be recognized. The liability of any individual D.C. police officers who were involved would be determined by using the discretionary/ministerial test outlined above. A note of caution is in order. No case has reached the Virginia Supreme Court which involved a suit for damages against a foreign governmental jurisdiction or against an official of a foreign jurisdiction, and because of this there is a lack of certainty about the ultimate outcome of such a lawsuit.

The most important distinction between Virginia law and the law of the District is the liability of local government units.

As applied to an incident like the one here, counties are wholly immune in Virginia but are not in the District of Columbia. If the facts are changed and the chase begins in the District with the accident taking place in Virginia; a Virginia court would give immunity to the foreign jurisdiction. Two further principles of Virginia law that a Virginia court in the later instance might apply to a foreign jurisdiction is that the foreign jurisdiction's liability (or nonliability) should be determined by the law where the jurisdiction exists. If it is liable under its own state's law it might be held liable if sued in Virginia. Another principle that might well be applied is a similar one; it would require that the plaintiff sue the foreign jurisdiction in the courts where that jurisdiction exists. This latter principle is simply that any action against a local government must be brought where that government exists and nowhere else.●

RUDOLPH KAMMERER, DEVOTED PUBLIC SERVANT

HON. WILLIAM CARNEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. CARNEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to observe the career of a devoted public servant in New York's First Congressional District. Rudolph M. Kammerer, commissioner of the Suffolk County Department of Public Works, has compiled an impressive list of achievements and a distinguished record of service on behalf of the people of Suffolk County since 1949.

Born in Westhampton Beach, Long Island, Rudy Kammerer has been a lifelong resident of Suffolk County. He earned his bachelor's degree in engineering in 1937. He worked as an engineer in several notable projects in New York State, including the 1938–39 World's Fair, the Brooklyn Navy Yard, and the city of Syracuse.

In 1949, Rudy became a village trustee in Westhampton Beach. He has served as a justice of the peace for Southampton Town and been both a member and director of the Suffolk County Planning Board. From 1961 to 1965, he was superintendent of highways, and commissioner of public works in the town of Southampton. In 1965, he was appointed to the post of commissioner of public works and highway superintendent for Suffolk County. He has served in his capacity as public works commissioner for more than 16 years.

Under Rudy's leadership, the public works department has served Suffolk County well, undertaking many of the responsibilities for the construction and maintenance of facilities to meet the needs of the people. The projects carried out by the public works department are permanent improvements to the quality of life in our community. In his term as commissioner, Rudy Kammerer has always performed his duties on behalf of the people of the county with the highest degree of competence and commitment; his work will stand as a permanent reminder of his dedication. As he retires, I know that all who have had an opportunity to work with him will want to thank him for his work in the community.

Mr. Speaker, Rudy Kammerer is an asset to the people of Suffolk County. He is a devoted family man. He is a professional engineer who has performed excellently. And he has been a public servant who has worked selflessly throughout his distinguished career. I congratulate Rudy Kammerer for his fine work, and I wish him and his family many years of continued health, happiness, and success.●

TRIBUTE TO BERNIE KROM

HON. EDWARD R. ROYBAL

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, recently an independent businessman in the 25th Congressional District of California closed the doors to his establishment after 51 years of continuous operation. It is with great pleasure that I invite my colleagues to join me in recognizing Mr. Bernard Krom as an example of the fine tradition of American entrepreneurship and civic responsibility.

Bernie Krom came to the Eagle Rock community of Los Angeles from Chicago, Ill., at the age of 13. Following graduation from high school, Bernie worked as a tailor and assisted with his brother-in-law's clothing store, Robert's Men's Wear. Following the unexpected death of his sister's husband, Bernie devoted himself to operating the business and caring for his sister and her two young sons.

In addition to the business and family responsibilities, Bernie devoted considerable time to community work, including 35 years of active participation in the Eagle Rock Chamber of Commerce and over 20 years' service in the Kiwanis Club. While his contributions in these capacities were numerous, it has been his individual acts of compassion and civic duty which earned Bernie Krom the admiration of his community.

Feeling a special responsibility toward those less fortunate than himself, it has not been unusual for this fine citizen to feed, clothe, and find shelter for entire families in times of need. During the holiday season especially, Bernie Krom's kindness and generosity have brought joy to many who might otherwise have been left untouched by the acts of good will that most of us take for granted.

It is most fitting that we in the Congress of the United States salute Mr. Bernard Krom as an example of the fortitude and samaritan spirit which have forged the greatness that is America. At the young age of 64, Bernie and his wife Anne will enjoy the fruits of retirement with a great deal of satisfaction and sense of accomplishment because of the fine legacy which we in Congress are today honoring. Please join me in wishing them both continued happiness, prosperity, and success in the years to follow.●

MRS. BUSH VISITS LOCAL VOLUNTEERS

HON. ROBERT H. MICHEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, there is a lot of talk these days about the ways in which voluntarism can help Americans in need. Mrs. George Bush, wife of the Vice President, recently demonstrated that she not only believes in the voluntry spirit but is willing to act on it. In a recent visit to Montgomery County, Md., Mrs. Bush found that spirit "alive and well."

At this time I insert in the RECORD, "Mrs. Bush Visits Local Volunteers," by Sandra Arnoult, from the Montgomery Journal, January 28, 1982.

MRS. BUSH VISITS LOCAL VOLUNTEERS

Neither ice nor snow could keep away a few hundred volunteers, students and school officials who came to Bethesda Chevy Chase High School yesterday to meet a premier volunteer—Mrs. George Bush, wife of the vice president of the United States.

Over the years, Barbara Bush has been a steady volunteer in churches, hospitals, nursing homes and schools in 17 cities—and even the People's Republic of China, where she lived when her husband was the U.S. Liaison there.

Sandra Gray, Chairman of the National School Volunteer Program, cited Barbara Bush as the "zenith in volunteerism" and for her concern for the quality of life for others and the work she has done to improve it.

"The president said in his State of the Union speech that volunteerism is alive and well," said Gray, "and truly it is in Montgomery County."

In addition to honoring Mrs. Bush, three outstanding volunteers from the county were presented with awards.

County Schools Superintendent Edward Andrews said that presenting the awards to the three men was one of his "most pleasurable tasks."

"Our school system wouldn't be what it is without the tremendous help of the thousands of volunteers in the school system," said Andrews.

Richard Marriott, of the Marriott Corp., was cited for his work as chairman of a committee that is working to solve the problems of alcohol and drug abuse by county young people.

Larry Shulman, an attorney, has donated his expertise to the highly acclaimed construction trades foundation where students build a house—from the ground up—and sell it at the end of the school year. Dr. Andrews said that Shulman was the "guiding light" behind the program.

And the volunteer who received an overwhelming, standing ovation was 94-year old Jorgen Kvastav, who is better known as "Mr. K" by the children at Bel Pre elementary school where is he is a volunteer.

Kvastav, who was born in Norway, and speaks eight languages, works with the RSVP (Retired Senior Volunteer Program) and is one of the four residents from the Bel Pre Nursing Home who are regular volunteers at the school.

Although confined to a wheelchair, he said that when he comes to school the children rush to greet him. "I love it," he said.

Gray rattled off statistics to prove that volunteerism is alive, saying 8650 volunteers served in the schools with an additional 1000 students serving as peer counselors or tutors for fellow students. The majority of county schools have active volunteer programs, with the average volunteer working 2½ hours each week.

And Gray said, if the schools had to pay for the services these volunteers provide, it would cost more than $4 million each year.

"Thank heavens I didn't write a speech," said Barbara Bush when it was her turn to speak. "It would have been said already."

When her husband became vice-president, she considered other projects to replace her perennial volunteer efforts, but she decided that volunteering was the single most important contribution she could make.

Her most recent volunteer interest has been in teaching adults to read. She firmily believes that combatting illiteracy would help solve many of society's ills.

"President Reagan said that there are pages of want ads for jobs that can't be filled," she said. "He's right, but you can't fill jobs with people who can't read. Illiteracy breeds crime."

She believes that volunteering is "the most patriotic thing ever."

When she lived in China with her husband in the 1970s, she noted that the Chinese place a high priority on providing housing, food—and teaching people to read. They saw it as a way to increase productivity and improve the overall quality of life.

"We could learn a lesson from the Chinese," said Mrs. Bush.●

BILL GREEN INTRODUCES SENIOR CITIZEN CO-OP-CONDO EQUITY ACT

HON. BILL GREEN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a bill which will assist those senior citizens who live in a rental unit which is converted to a condominium or a cooperative. Under the Internal Revenue Code, a person who is over 55 years of age is entitled to a one-time exclusion of up to $125,000 on the payment of taxes on the gain from the sale of his or her principal residence. The major requirement is that the residence must have been the taxpayer's principal residence for 3 of the past 5 years. Under this law, a person whose apartment is converted must live in that unit for another 3 years before being able to qualify for what could be a substantial tax benefit, even though that unit has been this person's "principal residence" for any number of years. The Senior Citizen Co-op-Condo Equity Act would allow persons who purchased their apartments to count those years that they occupied that apartment as a renter toward the time requirement for eligibility for the special tax exclusion.

In recent years, we have witnessed the conversion of many buildings and the emergence of this trend as a public policy issue. In 1970, there were only 85,000 condo units in the entire United States, while in 1980 alone estimates are that 160,000 conversions took place. HUD projects that by 1985 there will be an additional 1.1 million conversions. This sudden upsurge has been nationwide, with particular concentrations in New York City, Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia, Denver, Houston, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Miami, and Washington, D.C. In New York State alone in 1980, there were 17,315 units converted to co-ops and, of these, 8,108 were located in Manhattan.

We have not adjusted our tax policy for those senior citizens who may purchase what, in effect, have been their homes. These people were discriminated against as renters by not receiving the tax benefits that homeowners get with interest and property tax deductions, and now they must live another 3 years in their principal residence if they are to qualify for the tax exclusion.

This bill would allow those senior citizens who simply decide they want to sell their condo or co-op to do so and qualify for the exclusion, even if they have not occupied it as an owner in 3 of the last 5 years. There is no reason why they should not be able to do so as long as they have lived in that unit for 3 of the last 5 years, whether it be as a renter or owner. The major consideration is that it has been their principal residence.

For many, condo or co-op ownership is an excellent investment. Many buildings that are converted provide a discount from the market price for those residents who buy their units. For others, a conversion can become a real burden and, under current law, a person can be deprived of the opportunity to reap the benefit of this investment opportunity. Some find themselves unable to cope with the monthly payments which are often a great deal higher than rent payments had been. That fact may simply force them out of the building when conversion takes place or place them in a situation of discovering that they are unable to afford the payments once the unit has been purchased. The latter situation may be due less to poor planning than the desire to remain in the neighborhood or to remain in the building that is a person's principal residence. In either of these situations, a person may have to give up that unit with little or no compensation. This bill would allow those residents over 55 years of age who will not be able to afford the payments on the unit but can come up with the downpayment, an opportunity, if residing in that unit for 3 of the last 5 years, to receive the exclusion if they sell at a profit. Those elderly Americans who have in effect established a principal residence in an apartment unit would receive some benefit from being displaced.

I urge my colleagues in the House to support this measure. It recognizes a change in our housing patterns and provides a measure of equity in our tax laws for senior citizens who find themselves caught up in this change.●

STOP ASININE GIVEAWAYS

HON. CARROLL HUBBARD, JR.

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, as we begin to take a closer look at the fiscal year 1983 budget, a letter written to me recently by Mrs. Robert Hendricks of Dawson Springs, Ky., seems very appropriate. Mrs. Hendricks wonders about some of the expenditures being made by the Federal Government in the current economic recession. I believe Mrs. Hendricks' letter is one which should be shared with my colleagues and I wish to do so at this time. The letter follows:

DEAR MR. HUBBARD: My query is, why—if our government is in such dire financial straits, and I have no doubt it is, given the amount of waste even I can see—why cannot idiotic expenditures be stopped? It makes more sense to me to stop asinine giveaways instead of penalizing the hard-working citizens who have a right to expect at least the stability of the Social Security check they've paid into all these years.

I know those little checks can't compare to the ones drawn by retired senators and congressmen, but small as they are, they're sometimes the difference between being poverty stricken and just poor.

Maybe that's the trouble. They are so small compared to what the people who make the decisions draw, that they just can't comprehend such small amounts making any difference.

Also, I've always heard charity begins at home and it burns me up to hear in the news almost daily the millions of dollars going abroad as foreign aid, knowing nine times out of ten the recipient is just going to bite the hand that feeds it. While here at home the average citizen has to pay back plus interest government assistance in time of disasters. It seems odd we would give strangers, some of whom don't even like us, our hard-earned tax dollars and still have the gall to tell the American people there's no way to cut taxes or reduce spending.

I think more are not speaking up because we feel it would do no good. We feel no one in Washington is listening. Here's hoping someone starts listening before Uncle Sam has to file bankruptcy.

Sincerely,

MRS. ROBERT HENDRICKS.●

NATIONAL AGRICULTURE DAY, A WORTHY TRIBUTE

HON. WILLIAM C. WAMPLER

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. WAMPLER. Mr. Speaker, today, Mr. DE LA GARZA of Texas, chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture, and I have introduced a resolution requesting the President to proclaim March 18 as "National Agriculture Day." We are joined in cosponsorship by many other Members of the House and we hope that our other colleagues in this body will join in support.

At a time when fewer than 4 percent of our Nation's population are farmers and ranchers, it is appropriate that we call attention to that vital segment of America producing the food and fiber on which we all depend.

Farming today is more than a way of life, it is a basic business in the Nation's economy.

Perhaps I should put that in a slightly different way: Agriculture is basic to our economy. All other endeavors, including life itself, depend upon our food-producing capability.

Back at the turn of the 20th century, the power that produced the Nation's food and fiber was furnished by muscle power—horse, mule, and human muscle. In those days of the early 1900's one farmer produced enough food and fiber for himself and six other persons.

Today's farmer produces enough for himself and 67 other persons. Families in the world's far-flung places—from West Berlin to Karachi, to Tokyo, to Buenos Aires—share in the bounty from our rich soil and forests.

In the early 1830's, Cyrus McCormick invented the first mechanical grain reaper, but it was not until 1910 to 1920 that mechanization on the farm began to take important shape.

The farmer with the scythe and flail then became the farmer with the horse-drawn reaper and threshing machine. Another cycle in the agricultural revolution and he became the farmer with the tractor and combine harvester. Today, 1 hour of farm labor produces 14 times as much as it did in the period around 1920.

As more tractors, trucks, and automobiles were purchased by farmers, more acres which had been needed to produce feed for working farm livestock were released for food production.

As the farmer's mechanical power developed, so did other agricultural research, technology, and the farmer's know-how.

Better seeds, better feeds, better breeds became his to help increase the Nation's bounty.

And as the farmer's production increased, less manpower was needed. More people found it possible and profitable to leave the farm and take up other pursuits to help provide the goods and services for a growing population.

Technology in agriculture and the savvy of the farm families who put it to work has brought about an unparalleled productive capacity that truly is the envy of the world.

I trace this brief historical background to underline the fact that agriculture today is part of a long continuum of progress that has helped make America great. We must never allow those without agricultural interests to lose sight of that fact. That is the purpose of the National Agriculture Day resolution that we have introduced today.●

ELIMINATION OF CAPITAL GAINS HOLDING PERIOD

HON. DANIEL B. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. DANIEL B. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, the past year has witnessed many great changes in our Federal tax laws that should bring beneficial results to our economy and to our people for years to come. This does not mean, however, that all of the needed changes have been made. One of the most important changes that still needs to be made concerns the capital gains holding period.

American tax laws presently discourage investment and capital formation, when in fact these goals should be pushed as strenuously as possible. One solution to this problem is the elimination of the holding period for capital gains. Such a change would not only accelerate capital formation for use by business, but would also increase the revenues of the Federal Government.

A bill to accomplish this change has been authored by my brother and colleague from Illinois, PHILIP M. CRANE. This bill, H.R. 5248, would eliminate the holding period for capital gains. Many private citizens recognize the need for this change, and for this purpose I would like to include the comments of Mr. Edward F. Moore of New York City:

The Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981, signed by the President in August, has many merits but one vital flaw.

Every American citizen would benefit directly or indirectly from the elimination of a capital gains holding period. Belgium, Canada, France, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom are among countries that do not require a holding period for capital gains. An amendment to the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981 should be promptly considered by the House Ways and Means Committee, the Senate Finance Committee, and the White House.

It should eliminate the holding period for capital gains on any kind of property owned by an American citizen. It should become effective for sales made on and after January 1, 1982. This simple change would increase the revenues of the federal government. It would also help to speed up the growth of capital for investment in new and expanding businesses.

Such a change is non-controversial and would be a net revenue producer. Among the industrialized nations, no country imposes a more severe tax on investment nor offers less encouragement to capital formation than the United States. It is not surprising that we rank last by personal savings rate, last by productivity increases, and last by intensity of corporate investment in the developed world. The removal of the holding period is not just a good idea; it is a necessary one and it should be enacted as a brief amendment to The Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981 and signed into law at the earliest possible date.●

THE IMPACT OF BUDGET CUTS ON CHILDREN

HON. ALBERT GORE, JR.

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, countless times we have heard the expression, "our children are our future." This is a true statement. And without a doubt, this discussion about the impact of Federal budget cuts on our Nation's children is one of the most crucial examinations of the effects of budget reductions that we could ever undertake—because in our assessments of the consequences of cutbacks on our children, we can also gage, to a certain extent, the true cost of budget cutbacks. The budget decisions that are being made in the White House and in the Halls of Congress that affect our Nation's children will have a lasting impact—on them, and on the future of our country.

It is my belief, and I know it is shared by many of you, that the future of many of our children is being compromised. Drastic reductions in nutrition, health, education, and other social services programs will exact a severe toll from our children, our most vulnerable and least powerful group.

I have heard firsthand from many of my constituents, as I know you have, about how budget cuts are hurting them and their families. The outcome of cutbacks in one program in particular—the school lunch program—has been brought to my attention numerous times by parents, teachers, and students in my home State of Tennessee. The budget reductions have resulted in some schools terminating participation in the program, increased meal prices, and fewer students eating meals. In Tennessee alone, the average daily participation rate in the school lunch program has fallen by over 67,000 students, approximately an 8 percent drop in participation when compared with November 1980 statistics.

I have a letter from a student in my district that I would like to share with you that I think points out the effects of the school lunch cutbacks on many students across the Nation. The letter was written by Cindy Williams, a junior at Beech Senior High in Hendersonville, Tenn. In her letter, she wrote:

One issue that bothers the students and myself is the school lunches. We would like to know why one hamburger, maybe twenty french fries and two packs of ketchup costs us one-dollar? Our desserts are thirty-cents extra and one pint of milk is twenty-cents. Why are school lunch prices going up while the quantity is going down? Everyone insists that growing children need good food for good learning. At school lunch prices this is not possible for more than half of (the) families.

As Cindy said, children do need "good food for good learning." We all know that poor nutrition affects both the physical and mental development of children and has an influence on the remaining years of their lives. It has also been proven that malnutrition among children leads to low school achievement. These facts are known. Yet, unfortunately, severe reductions were made in the school lunch program and more cuts are likely to be proposed in the next few weeks.

Although the national school lunch program was established in 1946, it is still needed in the 1980's to help safeguard the health and well-being of our Nation's young people. Adequate funding must be provided for the school lunch program to help insure that students receive the nutrition they need to grow up physically and mentally strong.

There are other cuts that impact just as heavily on children. I will touch on just a few of the major ones, which include reductions in aid to families with dependent children, health and education programs.

In September of 1981, the Tennessee Human Services Department had a cash assistance caseload of 66,067 families. In October of 1981 that caseload was reduced to 55,021 families. A total of 11,046 families were simply budgeted out of the program through new program requirements designed to accomplish that end. Naturally, those most affected by the cuts in this program are children. In Tennessee, the average family participating in the AFCD program consists of a parent and one or two children. In the majority of these cases, no father figure is present. Regrettably, for most of the families removed from the program, the result is likely a deeper step into poverty.

Another area of assistance crucially important to children is health care. It is generally recognized that proper medical care is vital. And fortunately, overall, the health of children in the United States is good. One reason for this is that the Federal Government provides funding for a wide variety of programs that seek to improve children's health and provide care when it cannot be afforded. But we are also seeing cutbacks in the health programs. Many of them have been placed in block grants and then overall funding slashed. Medicaid is under attack and the program may be drastically changed in the very near future. Any changes in programs that provide medical care would undoubtedly hurt children, because the outcome would be that children whose families cannot afford private physicians may not be able to receive adequate health care. This would be devastating setback after many years of progress in the area of providing expanded health care to young people.

Finally, but by no means less painful, are the cutbacks in education programs. Since most of these programs are forward funded, the true effects of the first round of reductions will not be apparent until the beginning of the next school year. At that time, however, less moneys will be available for the education of handicapped students. Fewer funds will be allocated to meet the special needs of economically disadvantaged children. And many other young people may not find programs such as alcohol and drug abuse education, career education, and health education programs available. These programs were placed in a block grant along with many other programs and then funding slashed. State and local educational agencies will be placed in an either/or predicament in deciding which activities to fund with block grant moneys.

To make matters worse, indications are that the administration's fiscal year 1983 budget will call for cutting education aid by about one-third. Furthermore, the education program for handicapped children, which is successfully working to provide an appropriate education to millions of handicapped youth, is slated for inclusion in a block grant. Clearly, such drastic budget action will have a profound effect on millions of our Nation's young people. At a time in our history when education is a necessity, it is vital that every child has the opportunity to realize his or her fullest potential.

The time to provide for the needs of our Nation's children is now. Their future should not be compromised by heartless cutbacks in vital nutrition, health, education, and welfare programs.●

LANGSTON HUGHES

HON. SHIRLEY CHISHOLM

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mrs. CHISHOLM. Mr. Speaker, last week a gala tribute was held in Washington celebrating the life and works of the late Langston Hughes. To honor what would have been Langston's 80th birthday, symposiums, exhibitions, and concerts were conducted throughout the district. Next week similar functions will take place in New York City.

James Langston Hughes was born on February 1, 1902, in Joplin, Mo. He attended Columbia University for 1 year, only to find it large and impersonal. Later he completed his education at Lincoln University in Pennsylvania. At the age of 20 Langston left home and moved to Harlem where he eventually was acclaimed as a major contributor to Harlem's renaissance era. As one of America's truly great black artists, the literary works of Langston Hughes have been an inspiration to thousands. Some of Hughes' most famous works include, "The Weary Blues," "The Negro Speaks of Rivers," and "Fine Clothes to the Jew." I have included a copy of one of his most famous works, "The Negro Speaks of Rivers," for my colleagues' review.

THE NEGRO SPEAKS OF RIVERS

I've known rivers:
I've known rivers ancient as the world and older than the flow of human blood in human veins.

My soul has grown deep like the rivers.

I bathed in the Euphrates when dawns were young.
I built my hut near the Congo and it lulled me to sleep.
I looked upon the Nile and raised the pyramids above it.
I heard the singing of the Mississippi when Abe Lincoln went down to New Orleans, and I've seen its muddy bosom turn all golden in the sunset.

I've known rivers:
Ancient, dusky rivers.

My soul has grown deep like the rivers.

—Langston Hughes.●

TRIBUTE TO DR. BENJAMIN M. BENDAT

HON. EDWARD R. ROYBAL

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor and a privilege for me to rise and pay tribute to Dr. Benjamin M. Bendat. He is an outstanding example of an individual who has given his all to his community.

On Sunday, February 21, at a special dinner in his honor, Dr. Bendat will receive the Jewish National Fund's Theodor Herzl Award for his outstanding dedication and service to his community. Those of us who are fortunate enough to know Dr. Bendat are well aware of how richly he deserves this honor.

Benjamin Bendat has been a Los Angeles resident since 1929. During those years, he has contributed an extraordinary amount of time and effort to his community. He is an accomplished public servant, and one much sought after for his valuable advice and expertise. He has served as chairman of the Los Angeles Mayor's Advisory Committee, the Los Angeles County General Relief Review Committee, and the Los Angeles County Social Service Commission. He is a member of many other boards and commissions on the city, county, and State levels, as well as serving Los Angeles County in the capacity of public social service commissioner.

Besides his service to the public sector, Dr. Bendat is also well known as a distinguished contributor of time, talent, and substance to civic and charitable causes. He has served as president of many service organizations. He is a past president of Beverly Hills B'nai B'rith Lodge, a vice president of the Jewish National Fund, and a life member of the B'nai B'rith International Israel Commission.

This is by no means the first time Dr. Benjamin Bendat's contributions have been recognized and honored. He has been cited many times for his public service activities, by organizations ranging from the city council to the State of California. He is listed in various publications such as the California Register and Who's Who in the West.

I am sure that you will all join me in paying tribute to this extraordinary individual.●

ARTHUR W. HATT HONORED AT RETIREMENT

HON. GUS YATRON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of the Members of the House an occasion of importance which will occur in my district in Reading, Pa., on Friday, February 19, 1982. I refer to a testimonial dinner to be held by the members of the Rajah Temple on behalf of Mr. Arthur W. Hatt who is retiring as recorder of the temple.

Mr. Hatt has served as recorder of the Rajah Temple for the past 13 years. During that period, his service and devotion have been exemplary. I know that I join with the members of the Rajah Temple in commending Mr. Hatt on a job exceedingly well done and in wishing him well for the future.

The testimonial dinner in Mr. Hatt's honor is a fitting and justifiable tribute to Arthur W. Hatt who has nobly and unselfishly served that fine organization. I know that the Members of the House will wish to join in recognizing Mr. Hatt and in wishing him Godspeed.●

STATE DEPARTMENT HUMAN RIGHTS REPORT ON HUNGARY AND ROMANIA CRITICIZED

HON. JOHN LeBOUTILLIER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. LeBOUTILLIER. Mr. Speaker, since the fifties a talented and influential group of former Hungarian jurists, attorneys, prosecutors, and judges have been active in the World Federation of Free Hungarian Jurists. The aim of this organization is to monitor the human rights policies of the Communist regime in Hungary and to report human rights violations in Hungary to the proper American and international authorities and agencies.

Recently, the president of the World Federation of Free Hungarian Jurists, Dr. Laszlo Varga, Esq., wrote a letter to Secretary of State Alexander Haig criticizing the findings of the State Department's "1981 Country Reports on Human Rights Practices." He charged that this report—written before the Reagan administration could do the actual drafting—contained significant mistakes and omissions.

Mr. Speaker, Dr. Varga is an outstanding lawyer who has practiced both in Hungary and the United States. He was the Christian Democratic Deputy to the Hungarian Parliament from 1947 until 1948 when he was forced to flee the country in order to avoid arrest by the Rakosi regime. Since then he has dedicated his public life in the United States to exposing human rights violations by the Soviet Union and its puppet regimes in East Central Europe and has been a longstanding member of the International PEN Club.

I commend this critique to my colleagues as follows:

WORLD FEDERATION OF FREE HUNGARIAN JURISTS,
July 7, 1981.

Hon. ALEXANDER M. HAIG, Jr.,
Secretary of State, Department of State, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: The Country Reports on Human Rights Practices, published on February 2, 1981 and submitted to the Committees on Foreign Relations and Foreign Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives respectively by the Department of State, dealing with 154 countries, is a great effort to promote the practice of the Human Rights. It is a unique task from a government, task that so far not any other country has tried to undertake.

I have read with special interest the Report on Hungary and the minorities in Romania.

Unfortunately the said reports have significant mistakes and omissions and especially concentrates on the misleading laws, rules or Constitutions of the respective communist regimes rather than on the realities.

HUNGARY

The Report says: "Practice of religion is tolerated to a considerable extent." The truth is just the opposite: the regime prevents, to a considerable extent, the practice of religion, to wit: the Catholic Church (70 percent of the population is catholic) and the Protestant Church (27 percent) have no chance at all of using the modern educational means—television. They can only use the radio yearly 13 hours (sic) and only on Sunday mornings at 7 a.m., which is a good time to sleep but not to listen to religious sermons. Religious teaching is shrewdly prevented by the regime and the number of students who enroll for religious teaching is drastically shrinking every year.

The regime publishes yearly 8,000 books, the Churches about 30 with strictly limited contents. To challenge the marxist-atheist ideology is absolutely impossible. It is true that the doors of the churches are open, but on the other hand, every door is closed to promote cultural activities and to educate children for religious life. In sum: the church in Hungary is a bird without wings.

The Report says that "the communist party has sought public support—through mass organization such as the Patriotic People's Front." It is a misleading statement because the PPF is a communist controlled organization, serving only the interest of the party. Therefore, the correct saying is: that the communist party seeks support from its affiliates PPF without the mass, if the mass means voluntary participation.

The Report also states that "As Hungary is a communist country . . ." It is particular that Czechoslovakian and Romanian Reports do not say that Czechoslovakia or Romania are communist countries, but Hungary. Of course, the truth is just the opposite, Hungary is not a communist country but a country under the Soviet occupation and governed by the Soviet supported communist party. If the Reports want to be more precise they should mention that Hungary is the only country behind the Iron Curtain where the communist party, its system and its ideology were overwhelmingly rejected in the 1945 and 1947 elections and by the historical revolution in 1956. The report says that "there are approximately 60,000 Soviet soldiers currently in Hungary." This statement needs more elaboration because there are American soldiers in West Germany but the Government of the United States doesn't influence or dominate German life, but the Soviet Union absolutely controls the Hungarian people, this being the only cause why the Hungarians cannot exercise their fundamental rights. Therefore, it is important to emphasize the Soviet occupation, especially by the Government of the United States who initiated and voted for the resolutions of the United Nations, to withdraw the Soviet troops from Hungary (1004-ESII, 1005-ESII, 1127XI, 1129XI, 1131XI, 1857XVII). Consequently, I think it is not proper to divorce oneself from these resolutions, which have not been executed as yet, and it is in the interest of the world to eliminate the neo-colonialism of the Soviet Union which is a danger to peace as well. Therefore, it is more proper to name the Soviet colonialism than to remain silent, which is a tacit acceptance of it.

The Government of the United States was a leading voice in the United Nations for the independence of Hungary as it was expressed by the late Mr. Charles W. Yost in the United Nations: "The United States intended to persist in efforts to restore the rights of self determination and independence to the people of Hungary" (GA-2787).

Besides the above, the Government of the United States promoted the Human Rights in Hungary because this obligation was assumed by the Government of Hungary by the Peace Treaty of Hungary and the Government of the United States was one of the signatories of that Peace Treaty.

Part (3) of the Report says that, "if a Hungarian citizen accepts the communist form of government and doesn't publicly oppose Hungary's alliance with the Soviet Union, he or she is free to pursue a range of thought and activity." The Report neglects to mention what range of thought and activity and where he or she can pursue it. Probably only at home.

The regime systematically destroys the national spirit and the religion, two of the pillars upon which the 1100 year-old Hungary is based. No article appears and no education can be heard of about the real history and national aspirations of the people. Nobody can form any association or assembly for any purpose. Any kind of opposition paper or article has long ago been buried. The situation is so tragic that even a comunist newspaper mentioned it (Mozgo Vilag, February 1981, Budapest). Therefore, the Report should mention that not any range of thought and activity is tolerated, which serves the national spirit and national consciousness of the Hungarian people.

The Report quotes the Hungarian Constitution and many times correctly mentions that the law doesn't conform with the practice. But the Report is silent about the basic Human Rights: freedom of expression, freedom of press, right to freedom of assembly and association, although guaranteed by the Hungarian Constitution, they do not exist.

In this regard, the Human Rights commission of the United Nations is more practical. In its Report (40-A-35-40. United Nations) the Commission says that the representative of Hungary was asked how many times the basic Human Rights had been invoked by the citizens before the courts. The answer was: "it is difficult to state how many times the Human Rights have been invoked before the courts."

Knowing the communist-language it means—Never.

I certainly feel that the Report has to realistically mention that the Hungarian Constitution, regarding the above basic Human Rights, it is a generous check . . . without funds.

The basic weakness of the Report is its superficiality, it doesn't even try to see beneath it: the silent writers, poets, the misled youngsters and a country with leading statistics of suicides and declining population rate. Yes, the shop-windows in Budapest are very attractive, many automobiles are running, a factor that seems to dominate the minds of the foreigners and journalists. But the dominating force presently in Hungary is that the regime masterminded very skillful policies aimed at giving the citizens more food and less and less national and spiritual values, which endangers the future of the Hungarian nation.

ROMANIA

I don't want to deal with the Report of the Human Rights of Romania, but I have to say that, according to my judgment, it is generally more realistic than the Hungarian one, and rightly starts: "Romania is a centralized unitary state" and never mentions that it is a communist country as it is mentioned in the Hungarian report.

Regarding the Hungarian minorities, the Report omits basic data and also divorces itself sometimes from the facts.

It is important to mention the number of the minorities because their right to have a mother tongue school, university and to participate in the federal and local legislatures depend on the number.

The Report on Czechoslovakia correctly mentions the minorities saying that about 600,000 Hungarians live in Czechoslovakia (page 766).

The reason why the Romania Report doesn't mention the number of the minorities is unclear but it sure is a voluntary omission, probably to try to minimize the fate of the Hungarians in Romania.

According to reliable information at least 2.5 million Hungarians live in their historical place in Romania, which is about 11 percent of the population. This is a significant number especially if we consider that 47 member countries of the United Nations have less population than the Hungarians in Romania. The statement in the Report that: "The Government of Romania doesn't discriminate against its minorities as a matter of policy" doesn't conform with the truth, it is just the other way around: the Government of Romania does discriminate against the minorities, especially against the Hungarians, as a matter of policy.

The 2.5 million Hungarians no longer have a University in Romania and to study in their mother tongue is more and more difficult. If they want to maintain their national, cultural tradition and their religion, they cannot proceed in the Romanian life, and to practice the same is equivalent to being enemies of the State. Their publications, threater performances, etc. cannot express their history and national aspirations.

The Hungarians in Romania-Szekely had not only a great history but a significant cultural life, which was an organic part of Europe. Presently it is a part of the Romanian-chauvinist dictatorship—without any organic part links with the West.

Unfortunately the Report doesn't say anything about the participation of the 2.5 million Hungarians in the Romanian Federal and local legislative bodies. Probably it is not significant any more and the Romanians try to merge with every minority, especially the Hungarians, to serve the ill-oriented Ceausescu-cult.

The tragic situation of the Hungarians in Romania was reported by many reliable sources, especially by Amnesty International, but the author of the Country Reports on Human Rights is very reluctant to accept them, he is rather inclined to accept the misleading explanations of the Romanian Government, which attitude hardly conforms to the promotion of Human Rights.

I think nobody can question that during the last 10 years the Government of Romania has systematically destroyed the national and cultural life of the Hungarians and tried, and still try by force, to incorporate them into the Romanian life.

I feel that it should be the obligation of the author of the Report to demand, or at least to mention, the restoration of the confiscated rights, because without them it is an admission of the inhuman actions.

No nations, or minorities can survive the occupation or the dictatorship only if they don't give up their aspirations for freedom and independence. Unfortunately, the analyzed Report, although seemingly trying to promote Human Rights, in reality, mostly surrenders to the status-quo.

Sincerely yours,

LASZLO VARGA, J.D.,
President, Attorney at Law.●

TERRORIST CAMPAIGN AGAINST TURKISH DIPLOMATS MUST BE STOPPED

HON. STEPHEN J. SOLARZ

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Speaker, only a few days ago, the ugly specter of terrorism manifested itself again in our country when Kemal Arikan, the Turkish counsul general in Los Angeles, was assassinated. An organization called the Justice Commandos of the Armenian Genocide claimed responsibility for the murder.

Mr. Arikan's brutal murder was not, regrettably, an isolated act. A murderous global assassination campaign has been waged by Armenian terrorist groups against Turkish diplomats for almost a decade, and has already claimed the lives of 20 diplomats and their dependents. No matter what the historical grievances—real or imagined—of the Armenian community against Turkey, this is simply not a justification for the slaughter of innocent Turkish citizens around the world.

The Turkish consul general's tragic death demonstrates once again that the fate and future of the United States and Turkey are closely intertwined. Clearly, the fight against terrorism is one of the many common interests shared by both countries. I need not remind my colleagues that the slaying of Mr. Arikan occurred during the same week as the rescue of General Dozier, and only a few weeks after the murder of a U.S. military attaché in Paris.

I am particularly disturbed by the fact that three of the successful assassination attempts, as well as several other unsuccessful attempts, have been in the United States. This situation cannot be allowed to continue. As a first step, I call upon the Reagan administration to immediately implement whatever security measures are necessary to protect the lives of Turkish diplomats and their families stationed in the United States. It is inconceivable that any more Turkish diplomats must sacrifice their lives before the United States provides them with the protection to which they are entitled.

Second, and equally important, the administration must strengthen its counterintelligence operations in order to ruthlessly root out all terrorist groups operating on American soil. Hopefully, the arrest of suspects in Mr. Arikan's case will help uncover additional information about other terrorists and lead to further arrests.

Finally, the United States must take the lead in mobilizing our allies around the world to redouble their efforts to combat the scourge of international terrorism and end this global blight once and for all.●

BUY AMERICAN—IF YOU CAN!

HON. JOSEPH M. GAYDOS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, after more than a decade of mounting trade deficits, during which they witnessed the demise of many American manufacturers whose products once were household words, the American consumer has become convinced this Nation needs a "Buy American" policy for the good of the American people.

The consumers want to do their part in establishing such a policy. But, they have encountered two obstacles in their search for American-made goods.

First, many products they seek are no longer available under American names. They have been forced off the shelves by foreign brands. Second, the cost of the American item frequently is higher than its foreign counterpart. Many of us here are all too familiar with the pricecutting practices employed by foreign firms to undercut and eliminate American competition. Government subsidization of foreign industries to lower production costs and the illegal dumping of those goods on the American market has proved a bitter revelation for those of us who truly believe in the concept of free enterprise and fair trade.

Art Buchwald, the noted American satirist, touched on the dilemma faced by domestic consumers in an article which appeared in the February 9 issue of the Pittsburgh Post Gazette. The item is a stinging truism and I applaud the writer's observation.

I have never met Mr. Buchwald, although I frequently read his column, but I am inserting his piece into the RECORD for the attention of my colleagues. I do so with the fervent hope the article is a product of his own ability—and not that of a foreign ghost writer.

[From the Pittsburgh Post Gazette, Feb. 9, 1982]

BUY AMERICAN—UNLESS IT COSTS TOO MUCH

(By Art Buchwald)

"There is only one way the country is going to get on its feet," said Baleful.

"How's that?" I asked as we drank coffee in his office at the Baleful Refrigerator Company.

"The consumer has to start buying American," he said, slamming his fist down on the desk. "Every time an American buys a foreign refrigerator it costs one of my people his job. And every time one of my people is out of work it means he or she can't buy refrigerators."

"It is a vicious circle," I said.

Baleful's secretary came in. "Mr. Thompson, the steel broker, is on the phone."

My friend grabbed the receiver, "Thompson, where the hell is that steel shipment from Japan that was supposed to be in last weekend? . . . I don't care about bad weather. We're almost out of steel and I'll have to close down the refrigerator assembly line next week. If you can't deliver when you promise, I'll find myself another broker."

"You get your steel from Japan?" I asked Baleful.

"Even with shipping costs, their price is still lower than steel made in Europe. We used to get all our sheets from Belgium, but the Japanese are now giving them a run for their money."

The buzzer on the phone alerted Baleful. He listened for a few moments and then said, "Excuse me, I have a call from Taiwan . . . Buster, how are you coming with those door handles for the Mark Four? Look, R&D has designed a new push-button door handle and we're going to send the specs to you. Tell Mr. Chow if his people send us a sample of one, and he can make it for us at the same price as the old handle, we'll give his company the order."

A man came in with a plastic container and said, "Mr. Baleful, you said you wanted to see one of these before we ordered them. They are the containers for the ice maker in the refrigerator."

Baleful inspected it carefully and banged it on the floor a couple of times. "What's the price on it?"

"Hong Kong can deliver at $2 a tray and Dong-Fu Plastics in South Korea said they can make it for $1.70."

"It's just a plastic tray. Take the South Korean bid. We'll let Hong Kong supply us with the shelves for the freezer. Any word on the motors?"

"There's a German company in Brazil that just came out with a new motor and it's passed all our tests, so Johnson has ordered 50,000."

"Call Cleveland Motors and tell them we're sorry but the price they quoted us was just too high."

"Yes, sir," the man said and departed.

The secretary came in again and said, "Harry telephoned and wanted to let you know the defrosters just arrived from Finland. They're unloading the box cars now."

"Good. Any word on the wooden crates from Singapore?"

"They're at the dock in Hoboken."

"Thank heaven. Cancel our order from Boise Cascade."

"What excuse should I give them?"

"Tell them we made a mistake in our inventory or we're switching to fiberglass. I don't care what you tell them."

Baleful turned to me. "Where were we?"

"You were saying that if the consumer doesn't start buying American this country is going to be in a lot of trouble."

"Right. It's not only his patriotic duty, but his livelihood that's at stake. I'm going to Washington next week to tell the Senate Commerce Committee if they don't get off the stick there isn't going to be a domestic refrigerator left in this country. We're not going to stay in business for our health."

"Pour it on them," I urged him.

Baleful said, "Come out with me into the showroom."

I followed him. He went to his latest model, and opened the door. "This is an American refrigerator made by the American worker, for the American consumer. What do you have to say to that?"

"It's beautiful," I said. "It puts the foreign imports to shame."●

A TRIBUTE TO MR. ROBERT BURNS

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in honor and appreciation of a truly remarkable man. Robert McCrea Burns, farm adviser at the University of California Cooperative Extension, in Ventura County, who retired December 31, 1981, after 29 years of dedicated service.

During his career of nearly 30 years he contributed substantially to the economic and educational success of the agriculture industry. He has authored a multitude of vital publications on citrus and avocado production, through which he has tirelessly served his constituents in a skillful and professional manner. His expertise has been exhibited continuously throughout his illustrious career; he established himself as an authority in his field in Ventura County, Calif., Florida, and internationally as well.

His contributions and accomplishments instill a great sense of pride in all who know him and have been affected by his significant career. I highly commend this outstanding citizen.●

THE TRAGEDY OF HAITIAN REFUGEES

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to bring to the attention of my colleagues in the House a moving homily delivered during a recent memorial service for Haitian refugees who have died in tragic circumstances.

Mr. Speaker, the 26th Congressional District of New York, which I am privileged to represent, includes a substantial Haitian-American population. I have met with the leaders of that community on numerous occasions, and have, to the best of my ability, represented their views to the executive branch and to my colleagues in the Congress.

It is clear that the plight of Haitian refugees is a tragic one. The deaths of 33 Haitian refugees so close to our shores last October represents, regrettably, only the tip of the iceberg as far as deaths of Haitian refugees is concerned. I will continue to make every effort to assure that the plight of Haitian refugees is addressed in a humanitarian spirit.

I insert the homily, delivered by Father Smith Jeannot on October 31, 1981, at St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church, Spring Valley, N.Y., at this point in the RECORD:

SPRING VALLEY, N.Y.,
October 31, 1981.

DEAR AMERICAN FRIENDS: You are here today to comfort us in our sorrow and to pray with us for the 33 Haitian refugees who drowned off the coast of Florida last Monday. We appreciate your gesture and we thank you for coming; we are very grateful to you. Your presence here is a token of friendship from the American community of Rockland County to the Haitian people.

Let me remind you that Haiti and U.S.A. have many things in common. We share the same spirit of independence, freedom, liberty, and justice for all. That is why, while we were engaged in our own war of Independence against the greatest army of Europe—The French Army—we sent about eight hundred (800) of our best soldiers to take part in your struggle against the British Army. Among them was our great hero Henry Christophe, who later became King Henry, the ruler of the northern part of Haiti until 1820.

As you may have known, Haitian soldiers played a decisive role in the Battle of Savannah in Georgia. It was on January 1, 1804, that Haiti became the second free nation in the Western Hemisphere. Despite many problems facing our young nation, we exported our revolution by helping Francisco Miranda and Simon Bolivar and others to free Venezuela and other countries in South America.

As you see, our greatest dreams are independence, freedom, liberty, equality, fraternity, and justice for all.

Unfortunately, today we do not enjoy freedom at home, and our beloved Haiti is a joke. We are experiencing one of the worst dictatorship in the history of mankind. Thousands of innocent people are killed or jailed indefinitely for nothing. Under this terrible dictatorship, Haiti has become one of the poorest nations in the world. People who do not support the regime have to make a terrible choice: either leave the country, keep quiet or die. That is why we are forced to leave our beautiful country; a land of dream, a country of eternal spring. Now, about one million Haitians live abroad.

Today, we badly need your support, your friendship and your understanding. We need the support of all civilized nations in the world. We hope that democratic nations will welcome the Haitian refugees and stop helping the Haitian dictator to remain in Power. Above all, we hope that you will export in a just, democratic and peaceful way, your great revolution.

May God Bless You!!

Rev. Father Smith Jeannot.

H.R. 3269

HON. HAROLD S. SAWYER

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, after careful study of H.R. 3269, the Malt Beverage Interbrand Competition Act, I have decided to cosponsor this bill. It is designed to enhance competition by allowing manufacturers and distributors to enter territorial agreements where there is a substantial amount of competition with other brands in the area. At first this appeared to me to be a contradiction in terms under our current antitrust policy. However, after taking a look at the marketplace, I have revised my thoughts.

Michigan law requires brewers to provide territorial agreements to licensed wholesalers. As a result, many wholesalers exist to provide the State with a quality product and secure jobs. By comparison, in States without territorial agreements, the use of predatory sales practices at the distribution level have resulted in the closing of numerous small retailers and wholesalers. This indicates to me that where there is stiff competition between brands, the existence of territorial agreements will increase competition in the long run because more distributors will exist to compete with the distributors of other brands. Without territories, a few powerful distributors can drive their competition out of business. In Michigan, where jobs and a quality product are essential, the Interbrand Competition Act is necessary. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I am cosponsoring H.R. 3269.●

LEECH LAKE INDIAN RESERVATION'S NEW BUSINESS COMPLEX

HON. JAMES L. OBERSTAR

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, on January 30, 1982, the Leech Lake Indian Reservation, Cass Lake, Minn., celebrated the grand opening of its newly remodeled Che-Wa-Ka-E-Gon (Big House) Business Complex. The complex contains a restaurant, a service station, and a supermarket and provides some 40 jobs for the reservation.

It was a pleasure to be one of the guest speakers at the grand opening of Che-Wa-Ka-E-Gon, along with Minnesota State Senators Jerry Willet and Skip Humphrey. I would like to share with my colleagues the remarks of Hartley White, chairman, Leech Lake Reservation Business Committee, at the opening of the business complex. Mr. White's remarks follow:

On behalf of the Leech Lake Reservation Business Committee, I welcome you all here today to celebrate the grand opening of this new business complex, Che-Wa-Ka-E-Gon.

Since the Indian Education and Self-Determination Act became law, new life on our reservation has been started and our children are afforded sound education experiences. But now we are faced with a crisis. The country is in a recession, many of our people are on unemployment, and the administration of Ronald Reagan threatens the political status of tribal government throughout the United States.

This new building, the 82 H.U.D. homes, and the new Bug (Chief Bug-O-Nay-Ge-Shig) School are all Economic Development projects borne out of the past administration—I want to make that very clear. I don't want Mr. Reagan to get any credit for this project.

It is our sincere hope that in the near future programs and policies that meet the needs of all poor people will once again flourish. This complex is a good example of what people and government can accomplish by working together. H.U.D., E.D.A., B.I.A., the Upper Great Lakes Regional Commission and the Leech Lake Tribal Council all joined together to finance this project. I myself feel very confident that with good people like my friends State Senator Jerry Willet, State Senator Skip Humphrey and Congressman Jim Oberstar, this country will once again get back on the course that had been established by Franklin D. Roosevelt and professed by the late Hubert Humphrey.

Without the help of our friend, Jim Oberstar, this building may never have been built. He has fought long and hard for the rights of Indians on the E.D.A. Subcommittee and he is a strong believer in Indian fishing rights and Indian education.●

ENERGY CONSUMER REGULATORY REFORM ACT

HON. CARLOS J. MOORHEAD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce today the Energy Consumer Regulatory Reform Act of 1982. This important regulatory reform initiative is cosponsored by my colleagues, Messrs. GRAMM, LOEFFLER, TAUZIN, BROYHILL, COLLINS, DANNEMEYER, CORCORAN, and BROWN.

This bill would reform seven separate energy regulatory statutes which have burdened small businesses, cost energy consumers millions of dollars, and distorted the marketplace for alternative energy and energy conservation products and services over the last 6 years. The following is a synopsis of the bill's provisions:

OUTLINE OF "ENERGY CONSUMER REGULATORY REFORM ACT OF 1982"

SECTION 1—SHORT TITLE

SECTION 2—FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

SECTION 3—REPEAL OF BUILDING ENERGY PERFORMANCE STANDARDS (TITLE III OF ECPA)

The Building Energy Performance Standards regulatory authority would be repealed. Authority for DOE to provide technical assistance to the building industry would continue under the "Buildings and Community Systems" portion of the DOE Authorization bill.

SECTIONS 4 AND 5—REPEAL OF RESIDENTIAL AND APARTMENT CONSERVATION SERVICE (TITLE II OF NECPA, TITLE V OF THE ENERGY SECURITY ACT)

Federal statutes which mandate that electric and gas utilities offer energy audits to residents and commercial building operators under burdensome regulatory standards would be eliminated. Existing utility energy audit programs could continue under State and local law.

SECTION 6—REPEAL OF CONSUMER APPLIANCE EFFICIENCY STANDARDS (TITLE III OF ECPA)

DOE authority to regulate the energy efficiency of consumer appliances would be repealed. The requirement that consumer appliances display energy efficiency labels would be continued.

SECTION 7—REPEAL OF DOE INTERVENTION AUTHORITY AND NATIONAL RETAIL ELECTRIC RATE STANDARDS (PURPA)

Sections of the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 which authorize DOE to intervene in State utility proceedings and which mandate consideration of national retail electric rate standards would be repealed. DOE intervention in State utility proceedings intrudes on matters exclusively the concern of State and local governments, and most State utility commissions have completed their consideration of national retail electric rate standards. Section 210 of PURPA regarding small power producers and cogeneration would be retained.

SECTION 8—REPEAL OF INDUSTRIAL ENERGY CONSERVATION REPORTING REGULATIONS (TITLE III OF ECPA)

The industrial energy conservation reporting requirements, which burden businesses with needless and duplicative paperwork, would be repealed. The industrial sector has been the top achiever in energy conservation compared to all other sectors since the 1973 Arab oil embargo. The Federal government has no business imposing additional regulatory burdens on industry unrelated to public health or safety. Voluntary industry reporting of energy conservation gains would continue.

SECTION 9—REPEAL OF EMERGENCY ENERGY CONSERVATION ACT

DOE stand-by authority to preempt State and local energy emergency consumption targets would be repealed. Presidential authority to allocate energy supplies in an emergency would not be affected by repeal of this regulatory authority.

This regulatory reform legislation would also reaffirm that State and local governments—not the Federal bureaucrats—have the primary responsibility to regulate public utility rates. Too often in the last several years, Federal officials have intervened in electric and gas utility rate proceedings, and the ratepayers and consumers have ended up paying for their intermeddling.

My bill is truly a regulatory reform package for the people—the small businesses, the retailers, the hard-pressed homebuilders and realtors, the electric consumers, the insulation and plumbing and heating contractors, and the energy conservation and renewable energy entrepreneurs. They are all subject to the needless, burdensome regulatory statutes reformed by my bill—Federal statutes which would mandate building standards, drive inexpensive home appliances off the market, require small energy consumers to subsidize duplicative energy conservation programs, or place energy conservation entrepreneurs and State and local energy officials in a straitjacket of Federal regulation and paperwork.

In my home State of California, a leader in experimental approaches to energy conservation, many have questioned the need for many of these regulations. For example, insulation contractors have filed suit against the Residential Conservation Service because of its anticompetitive impacts.

My bill would also save tax dollars and assure that the scarce Federal dollars available for energy are more prudently spent on long-term R. & D. and low-income assistance, not on Federal regulations which duplicate the free market. My bill would save $190 million in Federal expenditures for these programs between fiscal 1982 and 1984, compared to fiscal 1981 projections.

Regulatory reform is a cornerstone of President Reagan's economic recovery program, and many of the statutes in my bill have been targeted for review or reform by Vice President BUSH's Regulatory Relief Task Force.

I believe the Energy Consumer Regulatory Reform Act of 1982 will be a significant part of the regulatory reform agenda of the 97th Congress.

H.R. —

A bill to reform the Federal regulation of energy use and allocation, and for other purposes

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Energy Consumer Regulatory Reform Act of 1982".

FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) the Government, through restrictions on the use and allocation of energy resources, has increased energy costs to consumers;

(2) the costs to energy consumers of Government restrictions on the use and allocation of energy resources exceed the consumer benefits in terms of energy saved and National security;

(3) Federal energy restrictions impose massive paperwork and compliance burdens on energy distributors, public utilities, and energy producers, the costs of which are ultimately borne by energy consumers;

(4) Government restrictions on energy use and allocation have created artificial energy shortages, reduced competition among businesses, increased inflation in energy prices, and contributed to the financial instability of public utilities;

(5) State and local governments should be primarily responsible for the regulation of energy conservation activities by public utilities, the building industry, energy producers and developers, small businesses, and energy consumers; and

(6) reform of Government restrictions on energy use and allocation is in the interest of public health, safety and welfare, would reduce consumer energy costs, and would provide for a more equitable and efficient allocation of energy resources among citizens in the National economy.

(b) The purpose of this Act is—

(1) to reduce energy costs to consumers;

(2) to reform the regulation by the Federal Government of energy use and allocation;

(3) to foster competition;

(4) to eliminate Government waste, paperwork, and unnecessary spending;

(5) to provide more equitable and efficient allocation of energy resources among citizens; and

(6) to restore balance between the Federal Government and the State and local governments in the regulation of energy use and allocation.

LEAST-COST BUILDING ENERGY EFFICIENCY IMPROVEMENTS

SEC. 3. (a) The Energy Conservation and Production Act is amended by striking out title III, relating to building energy performance standards.

(b) The National Energy Conservation Policy Act is amended—

(1) in part 2 of title II, by striking out section 231, and in section 233, by striking out "part A of the Energy Conservation in Existing Buildings Act of 1976,"; and

(2) in the table of contents, by striking out the item relating to section 231 of part 2 of title II.

(c) Paragraphs (3) and (4) of section 504(c) of the Housing Act of 1949 is amended by inserting "(as in effect immediately before the date of the enactment of the Energy Consumer Regulatory Reform Act of 1982)" after "Existing Buildings Act of 1976" each place it appears.

(d)(1) Section 103 of the Energy Reorganization Act of 1974 (42 U.S.C. 5801) is amended by striking out paragraph (7), and by redesignating paragraphs (8) through (12) as paragraphs (7) through (11), respectively.

(2) Section 108 of the Energy Reorganization Act of 1974 (42 U.S.C. 5818) is amended—

(A) in subsection (b), by inserting "and" at the end of paragraph (2), by striking out "; and" at the end of paragraph (3) and inserting a period in lieu thereof, and by striking out paragraph (4); and

(B) by striking out subsection (e).

FULL COMPETITION IN RESIDENTIAL ENERGY CONSERVATION

SEC. 4. (a) The National Energy Conservation Policy Act is amended—

(1) in title II, by striking out part 1, relating to residential energy conservation; and

(2) in the table of contents, by striking out the items relating to part 1 of title II.

(b) The Energy Security Act is amended—

(1) in title V, by striking out subtitle B, relating to the residential conservation service; and

(2) by striking out the items in the table of contents relating to subtitle B of title V.

FULL COMPETITION IN COMMERCIAL ENERGY MANAGEMENT SERVICES

SEC. 5. (a) The National Energy Conservation Policy Act is amended—

(1) by striking out title VII, relating to the commercial and apartment conservation service; and

(2) in the table of contents, by striking out the items relating to title VII.

(b) The Energy Security Act is amended—

(1) in title V, by striking out subtitle D, relating to the commercial and apartment conservation service; and

(2) by striking out the items in the table of contents relating to subtitle D of title V.

LEAST-COST CONSUMER APPLIANCE EFFICIENCY STANDARDS

SEC. 6. The Energy Policy and Conservation Act is amended—

(1) by striking out sections 321(a)(6); 325; 326(b)(3)(A); 329; 332(a)(5); 333; 335; 336(a)(2); 337; and 339; and subsections (a)(2), (b), and (c) of section 327, relating to energy conservation program for consumer products other than automobiles; and

(2) in section 326(b)(5), strike reference to section 325; in section 324, strike reference to section 325; in section 336(a), strike reference to sections 325(a) and 327(b); in section 336(b)(1) and (2), strike reference to section 325.

ASSURING THE INDEPENDENCE OF STATE AND LOCAL PUBLIC UTILITY COMMISSIONS

SEC. 7. (a) The Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 is amended—

(1) by striking out titles I and III, relating to retail regulatory policies for electric utilities and gas utilities;

(2) by striking out section 603, relating to the utility regulatory institute; and

(3) by striking out the items in the table of contents relating to—

(A) titles I and III; and

(B) section 603.

(b) The Energy Conservation and Production Act is amended by striking out title II, relating to electric utilities rate design initiatives.

VOLUNTARY INDUSTRIAL ENERGY CONSERVATION REPORTING PROGRAM

SEC. 8. The Energy Policy and Conservation Act is amended—

(1) by striking out parts C and E of title III, relating to industrial energy conservation; and

(2) in the table of contents, by striking out the items relating to parts C and E of title III.

INDEPENDENT STATE AND LOCAL AUTHORITY TO MEET ENERGY EMERGENCIES

SEC. 9. (a) The Emergency Energy Conservation Act of 1979 is hereby repealed.

(b) The Energy Policy and Conservation Act is amended—

(1) by striking out part A of title II, relating to general emergency authorities; and

(2) by striking out the items in the table of contents relating to part A of title II.●

BLACK HISTORY MONTH

HON. JULIAN C. DIXON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, throughout the month of February, millions of black Americans across the United States are gathering in commemoration of Black History Month. Back in my own district, several events are planned in honor of those black Americans who, through their courage and selfless dedication, have made significant contributions in helping to erase the bonds of poverty and economic deprivation visited upon minorities and other under-represented Americans.

On February 26, 1982, I have the privilege of serving as honorary chairperson of one such event. The Greater Watts Willowbrook Chamber of Commerce is holding a banquet on that evening and will honor a gentleman who best epitomizes those qualities we all strive for in service to humanity. Concerned, benevolent, dedicated, and committed are just a few of the adjectives that come to mind when one hears the name of the Reverend Frederick Douglass Ferrell. Founder and pastor of Tabernacle Faith Baptist Church in Los Angeles and Watts' first black legislator, Reverend Ferrell will be honored by the citizens of Los Angeles on the evening of the 26th. It is especially fitting that he is being honored during this month and, in recognition of Reverend Ferrell's outstanding achievements, I would like to use this occasion to share with my colleagues just a few of his distinguished accomplishments.

The youngest of five children, F. Douglass Ferrell was born on February 21, 1915, to Robert and Willie Lee Ferrell in Gonzales County, Tex. At the age of 5, young Ferrell's family moved to San Antonio, Tex., where Douglass attended elementary and secondary schools.

At the age of 7, Ferrell realized his destiny to serve mankind through the ministry. Delivering his first sermon at the age of 18, Ferrell went on to Bishop College in Marshall, Tex., followed by studies at the Los Angeles Theological Seminary. And in 1936, at the tender age of 21, F. Douglass Ferrell was ordained a Baptist minister.

The members of the congregation of the Progressive Baptist Church in Berkeley, Calif., were the first recipients of Reverend Ferrell's ministry. Following 2 years at Progressive, Ferrell moved to Los Angeles where for the next 3 years he would serve as pastor of Macedonia Baptist Church.

Encouraged by the prayers and loyalty of 38 devout Christians, in 1944 Reverend Ferrell founded the Tabernacle Faith Baptist Church. Although initial services were conducted in a lodge and later in a tent, services today are held in an imposing edifice designed and constructed primarily by Rev. F. Douglass Ferrell.

For the past 37 years, Reverend Ferrell's most ardent supporter has been his lovely wife, Mrs. Esther Mae Ferrell. Married on June 10, 1945, the Ferrells are the proud parents of two sons, Frederick, Jr., and Sheridan Robert, and a daughter, Stephanie Camille. The family is further enriched by the presence of grandchildren.

With an insatiable concern for his fellow man and the belief that the underprivileged must pool their resources and knowledge if they are to prosper economically, in 1953 Reverend Ferrell founded the Tabernacle Faith Federal Credit Union. Today, this organization provides a full range of services to families of Tabernacle Faith Baptist Church.

Reverend Ferrell's providence and insight has been felt by the youth of his community as well. Beginning with five young people from various high schools in Los Angeles in 1960, he founded Teen Age World. A cooperative venture, Teen Age World was established on Reverend Ferrell's "5-C" principle: Christ, character, capability, capital, and cooperation. Teen Age World saw as its chief mission to prevent rather than cure juvenile delinquency by providing youths with an opportunity for creative and constructive entrance into the adult world. The organization's first business venture was a clothing store, which provided its youthful members with both experience in the consumer market and an income as well.

In 1956, Reverend Ferrell explained his ministry to the Western Hemisphere with the establishment of a church mission in Jamaica, West Indies. For over 25 years, Ferrell's selfless mission program has extended a helping hand to hundreds of Jamiaca's downtrodden by providing clothing to the naked and food to the poor.

There is more.

A man of great vision and wisdom, a man consumed with a desire to help his fellow man unshackle the bondages of poverty, prejudice, fear, and hopelessness, in 1962 Reverend Ferrell opted for an alternative approach to curing society's ills when he entered the political arena and unseated a 25-year incumbent in the California Legislature. This achievement earned Reverend Ferrell the distinction of becoming the first black man elected to the California State Legislature from the 55th Assembly District.

With great aplomb and honor, Assemblyman Ferrell served the citizens of the 55th Assembly District for two terms before voluntarily retiring in December 1966.

On February 26, 1982, fellow clergymen, citizens of Los Angeles, and friends will gather to pay homage to this gentleman of firsts. His life has serves as an inspiration to all having enjoyed the privilege of his association. The recipient of numerous awards from government, fraternal orders, clubs, churches, and even a few honorary doctorate degrees, the most cherished award possessed by this great humanitarian is the legacy he has created for mankind. I am pleased to have the opportunity to be associated with him on the occasion of this, his finest hour.●

COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

HON. MICHAEL G. OXLEY

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is essential that we adopt the supplemental appropriation for the Commodity Credit Corporation.

The appropriation is to be used to reimburse the CCC for net realized losses, which now total $5.3 billion. Primarily due to today's poor market conditions, the record 1981 crop yields, and increases in commodity program loan and purchase rates, the CCC's funds have been severely depleted. Its borrowing authority is down to about $600 million.

Without this appropriation the CCC may be forced in the very near future to suspend its loan and deficiency payment operations. This would be a disaster for the farmers of America, who have already suffered from the extremely low prices received this year. I am particularly concerned with the plight of the small farmers, many of whom may well be driven out of business if they are unable to obtain needed financing from the CCC.

It is no exaggeration to say that farmers are the backbone of America, and to not enact this appropriation would do a great disservice not only to farmers but to the entire Nation.●

EL SALVADOR

HON. JOE MOAKLEY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, on January 28, 1982, President Reagan told Congress that the Salvadoran Government's human rights record entitled it to receive U.S. military aid. This certification to Congress will allow the administration to send $26 million in military aid to El Salvador during fiscal 1982. The President, in his letter to Congress, stated that despite some problems which still exist as a result of the civil war, the Duarte government is making a sincere effort to comply with internationally recognized human rights and is achieving substantial control over the armed forces through imposing a code of conduct on the military and outlawing extremist paramilitary groups.

I would like to suggest that these supposed positive actions on the part of the Salvadoran Government are merely for cosmetic purposes. That, in fact, President Reagan—in keeping with the certification provision of the foreign assistance legislation passed last year, should not have certified that the conditions in El Salvador are worthy of additional U.S. military aid. Almost every report coming out of El Salvador seems to indicate that conditions are worsening.

In the January 27 edition of the Washington Post, many of my colleagues will recall the gruesome account of the Salvadoran woman, Amaya, who was the sole survivor of a massacre by Salvadoran soldiers which took place last month. She told of how the soldiers herded people into the village square and separated the men from the women. She saw the men blindfolded and then taken away and shot.

The woman said:

Around noon they began with the women. First they picked out the young girls and took them away to the hills. Then they picked out the old women and took them to Israel Marquez's house on the square. We heard the shots there. Then they started with us in groups. When my turn came and I was being led away to Israel Marquez's house I slipped behind a tree and climbed up. I saw the lieutenant then. He was personally machinegunning people, I heard the soldiers talking * * * An order arrived from a Lt. Caceres to Lt. Ortega to go ahead and kill the children too. A soldier said "Lieutenant somebody here says he won't kill children." "Who's the sonofabitch who said that?" the lieutenant answered. "I am going to kill him." I could hear them shouting from where I was crouching in the tree. I could hear the children crying. I heard my own children. When it was all over late at night the lieutenant ordered the soldiers to put a torch to the corpses. There was a great fire in the night.

Other stories have surfaced that are equally as terrifying. In Amnesty International's 1981 human rights report we are told of an incident in which Salvadoran soldiers gathered children and babies together, threw them into the air and slashed them to death with machetes. The children were then decapitated and their bodies slit into pieces and thrown to the dogs.

A human rights report compiled by the American Civil Liberties Union and Americas Watch Committee informs us that torture—of the most brutal kind—is commonplace in El Salvador. The report goes on to state that statistics are difficult to compile because there are so few victims who survive to give testimony. However, the bodies that are recovered show signs of uncivilized torture.

Mr. Speaker, it seems clear that the conditions in El Salvador do not justify the President's certification. In fact, in light of the recent reports and testimonies of various people who have fled from El Salvador we might ask—how can the President, in good conscience, allow military aid to continue? I would like to suggest that President Reagan heed the words of the great British conservative Edmund Burke who once said, "A conscientious man would be cautious how he dealt in blood." By militarily propping up a regime that oppresses its people—we, too, are contributing to that oppression.

There are those in the administration who attempt to justify American involvement in El Salvador as a crusade to prevent that country from falling into the hands of the Communists. I would like to point out that the Reagan administration is advancing the cause of communism while seeking to contain it in El Salvador. I would urge the administration to be more mindful of history. Over 25 years ago, in an attempt to save the Iranian people from the harsh effects of communism, the CIA put the Shah on the throne in Iran. Since that time, the United States propped him up with billions in arms. However, the Shah fell to the challenge of a religious extremist because he had lost the support of his people. People who were tired of going without food, living in poverty and being physically abused and even tortured for the smallest bit of dissent. I need not describe the well-known activities of the SAVAK secret police and the terror they spread amongst the Iranian people. It is important to note that the same people who turned on the Shah seized the U.S. Embassy in Tehran.

In retrospect—one cannot help but feel that it would have made more sense and been more beneficial to the people of Iran and the United States (and to global security) if instead of arms we had sent people who knew how to farm, build homes, build roads, and heal the sick. If we had, perhaps the fate of Iran might have been different.

Unfortunately, it seems we are falling victim to the same type of mentality in our dealings with El Salvador. Rather than trying to win the hearts of the Salvadoran people through food, medical supplies, and development aid—we are, instead, sending sophisticated arms to the present government which has no respect for the most basic civil and human rights of its people. The people of El Salvador are turning on their present government—not out of a lust for Marxist ideology—but, rather, in hopes of putting food in their children's mouths and shelter over their children's heads. Communism can seem very attractive to an oppressed people—especially if it is the only alternative to sustained oppression.

Mr. Speaker, our policy toward El Salvador has become so distorted and so twisted that I fear, unless immediate action is taken to end military assistance to that country, we will soon find ourselves in an unnecessary war in Central America. There appears to be no end to our involvement. Just yesterday, the administration announced its desire to send an additional $55 million in military aid to that distraught country. And, in conscience, some final words must be said about our moral obligation to the people of El Salvador. I am appalled by the apparent insensitivity of the present administration toward the atrocities that are now occurring in El Salvador. The fact that the United States is militarily maintaining a regime that is oppressing its people is a betrayal of the very ideals of our Founding Fathers. The basis for the creation of the United States was freedom and self-determination. We are not living up to those high ideals when we, indirectly, contribute to the obstruction of those freedoms for the people of El Salvador.

At this time, I would like to add my name as a cosponsor and ardent supporter of Representative GERRY STUDD's resolution, calling for a suspension of U.S. military aid to El Salvador until the Senate and House have both concluded that the conditions established by law have truly been achieved.

In addition, I would like to submit for the RECORD a very perceptive article published in the Washington Post on February 2, 1982, by the very gifted columnist, Mary McGrory.

The article follows:

KILLINGS, ATROCITIES, AND NOW REAGAN SUGGESTS A GOLD STAR?

To the surprise of no one, Ronald Reagan has certified human rights progress on the part of the government of El Salvador. Given his mind-set about leftist insurgencies, he would nominate it for the Nobel Peace Prize.

His policy toward the murderous junta is as rigid as it is uncoordinated.

Immediately following the award of Reagan's gold star, government troops stormed into a San Salvador slum and murdered 19 people. It was a continuation of their program of winning hearts and minds through massacre.

Millions of Americans watched on their weekend television news shows as bullet-ridden bodies were hauled onto trucks and victims' wives and children, eyes wide with horror, stared into the cameras. We had just been told that the president proposes to subsidize this policy of extermination with an immediate additional $55 million in aid.

The administration view of the atrocity, which came so embarrassingly on the heels of official U.S. approval, was carried to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee by Thomas O. Enders, assistant secretary for inter-American affairs, a suave survivor of another adventure in supporting unpopular government—the Vietnam war. El Salvador in no way resembles that, he said emphatically.

Enders looks the ultimate diplomat, a man of enormous height and distinction. There apparently is nothing he will not say in support of Foggy Bottom fantasy.

Quizzed about other alleged government atrocities, he glided into the absurd. The blame for the mass killings in Morazan must be borne by the leftists. It was not possible to prove or disprove that the government troops had killed hundreds of peasants, he said, but, "the guerrilla forces did nothing to remove them from the path of battle." It says a great deal about our side in El Salvador that we expect its enemies to rescue people from it.

Reagan, in his certification, said the trend in official murder is "downwards." The figures do not support him. According to Reuben Zamora, an exiled leftist leader, quoting the legal aid office of the Catholic diocese of El Salvador, the total of noncombatant deaths went from 8,062 in 1980 to 12,501 in 1981. A drop in the last three months is explained by the fact that thuggery has moved out of the cities and into the countryside, where reporting is more difficult.

The United States wants to give the Salvadorans $55 million to replace helicopters lost in a rebel raid and $30 million for unspecified purposes, while we press for the political solution through elections in March. Guerrilla leaders reject elections, perhaps because all are on a government proscribed list and would be shot on sight as they approached their local polling place. They favor negotiations, which the United States says are out of the question.

One person in the State Department apparatus apparently did not get the word about the "political" solution. He was none other than our ambassador in El Salvador, Deane Hinton, who gave an interview in which he let the cat out of the bag.

There may be no choice he said, in an unguarded moment, but to go for a military victory.

The idea that we can buy one merely by pouring in more weapons is not compelling. The one way it could be done would be through an increase in U.S. advisers. Getting Congress to vote for more direct military intervention in an election year is not a realistic possibility.

Hinton, when asked if he saw a way out of the war, said, "I don't know."

Enders shook his gray-blond head when confronted with this outbreak of honesty in the ranks.

"It is not my view," he said succinctly. "We are proposing institution-building."

Enders did his most notable "institution-building" as ambassador to Cambodia where, from the embassy, he directed U.S. bombing runs.

Amid the contradictions and confusions, Enders had one card to play—an endorsement of El Salvador. The lone member who does not support the government, Archbishop Rivera y Damas, was among the signatories. That was a coup for the State Department, which has encountered fierce resistance to its course from U.S. bishops. It has had much better luck with the Vatican, which takes a more sympathetic view of the civil war as an East-West showdown in the hemisphere.

Enders did not mention the crude bargain being offered to sweeten the preposterous certification—a promise that the six soldiers accused of the 1980 murder of four U.S. churchwomen would, finally, be brought to trial.

The families of the women, who have been given the runaround at the State Department, are not mollified. They want to send observers. They don't want to now just who pulled the trigger, they want to know who gave the orders.

And Rep. Gerry E. Studds (D-Mass.) and Rep. Michael Barnes (D-Md.) are introducing a resolution to declare the Reagan certification null and void. It would have no binding effect, but many members of Congress blanch at going on the record in favor of financing official terror in a year during which they have to go before the voters.●

HOW CAN ANYBODY SPEND A TRILLION DOLLARS?

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues an article, entitled "How Can Anybody Spend a Trillion Dollars?" The article was sent to me by my constituent Frederick Rice and it proved thought provoking:

HOW CAN ANYBODY SPEND A TRILLION DOLLARS?

How much is one trillion dollars? That is the new limit our government wishes to put on the national debt. But, have you ever tried to place one trillion in perspective and compare it with something a little more down-to-earth? It's mind-boggling.

Consider just how far a trillion dollars would go these days. Not necessarily in buying power, because the present rate of inflation makes any calculations nearly worthless as soon as they are written down. So, how far will a trillion dollars go—laid end to end?

A single dollar bill is six inches long. Starting on a smaller scale, one million dollar bills would reach about 95 miles if laid end to end. That's about the distance from Santa Ana to San Diego. You won't want the job of laying them end to end, so use a 600-miles-per-hour jet airplane to reel out the string of a million one dollar bills. It'll take you about nine and one-half minutes.

Now let's try a billion dollar bills. The end-to-end length would be about 95,000 miles—about four times around the world at the equator! The jet plane ride would take six days and 14 hours.

Ready to place one trillion one dollar bills end to end? That's one thousand billion, or one million million, dollar bills. Now you've really got your work cut out for you. You're going to travel 95 million miles! Remember that it's only 93 million miles from the Earth to the nearest star—our Sun. And, assuming the jet airplane can carry one trillion dollars, the trip will take 18 years nonstop.

As you can see, one trillion dollars is difficult to comprehend. The point of all this: How can anybody possibly spend that much money?●

THE CARE FOR KEEPING U.S. AID TO COLLEGES

HON. PETER A. PEYSER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Speaker, as a people and a nation, we have always cherished the availability of an education as central to our hopes for prosperity. Now, for the first time in our country's history, we have an administration which is seeking to reverse our long held commitment to obtaining an education. Through massive budget cuts in our financial aid programs, President Reagan is taking an action that will not only cost this country billions of dollars through the loss of future technological skills, but is saying that in our democracy, education is not for everyone who is qualified, but only for those who can afford it.

With the debate now beginning in Congress on the proposed next round of cuts in education, I would like to take this opportunity to share with my colleagues the perspective of one of our Nation's premier educators, Michael I. Sovern, the president of Columbia University, published in the February 7 New York Times Magazine. I urge all my colleagues to give this article serious consideration.

THE CASE FOR KEEPING U.S. AID TO COLLEGES

(By Michael I. Sovern)

"If you think education is expensive," goes an old college fund-raising maxim, "try ignorance." The warning is timely.

At a time when Government should be making major new investments in campus research, vital to raising national productivity, the Reagan Administration has embarked on a program of "economies" that will drastically curtail research efforts in the nation's universities, turn many of the best minds of a generation away from careers in education and research, and close the door to first-rate young people who cannot pay today's tuitions.

Obviously, those assigning us the loser's role in the international technology competition have not intended these consequences. Commenting on the entire Federal budget, David Stockman himself conceded that "we didn't think it all the way through."

It is, however, not too late to think it all the way through and reverse the damaging cuts in student aid as well as cuts in funding of new scientific equipment and in university research budgets—measures that would actually result in "savings" of only a fraction of 1 percent of the Federal budget.

The issue is not whether the Federal Government as a whole is spending too much or too little, nor whether the supply-siders, Keynesians or monetarists, have the best of the argument. Whatever the economic faith of our elected officials, increased support for education and research must be given a high priority.

The predominance of American professors among Nobel Prize winners dramatically demonstrates the importance of our campuses in producing men and women who gave this nation the lead it once enjoyed in science and technology. But Nobel Prizes celebrate the accomplishments of yesterday, not tomorrow.

Today, at independent universities that trained most of the country's scientists and produced the lion's share of major research advances, world-renowned pioneers are working in physical facilities that are woefully out of date. Although China's scientific development fell far behind us during the Cultural Revolution, a recent group of Chinese visitors were astonished at the antiquated scientific equipment they saw on a tour of a leading Middle Western university.

Had they traveled more widely, they would have realized that this was the norm and not the exception. Not only has laboratory equipment been refined at a dizzying pace, but costs have skyrocketed as well. A recent study by the Association of American Universities found that a $750 million investment in scientific equipment and facilities is needed over the next three years simply to sustain current activities at only 15 of the nation's research universities.

It would be hyperbolic to say that we are embarking on our own Cultural Revolution. But one can imagine, without exaggeration, a news story of Jan. 20, 1989, datelined Washington, that reads: "In her inaugural address, the President called for a multibillion-dollar crash program of Federal and private investment in America's university research base. She asserted that radical action is critical to meet the problems posed by the greatest shortage of scientists and scholars in our history. Without it, she said, we have no hope of regaining our position as tenth most productive nation in the world."

Such a news story would not be farfetched because the per capita gross national product of the United States has slipped to tenth place in the world. Our foreign trade pattern resembles that of an underdeveloped country: We export raw materials in abundance and import more manufactured goods than we sell abroad. All this cannot be isolated from the fact that over the past 15 years, Japan and West Germany have doubled their output of scientists and engineers.

Tolerance of this erosion of our ability to compete in the world runs counter both to the Reagan agenda and to a long and wise tradition. Since World War II, the Government has pursued a bipartisan policy rooted in the recognition that the nation's well-being depends on a national commitment to the quality of its universities. Federal support produced the rapid growth of graduate schools and the consequent surge to international pre-eminence of American university research. The Federal Government has recognized that scientific and technological competitions with other nations are won or lost on American campuses.

Major research universities cannot but applaud the Reagan Administration's goals of controlling inflation and promoting a sound and stable economy, but these goals are not served by cutbacks in Federal assistance to higher education. When a high-technology company is in danger of losing out to the competition, it invests more in research and development, not less. In the world economy, the United States competes for scientific leadership not only with Japan but with much of Western Europe. If this country is to meet that competition, have a sound economy and bring inflation under control, it must invest more in research and development. Past investment in American universities has been repaid many times over by massive contributions to the national strength. If there is a time to increase that investment, this is it.

When Ronald Reagan took office, there was no Federal program to deal with the decaying physical plant of the nation's universities. There was the beginning of a response to the problem of outdated equipment, but this was killed by the Office of Management and Budget. What all universities had was a respectable program for making the most of their "human capital." "Human capital," the economist Eli Ginzberg pointed out, "defined as the 'skill, dexterity and knowledge' of the population, has become the critical input that determines the rate of growth of the economy. . . ." This perspective underlies the Federal Government's provision since 1965 of nearly $20 billion in loan guarantees and interest subsidies for college and university students plus billions more in direct financial aid to students most in need. Session after session of Congress concluded that these funds would be a fruitful investment in the nation's future.

The Reagan Administration, however, is pressing a massive assault on virtually every aspect of the Federal student aid program. It did put an end to such questionable programs as subsidized loans to families that did not need them. But by proposing huge additional cuts in student aid, the Administration has shown little understanding of the critical importance of such aid to the national interest. Without a strong Federal role in assisting promising students to further their studies, the supply of students will diminish in quantity and quality. In fact, many graduate schools are facing a diminishing pool of qualified applicants.

Ironically, success in the drive against student aid would mean not only a dismantling of much of the nation's research base, but a large increase in costs to the taxpayer as well.

To understand that paradox, one must understand the financing of a college education. It actually costs about $8,000 per student for a college to run a high-quality undergraduate program. That does not include books, room, board and other living costs.

Suppose a promising Cincinnati high school senior—call him Alex Hamilton—wants to attend an Ivy League university. The Hamilton family's income is about the national median of $21,000. Alex's younger sister is also a good student.

Many students like Alex are enrolled in independent colleges and universities today. How? First, they are often not charged what it actually costs to educate them. Endowment income and contributions meet some expenses that would otherwise be passed along as part of the tuition fee. Second, needy students can receive an additional subsidy in the form of a scholarship, for which Alex Hamilton would qualify at many schools. Third, Alex may borrow $2,500 from a bank at 9 percent interest under the Guaranteed Student Loan Program. Fourth, he would be eligible for a Federal Pell Grant of about $800. He and his parents would make up the rest—from any savings they might have and from his summer and after-school jobs.

Thus, we have a package of support provided by the college, Alex, his parents, and the Federal Government. Like millions of Americans before him—including Ronald Reagan and me—Alex is working his way through college. But times have changed: No student can earn what it costs to attend an independent college today. To ask that every student contribute something before receiving help is fair. To withhold help from those who have done all that can be expected of them is cruel and ultimately wasteful.

How much is the Federal Government actually contributing to the cost of Alex's higher education? Since he pays no interest on his loan until after graduation, the Federal share includes the interest on that $2,500 loan—say $375 per year (at 15 percent interest). That plus his Pell Grant of $800 totals $1,175 for his freshman year. The taxpayer's dollar is matched about 6 to 1 by private resources, and Alex is free to choose a college based on his ability. (As he moves to his senior year and borrows more, the Federal interest cost will rise accordingly, but it will never be more than a small fraction of his total costs.)

What has the Reagan Administration proposed? First, shrink the Pell Grant program. This would eliminate Alex Hamilton's eligibility. Subtract $800. Second, abolish the in-school interest subsidy. Subtract the remaining $375. There would be an apparent saving to the taxpayer of $1,175.

But there is no such saving. It still costs $8,000 to educate Alex Hamilton. Without the option of going to a private college or university—where the cost of that education is largely absorbed by private resources—students like Alex will most likely go to a public institution close to home. The tuition at a publicly supported institution is about $1,500; the remaining $6,500 comes from public funds. Thus, by increasing the number of students at public universities, the Reagan Administration will actually be saddling state taxpayers with an increased cost of $6,500 in order to save $1,175.

Furthermore, the Reagan Administration's policy toward higher education will affect a staggeringly large number of students: Most of this country's 12 million college and university students come from families with incomes of less than $30,000; the families of many earn less than $20,000.

A fundamental strength of the American system of higher education is diversity. It would be folly to upset the balance of public and private education, to limit individual choice, to segregate rich students in private universities and the poor and middle class in public ones. Yet these are the effects of the Reagan Administration's financial aid policy.

What of the effect of the Administration's proposals on graduate schools—the source of tomorrow's researchers, scholars and teachers?

If Alex Hamilton were to spend four years at an independent college, by the time he graduated he would owe $10,000—plus, under the Administration's plan, annual interest costs. Lending institutions have indicated they will not take on the burden of collecting interest from students on a periodic basis. In response, the Administration has recommended compounding the interest so Alex will owe not $10,000 on graduation, but $12,000 or more.

At that point he must decide whether to go on for a Ph.D. or try a professional school. As a graduate student he is now entitled to borrow $5,000 a year. If Alex chooses the Ph.D. route, the Administration's proposal would bring his cumulative debt after his first year to approximately $19,000. After his second year, that debt will be approaching $26,000. And he still has at least three more years before he can reasonably hope to get an assistant professorship—at a salary of less than $20,000 a year. The prospect is forbidding even with the in-school interest subsidy.

The nation's universities are producing lawyers and business-school graduates at an unprecedented rate and scientists and scholars in diminishing numbers. Traditionally, a large proportion of graduate students in the humanities have set their sights on college teaching. But with little hope of immediate employment during the current tenure bulge, many of the best scholars are switching to professional schools. In an exhaustive and disturbing study of the perils facing American graduate schools, William G. Bowen, president of Princeton University, found that in 1980 only 34 percent of all summa graduates at Harvard-Radcliffe planned immediate graduate study in the arts and sciences—compared with more than 75 percent in the mid-1960's. And who will be there to teach the next generation of scientists? Between 1970 and 1980, the number of Ph.D.'s in physics graduating from American universities dropped by almost half—from 1,740 to 985.

If the budget cutters have their way, tomorrow's little band of Ph.D.'s will consist of the scions of the wealthy, another handful that the best-endowed universities can afford to support, and a larger number supported by taxpayers at public colleges and universities. Though our graduate schools have had a glorious past—leading the nation in a century of unparalleled advances in research—whether they have a future depends upon the continued resistance of Congress to an unbelievably shortsighted proposal.

I believe deeply in the unquantifiable values of a university. Great universities aspire to transmit to their students the heritage of civilization; to unlock the treasures of the past; to bring fresh vision and new discipline to the growing fund of human knowledge; to enliven curiosity; to cherish the freedom to explore and express; to encourage joy in the presence of beauty and appreciation in the presence of wisdom; to discover, in the words of William Saroyan, "that which shines and is beyond corruption." It is not simply for technology that we need to know more, Lewis Thomas observes, "but for the hope of wisdom which our kind of culture must acquire for its survival."

A society that undervalues such aspirations does so at its peril. But even if one believes that a democratic society has no stake transcending economics and defense in the education of its citizens, one has to conclude that the Administration's policy toward higher education runs counter to the goals it has set for itself.

Anyone who balances the cost of fundamental laboratory research—which provides the base for such practical discoveries as antibiotics—against the soaring cost of medical care will find that, dollar for dollar, biomedical research is far and away the best buy in town. The sad irony is that today, with the explosive productivity of the "new biology," the opportunities for helping patients in the nation's hospitals are greater than ever before. Yet in 1981 the Reagan Administration insisted on cutting funding of basic biomedical research in our universities.

As to the Administration's commitment to enhance our national security, I would have thought it obvious that today's defense rests fundamentally on yesterday's basic science. The laser, for example, though happily of great use to medicine, communications, chemistry and physics, among others, is also at the heart of a number of weapons systems. Every Administration for the past 40 years has recognized the fundamental importance of basic science to the defense effort.

And what of the humanists and social scientists studying the cultures, politics and economics of our allies and adversaries? How can this country conduct an informed foreign policy without a flow of experts on the various areas of the world? We have only a dribble and it is in danger of evaporating further still.

The Department of Defense (D.O.D.) is trying to help. In a memo to Pentagon officials, Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger has warned: "The national base of basic research is inadequate to meet future D.O.D. needs and substantial sustained real growth in defense research is needed to restore this base." Although the Pentagon estimates that it will increase spending for basic research at universities by some $60 million during the current fiscal year, this comes nowhere near compensating for the hundreds of millions of basic research dollars cut from other programs. And, unlike the beleaguered National Science Foundation and National Institutes of Health, which have funded broad areas of fundamental research, the Pentagon's concept of "basic" research, in line with legal, fiscal and political constraints, must be directed toward projects of identifiable value to the military.

If the American university research base is not to be saved by the Pentagon, what about corporate philanthropy? "The level of industrial support for university research may triple in the 1980's," said Dr. Edward E. David Jr., president of the Exxon Research and Engineering Company, "but that would not equal the proposed cuts in the Federal budget in only one year." Last fall, the Exxon Education Foundation, aware that in recent years doctoral candidacies in engineering have declined by one-third, announced a program sensitive to the impending shortage of faculty members (between 10 and 15 percent of engineering faculty positions across the nation are currently unfilled). The foundation divided $15 million for graduate fellowships and junior faculty salary support among 66 engineering schools, a boost for which all 66 of us are grateful. Neither Exxon nor its beneficiaries claim these new, thinly spread grants are more than a small step in the long journey toward an answer to the question: Who will be left to teach the next generation of engineers?

Increases in corporate contributions to higher education in recent years are heartening. "Total corporate aid to higher education has risen to the billion-dollar-per-year range," observed Edward G. Jefferson, chairman of Du Pont and one of the leaders in corporate support for higher education. Yet, he added, "it is unlikely that corporate aid can be expected to offset reductions in Government funding."

The proposition that Federal cuts create incentives for private gifts is dangerously deceptive. In fact, Federal dollars on campus are frequently necessary to generate private dollars—both from increased numbers of students and from private philanthropy. When Federal aid was climbing, so was the quality of graduate students attracted to well-financed research projects and prominent professors whose distinction in teaching was matched by excellence in grant-supported research. As Federal assistance declines, the quality of research deteriorates, new funds dry up, old sources of support wither.

President Reagan's science adviser, George Keyworth, agrees that "the heaviest responsibility for basic research naturally falls on the Government. This is especially true where long-term, high-risk research is involved. . . ." Those are reassuring words, but the numbers are less cheering. The President's latest budget requests call for substantial cuts in the research and development funds of most Federal agencies and departments.

Overall, according to Frank Press, president of the National Academy of Sciences, the latest cuts proposed by the President would take away another $600 million from the $5.5 billion Federal budget for basic research. The resistance of Congress has so far spared the National Science Foundation's budget for the physical sciences, mathematics and engineering—at least for the moment they are scheduled to receive nominal increases—but funding for science education was cut by more than two-thirds.

Programs for basic research have always been easy to cut. They do not pack the political punch of urgency and quick results. From 1968 to 1980, according to Richard Atkinson, Chancellor of the University of California at San Diego and former director of the National Science Foundation, basic research as a fraction of the Federal budget declined by 27 percent and as a fraction of the gross national product by 16 percent.

The abruptness of many Federal cuts aggravates the problem. Following a meeting in October with Administration officials in Washington, nearly 100 distinguished scientists issued this statement: "Instability and abrupt changes in funding have severe effects: Research teams are broken up; investments in experiments involving large facilities . . . are poorly used. The continued flow of new researchers into our industrial and university laboratories is best maintained by their stable and continued participation in university-based graduate research.

"Basic science is a long-term investment, and depends on government support," stated the scientists. "Support of scientific research is a public expenditure from which all sectors of society benefit. There are no significant sources of support for such a collective benefit which can replace the Federal Government."

Without a major increase in Federal support for research projects and assistance to students, there will almost certainly be a further weakening of this nation, as countries with the sense to anticipate the future assume the lead. "The strength of the nation's research and development comes back to the strength of our top universities," acknowledged Dr. Keyworth. "We must restore strength to them."

As the President's science adviser, Dr. Keyworth reflects the Administration's views on the importance of the nation's leading universities. At the same time, the President has a profound commitment to preserving the vitality of the private sector. In his commencement address at Notre Dame last year, he said: "If ever the great independent colleges and universities are replaced by tax-supported institutions, the struggle to preserve academic freedom will have been lost."

But if these convictions are not impressed on the budget makers who have been hacking away at higher education, this Administration is in danger of going down in history as the great ravager of our independent colleges and universities.

The President can still lead us away from that destructive fate. Congress, in resisting major student aid and research cuts, has shown that it will follow if the Administration will lead in building on what we have.

Not only should the Administration renew the research capability of the nation's universities by restoring the cuts in basic research support, it should upgrade scientific equipment in our deteriorating university laboratories and establish a national construction fund to help rebuild university research facilities.

In addition to preserving the in-school interest subsidy, the Reagan Administration should:

Continue to make loans available to every student who shows genuine need. After all, these loans are made by private institutions, not the Government, and repayment is the obligation of the student. Besides, declining interest rates will cut much more of this program's costs than any of the pending proposals for change.

Restore the cuts in the Pell Grant and related Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants programs. During the past academic year, Pell Grants closed the gap for 2.7 million students. This year the gap is wider, with $300 million already slashed from the program.

Increase support for Work-Study, the program that makes it possible for students to find jobs in a tight economy so that they can work their way through college.

Carry out the program of merit graduate fellowships that became law as the Education Amendments of 1980 but that has yet to receive an appropriation.

These measures can be funded through savings from cuts that should not be reversed—$2 billion through the elimination of Social Security's financial aid feature and billions more from changes in the Guaranteed Student Loan Program already enacted.

Should more than those savings be invested in higher education and research? All I ask is that our elected representatives look at the way our money has been used, and with what results, from the G.I. Bill of Rights to the National Science Foundation and National Institutes of Health to the Pell Grant. Is there a more productive and broadly beneficial investment in human resources and the nation's future than a strong Federal commitment to the American university?●

THE VOLUNTEER DEVELOPMENT CORPS

HON. PAUL FINDLEY

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. FINDLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of my colleagues to the fine work being accomplished by the Volunteer Development Corps. This organization was created in 1970 to provide short-term, volunteer, technical help to cooperatives in developing countries. It has been doing an excellent job ever since.

In 1980 alone, 33 VDC volunteers completed 31 projects in 20 developing countries—7 in Africa, 5 in Asia and the Pacific, 15 in Latin America, and 4 in Jamaica. Twenty-two of these projects involved cooperatives marketing farmers' products, distributing farm supplies, and providing farm credit. Three involved cooperatives providing thrift and credit services, and others helped cooperatives providing insurance services and handling consumer goods.

Glenn Heitz is an outstanding example of the volunteers which VDC attracts. Mr. Heitz has been President of the Federal Land Bank of St. Louis, Mo. since 1970 and, to put it briefly, knows everything there is to know about cooperative farm credit systems in the United States. Drawing upon his expertise and experience, Glenn went to Brazil this past fall as a VDC volunteer to meet with top Brazilian agricultural and financial leaders on setting up a farm credit cooperative system in that country. The lack of a cooperative credit system for Brazilian farmers has seriously inhibited their ability to increase production. Without recommending that Brazil adopt the U.S. system, which has worked well for our farmers but which may not be transferrable to an advanced developing country, we was able to convey to the Brazilian leaders the basic principles of farm credit systems in the United States and relate problems and possibilities which Brazilian authorities might want to consider in setting up their own systems.

There was agreement at the end of the meetings that, because of the volunteer services of Glenn Heitz, Brazil was able to avoid errors in establishing cooperative credit for the farmers. A followup visit of the Brazilians involved to St. Louis later this year is planned to permit ideas to be exchanged once again and the process furthered.

I would like to congratulate the Volunteer Development Corps, whose current budget of over $600,000 a year is funded mostly by the Agency for International Development, for their work and for sending Glenn Heitz to Brazil. And I would like to express my appreciation to Glenn for his outstanding contribution to agricultural development within the United States and now abroad. It is the efforts of individuals such as this man which help advance international peace and stability.●

CLEVELAND BELLOW

HON. RONALD V. DELLUMS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, Webster defines art as "the conscious use of skill and creative imagination especially in the production of aesthetic objects."

Too often, the contribution of art and the work of our Nation's artists go without recognition. We must be thoughtful and maintain an historic record of artistic contributions. I rise in recognition of a nationally acclaimed artist, graphic designer, and educator, Mr. Cleveland Bellow.

Mr. Bellow is the recipient of a B.F.A. in graphic design and an M.A. in art from the College of Arts & Crafts in Oakland, Calif. He has been a Rockefeller fellow in museum education, interning at the Fine Arts Museum in San Francisco and a National Endowment of the Arts fellow, 1979–80.

Mr. Bellow's exhibits speak for themselves. They include: The Los Angeles Municipal Art Gallery; Studio Museum, New York; Museum of the National Center for Afro-American Artists, Boston, Mass.; 2d World Festival of Black and African Arts and Culture, Lagos, Nigeria; San Francisco Art Festival; Society's Child Gallery, Seattle, Wash.; Whitney Museum of Art, New York; Jackson, Mississippi Municipal Art Gallery; California State Fair and the Oakland, California Museum.

Mr. Bellow has numerous publications and has been active in civic affairs. He is the newly-elected chairman of the Alameda County Arts Commission in California and has earned my respect as a conscientious and creative professional worthy of this recognition.●

NATIONAL LEAGUE OF FAMILIES OF AMERICAN PRISONERS AND MISSING IN SOUTHEAST ASIA

HON. ROBERT K. DORNAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to my colleagues' attention the role of the National League of Families of American Prisoners and Missing in Southeast Asia. The league, under the direction of Col. Earl P. Hopper and Ms. Ann Mills Griffiths has been instrumental in providing public awareness and support that is imperative in working to obtain an honorable resolution for our heroic men still left in Indochina 9 years after the signing of the Paris peace accords.

Last week, on January 26, 1982, the league sponsored a day-long seminar including participants from veterans groups, Veterans' Administration coordinators, and officials of the intelligence community. This meeting was conducive to all representatives in attendance by providing updated information of current U.S. Government policy in this area.

The league has shown considerable interest in the efforts of the House Task Force on American Prisoners and Missing in Southeast Asia, of which I am chairman. I recently received a letter indicating their anticipation that the task force will pursue every avenue in Congress to advance progress in acquiring a final and acceptable resolution to this nightmare that has plagued not only the POW's and MIA's but also the American people for over 18 years.

The letter from Colonel Hopper follows:

NATIONAL LEAGUE OF FAMILIES OF AMERICAN PRISONERS AND MISSING IN SOUTHEAST ASIA,
Washington, D.C.

Hon. ROBERT K. DORNAN,
Chairman, Task Force on American Prisoners and Missing in Southeast Asia, Cannon House Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Task Force on American POW/MIAs in Southeast Asia has primary Congressional responsibility for ensuring that various U.S. government agencies are exerting maximum effort to resolve the question of whether Americans are still held prisoner in Indochina and developing policies to utilize such data.

Over two years has passed since then Director of DIA, LTG Eugene Tighe, USAF, testified before Congress that high priority would be assigned to POW/MIA intelligence collection. Since that time, and as evidenced by more recent testimony, the situation has evolved to the point where General Tighe last testified that in his professional judgement, Americans are currently held captive in Indochina.

The League's concern is to determine a means for getting past "increasingly convincing evidence" that POWs are still held to "conclusive proof" of the fact. We have repeatedly been assured that high priority is currently being assigned, that all U.S. intelligence collection disciplines are being utilized and that the U.S. government has the necessary commitment to ensure resolution of the issue. Nevertheless, there seems to be a roadblock.

Two years is more than adequate time to confirm or deny reports and other intelligence regarding the existence of live POWs—in fact it is too long. The most respected and highest officials within U.S. intelligence have previously stated that American POWs were left behind in 1973. In view of the stature of the witnesses appearing at this hearing, I believe it appropriate to obtain their responses to these requirements.

We look to the Congress, specifically the Task Force, to delve into this problem, seeking a means to overcome whatever obstacles exist. Adequate resources are said to be available to determine the validity of over 370 first-hand live sighting reports. The question is not one of available resources but rather of willingness on the part of the current Administration. Strategic factors are now playing a greater role and what should be considered a humanitarian issue is now extremely political, not by the League's choice nor by the government's, but by political realities in Indochina.

We strongly encourage you and the members of the Task Force to critically investigate what is currently being done and what additionally needs to be undertaken to ensure that specific actions are now taken to end years of uncertainty surrounding the POW/MIA issue.

If enough time passes, and it has already been nine years since the termination of official U.S. involvement, there will no longer be a problem of Americans still held captive—all will have died, thinking that their own government did not care to exert sufficient effort to gain their freedom.

We in the League urge you to fulfill your expressed commitment to the POW/MIAs and their families.

Sincerely,

EARL P. HOPPER, Sr.,
Chairman of the Board.●

APPOINTMENT OF MS. JO-ANN GASPER

HON. BARBARA A. MIKULSKI

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. Speaker, I, and several of my fellow members in the Congresswoman's Caucus have written a letter to Secretary Schweiker to express our displeasure at the appointment of Ms. Jo-Ann Gasper to the position of Deputy Assistant Secretary for Social Services Policy at the Department of Health and Human Services.

As my colleagues can see from the letter, which I submit for the RECORD, Ms. Gaspar has demonstrated an incredible ignorance of, and lack of sensitivity to the serious problem of family violence.

Secretary Schweiker has made one more appointment from a pool of extremists who are bent on reversing the progress we have made in this country toward dealing with the concerns of the American family. Ms Gaspar has managed to minimize and trivialize family violence at a time when it is increasing. The FBI estimates that an American woman is abused every 18 seconds. This adds up to nearly 5,000 women abused each day. One-eighth of all murders in the United States are the result of spouses killing their spouses.

I have introduced legislation (H.R. 1651) which would begin a coordinated Federal response to this insidious problem, and provide the groundwork for State, local, and private resources to develop the capacity to deal, in a positive and safe manner with victims of domestic violence.

I urge my colleagues to express to Mr. Schweiker their displeasure with this shortsighted appointment, and to give this administration a message that we will not tolerate a return to the days when violence was a "private affair."●

PARRIS LAUDS POLL ON DULLES

HON. STAN PARRIS

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention an article recently published in the Journal newspapers of northern Virginia concerning the issue of whether to use Dulles International Airport or National Airport.

As reported by the Journal, "A whopping 69 percent of northern Virginia residents would prefer to use Dulles International Airport rather than close-in National Airport, if the same flights were available at each facility."

Since most airlines claim that by changing flights from National Airport to Dulles would displease customers, I find the Journal report extraordinarily enlightening and I would like to share it with my colleagues:

[From the Fairfax Journal, Feb. 8, 1982]

NORTHERN VIRGINIANS FAVOR DULLES, 2 TO 1

(By Tom Wuriu)

A whopping 69 percent of Northern Virginia residents would prefer to use Dulles International Airport rather than close-in National Airport, if the same flights were available at each facility.

That's the startling result of a poll by telephone completed late last week.

The Journal phoned 350 residents of Fairfax and Arlington counties, Alexandria, Falls Church, Fairfax City, Vienna, Burke, Herndon, Reston, Clifton and Fort Belvoir.

Major airlines have long maintained they would gladly shift flights from seriously over-crowded National if the public would use Dulles. In the past, they maintain, few travelers wanted to make the trip to the Fairfax County terminal.

The results of The Journal poll appear to cast doubt on that conclusion—at least insofar as it concerns the million people living in Northern Virginia.

Those called were asked:

If it were possible to take the same flights from both Dulles and National airports, which terminal would you use?

POLL RESULTS

Airport	Total	percent
Dulles	241	69
National	109	31

The most surprising result of The Journal poll was the fact that citizens from nearly all parts of the Northern Virginia area said they would be willing to use Dulles if more flights were available there.

It was expected that respondents in western and northern Fairfax County would vote for Dulles, but so did people living in Falls Church and Arlington.

In only two areas, Alexandria and Mount Vernon-Lee, did the poll show a definite preference for National.

The polling was completed in one evening, with respondents asked which airport they would use if flight availability were the same.

They also were asked where they lived.

The random sampling was sufficient to insure accuracy within a five percent plus or minus range.

Carrington Williams, chairman of the Dulles Policy Task Force, termed the poll results "of great interest."

The information will be passed on to airlines on Feb. 16, Williams said, when representatives of the commercial carriers meet to consider possible shifts of business from National to Dulles.

That meeting, sponsored by the Department of Transportation, will include officials from various area groups fighting to boost flights at Dulles.

Even if the airlines are able to work out a plan to shift some traffic to Dulles,they still must obtain the approval of the Civil Aeronautics Board. The CAB has approved the Feb. 16 session.●

EMELYN K. JEWETT: "HUMANITARIAN OF THE YEAR"

HON. RONALD V. DELLUMS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, on February 24, 1982, Emelyn Jewett will be honored as the "Humanitarian of the Year" by the Easter Seal Society for Crippled Children and Adults of Alameda County.

Mrs. Jewett has had and certainly continues to have a full and rewarding life of community and civil activities. She is presently treasurer of the Oakland Economic Development Council; director of the Oakland Chamber of Commerce—the first woman elected to that position; a member of the board of trustees of the Peralta Hospital; community adviser of the Junior League of Oakland/Easy Bay; president and director of the Oakland City Center Hotel Co., Inc.; director of the Marcus Foster Education Institute; director of the Oakland Convention and Visitors Bureau; and trustee of the East Oakland Youth Development Center Foundation. Previously she has served as trustee of the University of California Alumnae Foundation, trustee of the John F. Kennedy University, and trustee of the Oakland Zoological Society.

This, however, does not include her strictly volunteer experiences. She has been a member of the Junior League of Oakland/Easy Bay since 1950 while she served as president and treasurer and also chairman of the Junior League Shop. She has also served as director of the Oakland Museum Association and chairman of their White Elephant Sale; on the board of directors of the Easter Seal Society from 1960 to 1962; and on the board of regents of Holy Names College.

Emelyn Jewett is the daughter of the late William F. Knowland, editor and publisher of the Oakland Tribune, and Helen Herrick Knowland. She attended the University of California, at Berkeley, majoring in economics and political science. As well as being a wife and mother for over 30 years, she became a member of the board of the Tribune Publishing Co. in 1950 before becoming president and chairman of the board from March 1974 to 1977 when the company was sold. Since 1977 she has been senior vice president of the Oakland Tribune, Inc., with primary responsibility in community relations emphasizing Oakland's economic development. During this time she has also been a director of the Clorex Co., the Kaiser Cement Co., and EUBCO, Inc.

I congratulate Emelyn Jewett as she receives this award.●

FINANCIAL REPORT OF THE CONGRESSIONAL TEXTILE CAUCUS QUARTERLY STATEMENT OF EXPENSES AND FUND BALANCE

HON. KEN HOLLAND

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Speaker, the chairman, vice chairman and secretary/treasurer of the Congressional Textile Caucus have approved the quarterly financial statement for the quarter ending December 31, 1981. I am herewith submitting the statement for insertion into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD so that all Members of Congress may review it.

The statement follows:

CONGRESSIONAL TEXTILE CAUCUS

Financial report of the congressional textile caucus quarterly report of expenses and fund balance

(For the period ending Dec. 31, 1981)

Expenditures:
Telephone	$287.29
Office supplies	54.93
Typewriter	368.00
Copy machine	87.00
Postage	43.60
Subscriptions	172.70
Office equipment	243.75
Miscellaneous	520.00
Total expenditures	1,777.27
Fund balance:
Fund balance on Sept. 30, 1981	12,962.39
Deposited this quarter	500.00
Interest on account	841.92
Total	14,115.68
Less expenditures	1,777.27
Balance—Dec. 31, 1981	12,527.04●

DR. JOHN B. COLEMAN—FRIEND TO EDUCATION

HON. MICKEY LELAND

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. LELAND. Mr. Speaker, education has done a lot for a lot of Americans. For my friend and constituent, Dr. John B. Coleman, the power of knowledge and education has propelled him through a medical degree and successful ventures in the business world. It helped him to overcome the prejudice that surrounded him as a black man in the white-dominated community where he was raised and the prejudice that permeated the walls of the medical schools to which he first applied.

Dr. Coleman never forgot the leg up that his education gave him. It would be an easy thing to do—a responsibility that so many others shirk. But Dr. Coleman is not like so many others. In addition to making his education work for himself he has put it to work for others. He is a regent on the board of Texas A&M University systems and a former regent of Texas Southern University. He is also chairman of the United Negro College Fund (UNCF) in Houston, a member of the President's Council of the UNCF and a member of the board of Governor's Office of Education Resources. These kinds of donations of time and effort prompted the Fisk University Alumni to host a banquet last May in honor of Dr. Coleman. Characteristically, the proceeds from the event went to UNCF.

Yet I know Dr. Coleman as more than an education activist. He is a friend and a trusted adviser. I think of his stability, perseverance and quiet dignity—qualities he subtly uses to exercise his influence toward the betterment of his community.

It is for all those reasons that I recommend to you the following article on Dr. Coleman from the Houston Chronicle's Texas Magazine:

DR. JOHN B. COLEMAN—HE PRESCRIBES EDUCATION AS A CURE FOR MANY OF SOCIETY'S ILLS

(By Stan Redding)

Looking north from his offices on Alemeda, the view is dominated by Houston's downtown skyline, constantly changing as new skyscrapers seek the clouds and obscure the city's older buildings.

There is a symbolism in the shifting skyline for John B. Coleman, doctor of medicine. Some of the hands which drew the plans for the lofty edifices were black, like his. Some of the engineers who are taking the great towers skyward are black, like him.

"You know, Prairie View A&M graduates more black engineers than any other school in this country," mused Dr. Coleman. "Yet, when I came out of high school, I didn't know there were different kinds of engineers. I thought an engineer ran the train."

Coleman, if he is a black militant, is a quiet one, given to positive action rather than impassioned rhetoric. Black, unless put into focus with a particular project, is no longer a color that dominates his life. When he thinks black, Coleman thinks of it in terms of education.

And when one of the thousands across the nation who know him think of Coleman, it is usually in terms of education. If John Coleman, physician, could write a prescription for many of the world's ills, a pharmacist would fill it with education.

For in many ways, Coleman is as much an educator as he is a doctor of medicine. He is a regent on the board of Texas A&M University Systems—which includes Prairie View, Tarleton State College, the Moody College of Marine Sciences and Texas A&M at Texarkana—and Huston-Tillotson College in Austin. He is a former regent of Texas Southern University here, chairman of the United Negro College Fund here, a member of the President's Council of the UNCF, a member of the board of the Governor's Office of Education Resources and is deeply involved in the affairs of the Houston Independent School District and a dozen other colleges and secondary schools.

"I don't think education is the answer to all problems, of course, but it certainly helps," said Coleman. "There are, for instance, fewer criminals among educated groups than there are among uneducated groups."

He suggests that petty crime is rooted mainly in the uneducated segments of society. "It has gotten to be a way of life with some people, who are underpaid and don't have adequate resources to take care of their families, to engage in petty criminal activities," said Coleman. "It may be just taking a ham from the kitchen where they work, or cheating on their income tax or whatever, but they feel they need extra money, and such crimes are going to increase unless stopgap measures are found."

Coleman is handsome and articulate, and today he's a man on top of the mountain. His spacious offices reflect his success as an obstetrician and gynecologist, and the graceful building containing the offices reflects his business acumen. He is the majority owner of the building. He is also the owner of Radio Station KCOH, Cullen Women's Center and various other non-medical enterprises. He is a member of 24 city, county, state and national boards, most of them dealing with education or medicine, and the professional and civic honors and awards bestowed on him by community, state and nation are too numerous to cite.

Coleman's Algerish success story epitomizes the theme song of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, We Shall Overcome. For if his branches now spread wide in the sun, his roots are in the dark soil of the ghetto. Beneath the polished mien, John Coleman is a scarred veteran of racial wars, a victim of prejudices that laws and changing mores have yet to erase entirely and probably won't.

He talks easily, and without rancor or bitterness, of his childhood in a society where blacks were segregated and of his struggles to succeed in a field which blacks were discouraged from entering. There is no malice in the man. In panning the streams of the past, Coleman always manages to find a nugget of good.

He took his bachelor of science from Fisk University in Nashville and his M.D. degree from the Howard University School of Medicine in Washington, D.C.

He chose medicine as a career while still a child, after meeting one of Houston's few black physicians. In the 1940's there were only 10 black doctors in the city, all serving the black community. "Doctors were our greatest role models in those days," Coleman recalled. "Of course, we didn't have too many professional opportunities other than being a teacher, preacher or a doctor. There were a few black lawyers, but I don't know how successful they were. However, I never considered anything but medicine. When I was a little kid, my mother would buy me toy medical kits, and they were my favorite toys."

He is the middle child of the eight children of W. S. and Clara Coleman. Coleman was a delivery-truck driver and part-time real estate salesman. Mrs. Coleman was a hairdresser. Although neither had graduated from high school, they were determined that all eight of their children would have college educations, and they did.

"My father died when I was 16," Coleman said. "But my mother carried on. She still lives in the same house on McGowan where I was born and reared."

As a boy, Coleman worked as a porter and Chronicle carrier. He remembers the fears a black child had growing up a white-dominated, prejudiced community. "As a black child growing up in Houston, you were afraid of anyone who had authority, even to the extent that when a policeman came into your neighborhood, you'd run. We would run even if we were just playing an innocent game of baseball, because in those days the police would whip you and harass you even when you weren't doing anything wrong. Of course, we were taught to respect the police, never to talk back to them and never to be uppity. That's the way we survived. I grew up under that kind of prejudice and fear, and I guess it held me in pretty good stead, for a number of people I knew then didn't live at all. They were killed. Others were put in jail for things they didn't do."

A sign of change: in 1978 Coleman won the Texas Peace Officers Association Award for his support of police community programs.

He graduated from Jack Yates High School as an honor student, but when he started looking for a medical college, he again encountered the barriers of prejudice. "I had the aspirations of going to Baylor or the University of Texas," Coleman said. "But those schools weren't admitting black medical students. I would have much preferred to have gone to UT or Baylor, because I would have spent much less time away from home and my family, it would have cost me less, and it would have been easier for me to acquaint myself with the environment in which I was going to practice.

"But I couldn't get a medical education in Texas, simply because there were no provisions for blacks. I had to travel all the way to Washington, D.C., to go to school. However, the State of Texas was kind enough to pay my tuition above the cost had I had stayed here."

During the summers and school breaks, he would return to Houston to work in Riverside General Hospital which, along with St. Elizabeth's Hospital, were the only black hospitals here.

He remembers the trips because the civil rights movement was not even a groundswell at the time, and his journey crossed the deep South. "I drove to and from Houston," said Coleman. "But I couldn't just drive until I got tired and check into a motel to sleep. I had to drive all night long, to Meridian, Miss., where they had a black motel, or to St. Louis, where there was a black hotel. As a result, I often slept on the side of the road."

Prejudice against blacks was as deeply ingrained in the medical profession as in other social strata, Coleman learned while a medical student. He was the first black to train in obstetrics and gynecology. Even fellow students from the South criticized his decision to return to Houston to practice. "They contended I wouldn't get adequate hospital privileges, and when you specialize as I did, you have to have a hospital," said Coleman.

"None of the men I knew were attracted to Texas because there were no hospital facilities for black doctors. So many of the guys who left here to become doctors chose to practice in New York, California or Detroit."

Coleman interned and took his residency training at the District of Columbia Hospital before returning here in 1962. He found himself barred from all Houston hospitals except Riverside General, St. Elizabeth's and Ben Taub—"Black doctors couldn't join the Harris County Medical Society, which was a prerequisite for gaining hospital privileges." He worked mainly in Riverside General, rising to become chief of staff of the hospital, and is still associated with it.

Today he is a member of not only the HCMS but the Houston Medical Forum and the Texas, National and American Medical Associations and practices in St. Joseph's Hospital. While he came back to Houston to minister largely to the black community, Coleman has a number of whites as well as other ethnic minority members among his patients.

Despite his affluence and influence, Coleman does not see himself as a self-made success. Many people, his parents foremost, helped shape his life, he said. He credits a core of determined, dedicated ministers, educators and other leaders of Houston's black community as his guides and mentors during his formative years. "Otherwise, I might just have easily ended up in prison," he said.

"The educators were great. They inspired young blacks to keep trying, to prepare ourselves so we would have a better way of life. We called our principals 'Professor,' and our teachers became our role models. Of course, we didn't always understand what they were doing for us. I had one physics teacher who constantly chastised me, even if I was just standing talking to another student, for wasting my time. I felt he was picking on me.

"Only after I went to Fisk, became the highest ranking student in my class and won a scholarship, did I realize he'd been preparing me for the days ahead. Because I went there frightened. I'd been told that blacks in Houston didn't have the college preparatory education afforded blacks in Chicago, Detroit, New York and other places, and Fisk had students from all over the world. I was afraid I wouldn't be admitted.

"Actually, as I learned, Houston blacks received better educations in high school than blacks in other large cities. But the rumor at the time held that Southern blacks were inferior to Northern blacks, even Western blacks, and if you were from the South, you were the low man on the totem pole, even among the black community.

"But I was successful at Fisk because my high school teachers cared and because they wanted to make sure I realized my potential."

He was one of the quiet black leaders, after he returned here, who did the most to change the status of Houston blacks, opening up hotels, restaurants and theaters to blacks and otherwise tearing down racial barriers. He turned his energies and efforts to educational projects about the same time.

"I was involved in a number of things shortly after I returned, activist and social organizations," said Coleman. "But I wasn't sure, after evaluating the time, energy and money spent, of the value of the things we were doing. I came to the conclusion we weren't doing what we were capable of doing. I decided to devote my time to something where I would know my efforts were worthwhile and my money was well spent, and I became involved in education."

He is satisfied with the progress blacks have made here in the past 15 years but feels there is much still to be accomplished. "The basic improvement I have seen is the number of blacks and other underprivileged people, for that matter, who are now availing themselves of an education," he said, "and I've seen an improvement in the number of people, black and white, who are willing to give these youngsters a chance. However, far too few fall in the latter category.

"But the number of black youngsters graduating from high school and who have the opportunity to prepare themselves to enter the mainstream of life has definitely increased.

"Similarly, I see black people making a meaningful impact in all phases of the political spectrum, and I feel because of this, people in all segments of the community—black, brown or white—are getting a bigger slice of the pie."

While civil rights laws and a shifting of public attitudes toward tolerance are major factors in achieving more equal status for blacks, interaction of the races has had a positive effect, said Coleman. "I think that people getting to know one another is what it's all about. That's the first step in solving their problems, better understanding both their differences and their similarities. Whites forget they're whites, and blacks forget they're blacks, and instead they concentrate on the goals they both want to achieve. You see it regularly in the job market now. Blacks and whites get to know each other on a one-to-one basis, and they become friends forever."

Thursday in the Shamrock Hilton Hotel a $100-a-plate dinner, staged by the Fisk University Alumni Club here, will honor Dr. Coleman, proceeds going to the United Negro College Fund.

In an age of equal opportunity, Negro colleges would seem to be an anomaly. There will come a time in the distant future, Coleman feels, when black colleges will cease to be as such and simply exist as universities.

"It has been said for years that we want integration (of schools), and this is true, but we also want options, and we don't want total obliteration," said Coleman. "I feel my children were better off going to a black college initially, because they received the psychological nurturing that they would not have gotten in a larger school where they were just a number, a textbook and an assignment.

"Right now, over 75 percent of our M.D.s, over 50 percent of our Ph.D.s and over 50 percent of our elected black officials came from these small colleges. They went to a major college afterward but went first to a black college. Many of us needed the transitional period, the psychological nuturing, that a black college afforded before we entered the mainstream.

"There will always be a need for colleges where people find themselves more comfortable with their surroundings than they would in others. No matter how we'd like it to be, that's the way it is, I hope the day will come when we have just one school, but it's not here yet."

He still has fears. "I fear that the strides we have made may be eroded with the economy as it stands today," he said. "I fear that those people (politicians) who were the losers, as it were, will turn to attempting to persecute, harass and intimidate the weakest among us, which are usually the minorities. You can see a trend toward conservatism, which isn't all bad, but along with that goes a right-wing element who are haters as opposed to the good, decent people we have become accustomed to in the past 10 years. I really fear the recurrence of haters in our community.

"I feel if the decent people who have helped to make the strides we have made remain silent, this trend will continue. I think it can be headed off, but only if the people who believe in what is right and decent will step forward and let the haters know that the decent segment of society doesn't like it and won't let it happen."

There are many thousands of John Coleman's friends who say they won't let that happen here. The people behind the dinner honoring him say that he has built too much that's good for it to be torn down.

Willie Alexander, a Houston insurance-man and former star football player with the professional Houston Oilers, summed up John Coleman:

"He's an inspiration to all mankind."●

TRIBUTE TO DUNCAN J. SINCLAIR, JR.

HON. W. G. (BILL) HEFNER

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call to the attention of my colleagues an article which appeared in the January 1, 1982, copy of the Laurinburg Exchange in Laurinburg, N.C.

Duncan Sinclair has not only been a good friend to me but also to the many people he has served so unselfishly in Scotland County. Through his charitable work in the county, he has given hope and meaning to the life of many people. His dedicated efforts through his service on the Scotland Memorial Hospital Board of Trustees has brought Scotland County the best in medical facilities and personnel.

He has devoted a great deal of his time to the youth in his area which is exemplified through his work with Boy Scouts.

Dunc is a man of great compassion and integrity. It is quite refreshing to me to know a man who is willing to sacrifice his time for others and expect absolutely nothing in return.

The article follows:

TO SINCLAIR, GIVING IS BETTER THAN RECEIVING

When the Scotland Memorial Hospital Board of Trustees honored their chairman, Duncan J. Sinclair, Jr., by naming the dining room of the new hospital the Sinclair Dining Room last March, Sinclair responded with complete surprise.

Sinclair's reaction indicated the lack of importance that he attaches to personal recognition for himself. For Sinclair, giving has always been more important than getting.

"I'm probably not deserving, but I appreciate the honor," Sinclair said as plans were announced that a permanent plaque bearing his name would be erected in the dining room of the new hospital now under construction.

"Others have done more than I have," he added.

Sinclair's years of service in various areas of community life have been influenced by the "others" he spoke of that evening.

"This county has always been very giving and considerate of the needs of the community. It's people like Edwin Morgan and his son Jimmy, O. L. Moore and Halbert Jones that have influenced me," Sinclair reflected during a recent interview at Sinclair Lumber Co.

"I grew up here and followed in the footsteps of these men," Sinclair said, typically giving credit for his generosity and loyalty to the example of other community leaders.

"This community has been generous to me in a lot of ways, and through the eyes of those older than myself and those I have had a lot of respect for, I saw the benefits of their wisdom and tried to help in a lesser way than they did. I got the feeling that there were needs to be met and that I should help."

COMMUNITY SERVICE

Sinclair has served for 21 years on the hospital's board of trustees. He has served as chairman of the board for the past three years, during a most demanding period of planning for the new facility.

He has provided "outstanding leadership marked by an extraordinary commitment of time and energy, and an unusual degree of wisdom and foresight", according to a resolution established by the hospital board.

Robert R. Martin, in his 15th year as hospital administrator, said Sinclair has shown "a strong and unique leadership style with demands for high performance and positive results. He is a tough taskmaster, yet is fair and supportive in his actions."

Martin added, "His dedication and commitment to the community and hospital are clearly demonstrated by the many long hours he has devoted to assessing needs, evaluating efficiency and effectiveness of hospital operations and planning for new and improved hospital facilities and services."

Scotland Memorial Hospital is one of many phases of community life to which Duncan Sinclair has contributed through his leadership, time and financial support.

Boy Scouting is another major interest of Sinclair, a resident of Azure Court. He became involved in the Boy Scout program about 12 years ago by assisting the scoutmaster with his son's troop.

He is serving his second year as vice president of administration for the Cape Fear Council of Boy Scouts of America, and has served on the board for eight years. In 1979, Sinclair was given the Silver Beaver award for outstanding volunteer service. The Silver Beaver award is the highest honor given to a volunteer by the council.

Sinclair sees the Boy Scout program as "a movement worthwhile for the youth . . . an improvement for the nation of tomorrow. It's one of the better things a person can be involved in."

Sinclair's major interest being politics, he served as a Laurinburg city councilman for almost 20 years and played a significant role in the establishment of a strong city manager-council type government.

In 1974, he was appointed to the local Department of Social Services board of directors and served diligently until 1980. Upon his retirement, he was honored by the DSS board for his leadership contributions.

He has also been involved in the Chamber of Commerce activities through the years, has served on the Laurinburg-Maxton Airport Commission, and is a deacon in the First Baptist Church.

His friends and associates describe Sinclair as one who wants to receive very little credit for his deeds of goodwill in the community. In fact, it has been downright embarrassing to him to receive such recognition for his contributions, some say.

Jim Milligan, publisher of The Laurinburg Exchange, has served with Sinclair in phases of Chamber work, on the airport commission and on the hospital board.

"He is one of the most unassuming individuals who works for his community that you will ever find. What it does for him always comes last," Milligan said, "He is more concerned for the good of the community than for what it will do for him."

CIVIC MINDED FAMILY

Sinclair's spirit of giving was instilled in him during childhood. He was one of two children born to Mr. and Mrs. Duncan J. Sinclair in the year 1926. His father, in partnership with R. L. McLeod of Maxton in the lumber business, was active in community life and served as mayor of Laurinburg for 12 years, until his death in 1947.

Sinclair described his father as "generous, community minded and a good church member." He credited his mother with "a good business head."

One of his first tasks after his father's death and as a young businessman was raising the money to fulfill a financial commitment his father had made to the hospital just prior to his death.

AN AVERAGE STUDENT

Sinclair's childhood home was on Caledonia Road in the edge of the lumber yard where he build tree houses and "slept out a lot at night". He played neighborhood sports in the middle of the road, with no worry about traffic because of so few automobiles, he remembered.

"We built tunnels and underground hideaways like they don't have today. And our biggest excitement was going to a western movie for 10 cents and drinking a milkshake afterward."

At Laurinburg schools, he was "an average student," the quiet type.

"I had a little devil in me. I guess. I was no saint. I didn't carve desks, but we threw a few spitballs and put sandspurs in the teachers' desks," he recalled. "At Halloween, we took chairs off people's front porches and put them on top of their house."

Sinclair played tackle on his high school football team. During his junior year, the team won the state championship over Mt. Airy. His favorite subject was math, and "one of my better teachers was Mrs. Aileen McGill," who taught him algebra in summer school.

In 1944, Sinclair entered Fishburne Military Academy in Waynesboro, Va., and later attended Virginia Military Academy in Lexington, Va. He went into the Army in 1945, serving a year in Italy.

He returned to VMI after his tour of duty, but came home to be with his mother following his father's death. He attended Presbyterian Junior College for a year, then entered Wake Forest University where he earned a degree in business and minored in history.

He became president of Sinclair Lumber Company, which his mother organized in 1948.

In June, 1954, he met Marie Blake, a Lumberton miss who was teaching fourth grade at Covington Street School. They were married a year later.

They are parents of four sons—Jim Sinclair, III, who lives in Raleigh but will join the Sinclair company later this month; William, who works with his father at Sinclair Lumber; David, who is attending Pembroke State University; and John, a student a Woodberry Forest Private School near Orange, Va.

Sinclair's sense of community responsibility has been triggered by his good fortune, a company which has expanded from one to seven locations—Sinclair Lumber, Covington Supply and Economy Building Supply, all in Laurinburg; Economy Building Supply in Fayetteville; Sinclair Lumber Company in Dillon; Carolina Standard in Rockingham; and Scarborough Building Supply in Lumberton. He also owns farm land in Scotland and Robeson counties.

When asked about his secret of success, Sinclair responded, "I have no magic formula I've just been lucky being in the right place at the right time.

"I've been fortunate in having good help and good support from my business people."

BASICALLY A FAMILY MAN

"My wife has been considerate and very patient, but she would probably say I should have been home more," he said. "You can always look around and see things you would have done differently. I have spent a lot of time on community activities that I thought would benefit the family in the long run.

"Basically, I'm the family type." At home, he reads, watches the news on television, sports events, and enjoys exercise.

"There's nothing I like better than sitting down to a coffee table. I enjoy people. I like to be with interesting people and involved in discussion of issues.

"I have gotten a lot of credit for more than I've done. I've just listened to people who spoke of things that needed to be done.

"In the first place, I'm no saint. But my philosophy is that you share with those of lesser means through charitable organizations. There are a lot of good things, but you can't contribute to all of them."●

PHILADELPHIA CITY COUNCIL URGES PRESIDENT TO MAINTAIN CURRENT HOUSING PROGRAM FUNDING

HON. WILLIAM H. GRAY III

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to include in today's RECORD, a copy of Resolution No. 666, adopted by the Philadelphia City Council on January 7, requesting that the President and the U.S. Congress maintain our Federal-assisted housing programs in urban areas at current levels. I think the council's resolution is particularly fitting given the drastic budget reductions proposed for our housing programs by the President yesterday, in his fiscal year 1983 budget.

Mr. Speaker, the housing situation in Philadelphia, and in particular the Second Congressional District which I represent, has reached crisis proportions. Literally thousands of poor and low-income Philadelphia residents are on the waiting lists for public housing. And countless numbers of families are forced to reside in substandard homes, for lack of suitable alternatives. And given this administration's proposed reduction in every facet of our assisted and low-income housing programs, it is imperative that we as Members of Congress meet this problem head on, insuring that adequate housing funds and opportunities exist for our less fortunate citizens. I commend the efforts of the Philadelphia City Council on this issue and urge each of you to consider the resolution carefully.

RESOLUTION No. 666

Whereas, The policy of a decent home in a suitable environment is still federal law; and,

Whereas, Thousands of poor and elderly Philadelphians continue to live in substandard, crowded housing and/or pay an unreasonably high proportion of their incomes for housing; and,

Whereas, Philadelphia and most other areas of our country do not have the resources to deal effectively with problems of poor housing and deteriorating neighborhoods; and,

Whereas, The Office of Management and Budget proposes to end all assisted housing programs (Section 8, public housing and 202 elderly housing) for fiscal 1983 and massively reduce programs such as F.H.A., G.N.M.A. and counseling; and,

Whereas, Such a policy, if adopted, would cause massive suffering to all the people of Philadelphia, but especially the elderly, minorities and low-income people; Now therefore:

Resolved, by the City Council of the City of Philadelphia, That the City Council of the City of Philadelphia strongly urges President Ronald Reagan and the United States Congress not to reduce these desperately needed programs in urban areas.

Further Resolved, by the City Council of the City of Philadelphia, That a copy of this Resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, the Philadelphia delegation to the United States House of Representatives, and the United States Senators representing Pennsylvania.●

OKLAHOMA'S EMPLOYMENT SERVICE

HON. MIKE SYNAR

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives has had to vote today on legislation to provide urgent supplemental appropriations for the federally funded State employment services. I think we all can see the fallacy in cutting the lone Federal program that finds jobs when our economy is sinking deeper into a recession and unemployment is rising. But I want to emphasize Oklahoma's particular experience in relation to this cut to drive home the importance of our action.

Oklahoma presently enjoys one of the lowest unemployment rates in the country. Its economy is relatively healthy. However, beneath the surface is an active State employment service that helped place 172,000 Oklahomans, 12.2 percent of the working population, in new jobs last year. It has placed over 10 percent each of the past 20 years.

When the effect of the continuing appropriation cut reached Oklahoma, the Oklahoma Employment Security Commission found it necessary to plan to close 14 of the State's 44 field offices and to terminate 322 of the agency's 600 field employees. A rural State like mine depends on extensive field networks to bring services to the people, and the closing of field offices, in some instances, stranded significant numbers of citizens 50 or more miles from the nearest office.

Moreover, small businesses in some smaller Oklahoma communities rely heavily on the employment service to assist them, and losing a field office could severely undercut the small businesses as well as the overall community. Oklahoma's low unemployment rate obscures the fact that some pockets of relatively high unemployment exist—many in my district—and these areas need these services.

As a result, it has been necessary for us to enact an urgent supplemental appropriation to forestall these consequences in Oklahoma and similar and worse consequences in other States.

A lesson is learned, Mr. Speaker. The reckless and irresponsible budget cutting that I expressed concern over last year has come home to haunt us. I reiterate the comments I made then: We have to carefully weigh the pros and cons of each budget cut and analyze its impact before we enact it, or else we are falling short of our responsibilities to the American people.●

HOME EQUITY CONVERSION FOR THE ELDERLY

HON. OLYMPIA J. SNOWE

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 9, 1982

● Mrs. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, there are probably few statements that I could make with which every Member of this Congress would agree. I am certain, however, that I can confidently say that each and every one of us shares a deep concern with the problems faced by our Nation's elderly. In my own State of Maine, 28 percent of the elderly fall below the poverty level. Many more with fixed incomes are experiencing increasing difficulty in meeting their subsistence needs including health care, home maintenance and taxes in today's world of inflation and increased longevity.

Seventy percent of Maine's elderly own their homes. Ironically while inflation makes older people less able to meet their expenses and retain upkeep of their homes, it is at the same time making them richer by boosting the value of the very home they are having trouble supporting. In short, the old are becoming "asset rich" and "income poor."

In the State of Maine, plans are underway for an innovative program to offer alternatives to these elderly, including the option to "cash-in" the values of their homes while retaining residency and receiving income to meet expenses. Another alternative would allow large, old energy inefficient single-family homes to be renovated or converted into group or shared homes in which several elderly would come together and share skills and resources. This home equity conversion program, cosponsored by the Bureau of Maine's Elderly, the Maine State Housing Authority, the Maine Savings Bank and the University of Maine School of Law, plans to offer home equity options to Maine's elderly through public education, counseling, training, and estate planning services. Importantly, this project recognizes the diversity of the elderly and will make available a range of conversion options for low income to upper income, urban and rural elderly through a partnership between the public and private sectors.

I am very excited about this project. Further, I believe that what is being attempted in Maine will be of interest to people across the country. For this reason, I have included portions of the pregrant application drafted by Maine's Bureau of the Elderly into the Extensions of Remarks. The problems faced by our Nation's elderly are complex and varied; innovative approaches on the State and local level, such as Maine's home equity conversion project, deserve our support.

A MODEL FOR INNOVATIVE HOME EQUITY CONVERSION THROUGH LINKAGES BETWEEN THE PRIVATE AND PUBLIC SECTORS

The Bureau of Maine's Elderly, the Maine State Housing Authority, the Maine Savings Bank and the University of Maine School of Law are cosponsoring an application for discretionary funds to address the needs of elderly homeowners through an innovative home equity conversion program.

Home equity conversion can reduce the need for social services and help maintain dignity and independence. However, home equity conversion is a complex concept and tends to benefit only a limited group of elderly. This project aims to develop creative home equity conversion plans which will, for the first time, assist not only middle income people and prevent their pauperization and loss of independence but also help elderly in greatest social or economic need who are the priority of the Older American Act. As the administration and Congress consider different approaches to Federal subsidization of housing, States need to develop methods to create housing alternatives which are cost effective and do not rely solely on Federal programs. We propose a feasibility study to determine ways to maximize privately financed home equity conversion programs and to develop two demonstration projects which reduce reliance on Federal dollars by packaging group and shared homes which require, at best, a minimal investment of tax dollars.

Priority Area 6.2 of the DHHS Discretionary Funds Grant Program stresses the need for improved liaisons between the public and private sectors in the delivery of human services and in the transition from reliance on Federal funding to alternative sources. Home equity conversion increases elderly homeowners' incomes through liquidation of the home asset rather and through reliance on public subsidies. This project will also provide financial and estate planning services through the private sector. Training about home equity conversion will be offered to service providers, volunteer counselors, estate planners and potential suppliers and will emphasize the voluntary contribution of counseling time to the elderly.

C. APPROACH

Home equity conversion is not a new concept. The Home Equity Conversion Project sponsored by the Wisconsin Bureau of Aging serves as a clearinghouse for new ideas and developments in the field. The project's goal is to promote a variety of home equity conversion plans through research and policy recommendations. Through its efforts a property tax deferral bill has been passed, but to date there is no specific product. However, several plans are currently being developed nationwide. Private non-profit agencies in Wisconsin are making deferred payment loans. A private realty company in California is developing sale leaseback plans. The Buffalo HELP program encourages non-profit agencies to purchase remainder interests in old persons' homes in exchange for the payment of property taxes, major repairs and a lifetime annuity. A neighborhood association in Milwaukee is attempting to conserve local housing stock through a reverse mortgage/purchase option instrument. The San Francisco Development Fund provides referrals for existing home equity conversion plans—particularly reverse annuity mortgages—and also conducts outreach. While plans spring up across the country one point has become clear—home equity conversion plans are as various as individual needs require and should be individually structured.

In Maine, Deering Savings and Loan of Portland offered the first reverse mortgage in the United States but has now suspended this lending activity due to high interest rates and the large amount of counseling time involved. The 1980 Blaine House Conference on Aging directed the Bureau of Maine's Elderly and the Maine State Housing Authority to conduct a study concerning the options regarding home equity conversion. The 1981 Blaine House Conference on Aging resolved that the Maine legislature create a property tax postponement program by 1983.

In October, 1981, the Bureau of Maine's Elderly and the Maine State Housing Authority sent an informational paper and questionnaire about home equity conversion to potential suppliers of such plans. Respondents included insurance associations, area agencies on aging, housing development corporations, community action programs, realtors, housing authorities, bankers, credit unions, investment advisory services and mortgage companies. The overall response rate to the written questionnaire was 32 percent. 91 percent of the respondents felt there may be a need for home equity conversion devices in Maine. 55 percent would definitely consider participating in home equity conversion plans. While 24 percent were uncertain about and 21 percent would not consider participating in such plans, 62 percent of the respondents thought a survey of elderly homeowner interest might increase the likelihood of their participation. 64 percent said the State should develop information and technical assistance to distribute to suppliers to inform them about home equity conversion. 85 percent of the respondents were interested in learning more about at least one of the home equity conversion plans described in the paper.

Based on this survey, there is a strong community based interest in and support for the development of home equity conversion plans. Members of most groups surveyed offered assistance in the development of a statewide home equity conversion program. In order to mobilize this support, a home equity conversion task force composed of representatives from the groups surveyed will be organized to develop a variety of home equity conversion plans which link the public and private sectors and to guide this project. The Director of the Bureau of Maine's Elderly will chair this task force. Such plans will originate primarily in the private sector and will be geared toward moderate and low income elderly homeowners.

In conjunction with task force efforts, the Maine State Housing Authority will conduct a feasibility study funded by grant money. The study will focus on alternative financing, development, and sponsorship methods (tax exempt, Section 202, Community Development Block Grant, FmHA 515: sale/leaseback conversion to rental or group housing, etc.) and will analyze which options produce the greatest rates of return for the elderly homeowner. The study will research what development and financing alternatives are necessary to produce shared or group housing affordable by very low income elderly and competitive in the local private marketplace. Legal, market, architectural design, operating and cost issues will be addressed coterminously with the planning of group and shared home demonstration projects. The feasibility study will also include a statewide survey to determine the value of elderly homeowners' property and their interest in home equity conversion. This market survey will include questions about interest in shared and group home programs in addition to home equity conversion. Thus data vital to three different programs will be derived from the survey, which will be conducted by a qualified survey research organization.

Two demonstration plans for low income elderly homeowners who live in large, deteriorating, inefficient, single-family homes will be developed through this project. The first plan will incorporate a shared housing program into a home equity conversion loan plan. Through shared housing, elderly persons combine their efforts and resources to operate a single family household. Shared housing is geared toward higher functioning elderly people who are both able and willing to engage in communal living arrangements. The second plan will combine a group home program with a home equity conversion sale form. Group homes are community residences for a small number of elderly clients who require a supportive living environment. While group homes for well elderly may be rooted in the philosophy of family-like living, small congregate living arrangements for the frail elderly could also be considered group homes. These demonstration plans, started up by project funds will become self-supporting through repayment of loans and acquisition of housing stock.

The first plan will be implemented by Central Senior Citizens Association, an area agency on aging which covers the rural six county area from the coast to the western mountains of Knox, Lincoln, Waldo, Sagadahoc, Kennebec and Somerset. The agency will offer loans secured by home equity to owners of shared homes for rehabilitation, payment of taxes, major repairs or simply cash flow. Since household expenses will be shared, interest and principal payments should be easily met. These payments will create a fund through which loan money will continuously revolve to assist additional homeowners. While interest rates for this plan will depend on need and income levels, banks could also offer loans modeled after this demonstration plan at competitive interest rates. Central Senior Citizens Association will match shared housing mates for compatibility, oversee the initial living arrangements and provide continuing social services as needed.

The second plan will be conducted through Southern Maine Senior Citizens, Inc., the area agency on aging which serves Cumberland and York Counties. Under this plan, a homeowner will sell his home to the area agency and retain a life interest in an individual living unit. The agency may use moderate rehabilitation money to convert the home into a group home. The area agency will develop a services program for the group home, which will be akin to a small congregate living facility. The elderly "seller" will be able to live in his unit at no cost and with all taxes, major repairs, and insurance paid for by the area agency. The seller will receive an initial lump sum based on the value of the house and his life expectancy and could also receive a lifetime stipend. Through this sale procedure, housing stock will be purchased at very little initial cost. Cooperative forms of homeownership for group home residents could be used to render the program self-supporting from the start.

Grant money will also be used to fund a system designed to help elderly homeowners choose ways to use home equity to its maximum benefit. The first component of such a system will be educating elderly homeowners about home equity conversion through financial planning seminars sponsored by the Maine Savings Bank and conducted by professional estate planners. Informing older people about resources and how to apply for home equity conversion plans will also be achieved through a "Consumer's Self-Help Guide to Home Equity Conversion", jointly written by the Bureau of Maine's Elderly and the Maine Savings Bank. The system's second component will be an education and training program for service providers and potential suppliers of home equity conversion plans, which will be structured by the Maine Savings Bank and sponsored by the Home Equity Conversion Task Force. These workshops will train people such as loan officers to help elderly people interested in home equity conversion to identify issues prior to referring them to various home equity conversion programs or to estate planners for further advice. Members of volunteer organizations such as the Senior Citizens Organization of Retired Executives (SCORE) will be invited to learn about home equity conversion for counseling and referral purposes.

The final component of this system will be an estate planning program sponsored by the University of Maine School of Law. A part-time estate planner will work with two part-time research assistants to develop an estate planning referral system to the private bar and a clinical law program through which referrals could be handled by law students with attorney supervision. The Law School will recruit two law students to serve as research assistants to the estate planner, who will probably be a law professor. The estate planning staff, while advising elderly homeowners who are considering selling their homes, will develop a purchase and sale contract form for sales of homes to family members in return for lifetime care and maintenance. They will research how older people can best enjoy an improved standard of living now while still providing for relatives after death. Standard legal forms and technical assistance will be made available to lawyers participating in the referral system so that legal time is reduced and estate planning can be made more accessible to elderly people. Through the investment made by this project in a clinical law course, we hope to demonstrate the value of this program for full time inclusion in the Law School curriculum.

A state coordinator located at the Bureau of Maine's Elderly will be hired to facilitate implementation of the home equity conversion project described in this proposal. Particular emphasis will be placed on coordinating efforts between the private and public sectors in the development and dissemination of home equity conversion plans and providing necessary staffing to the home equity conversion task force.●